Washington, March 14.—Chas. M. Pepper of the Bureau of Trade relations of the State Department and Henry C. Emery of the tariff board of the Treasury Department returned from Ottawa Saturday and reported further regarding the failure of the negotiations so far as getting any concessions from the Canadian Government is concerned. Beyond the issuance of a statement by the State Department, that regret was felt that the mission had not been a success, no information was obtained.

Unless there are further parlays between the two Governments the question of the imposing of the maximum rates or the withholding of them will rest entirely with President Taft.

The situation regarding a tariff war with France is equally discouraging. As matters stand to-day, unless there is a change, the maximum rates will be applied to French importations into the United States after March 31.

LATE TICKS FROM WIRES

Wm. R. Corbett, formerly of Port Hope, Ont., was killed while switching cars at Rochester, N.Y.

It is confidently predicted in East Buffalo that hogs will touch the $13 mark before this week is out.

Judge Hugh O'Leary of Thunder Bay and Justice J. T. Garrow of Toronto have been appointed judges of the Admiralty Court.

Ottawa politicians believe Canada's safety in the tariff dispute with the United States is that a tariff war would be the ruination of President Taft.

Forty stilletos and half as many revolvers have been taken from the Italian colony of Montreal, since Saturday, and ten of the sons of Italy are under arrest.

Seventy identified and eight unidentified bodies have been taken from the Washington State avalanche, and the bodies of eleven passengers and six trainmen are still in the ruins.

SUICIDED ON OCEAN LINER

New York, March 14.—As the White Star liner Adriatic was pulling away from her pier on her trip to Europe Saturday an officer on the bridge suddenly shouted through his megaphone that a man had committed suicide by shooting himself in the head in one of the second cabin rooms, and that the body would be sent back to shore on a tug.

An Acter's Suicide.

Chicago, March 14.—Thos. Thorne, who played the part of the poet in "The Fourth Estate," at the Studebaker Theatre, hanged himself with the waist cord of his bath robe in his room at the Alexandria Hotel. While his fellow players could suggest no motive for the acicide, it was reported an unhappy love affair was the cause.

FOUR SAVED FROM WRECK

Seward, Alaska, March 14.—Worn and exhausted by almost incredible hardships and bearing the marks of weeks of battling with icy gales, four of six men who, on Jan. 7 left the wreck of the Farallon in Cook Inlet, and in a small rowboat undertook the desperate task of rowing to procure relief for their companions, were brought into Seward just before midnight Saturday night on the revenue cutter Tachoma, which for almost three weeks has been searching for them. The Tachoma also brings word that the other two men are alive and safe.

THE CANTON REVOLUTION WAS A FAILURE

Hong Kong, March 14.—The viceroy of Canton yesterday issued a lengthy proclamation stating that the recent mutiny was fomented by the reform organizations, which sent emissaries to Canton. During the last few months several lots of banners, arms, and dynamite were discovered, but their owners escaped. The viceroy urges the people to have no sympathy with the disbanded soldiers.

The city now is quiet. Business people are looking forward to the visit of the Cleveland, with her party of American tourists. The Self-Government Society and various guilds resent the action of the viceroy in opposing the visit of the tourists. The people say they will lose at least $30,000 if the tourists do not come.

It is understood that the tourists are visiting Canton in spite of objections. It is understood that their visit will be spread over four days from next Tuesday, in order to prevent blocking of traffic.

FIREMEN KILLED OR INJURED

Boston, March 14.—One fireman was killed and one hurt by a falling wall, and $200,000 damage was done in a blaze which destroyed the workshop of the Boston Elevated Railway.

At Jamestown, N.Y., one fireman was burned to death and several others injured at a blaze which destroyed the Gorky shoe factory; loss $100,000.

Victoria Conservatives Meet.

Lindsay, March 14.—Large and enthusiastic was the annual gathering of the Conservative Association of the constituency of Victoria and Haliburton, held on Saturday. The speakers were: G. H. Cowan, K.C., M.P., Vancouver; Wm. Staples, M.P., of Manitoba; Col. Sam Hughes, M.P., and Sam Fox, M.P.P. Dr. Mason, M.P.P., was also present.

Goderich Church Burned.

Goderich, March 14.—About 1.30 p.m. Saturday fire broke out in St. Peter's Roman Catholic Church, originating from the sanctuary lamp. The church was almost completely gutted. The loss is partially covered by insurance.

A MINING TRANSACTION

It would give great pleasure to the Opposition in the Ontario Legislature if they could only find a scandal in connection with the conduct of public business by the Government, and as they cannot make such a pleasurable discovery they have endeavored to make a false impression in regard to a transaction in connection with a mining property. Everyone knows the uncertainty of dealing in mineral lands. A property may not promise much, then a lucky strike uncovers a good show of mineral, and at once the property becomes very valuable. On the other hand many prospects that looked very promising at first or for a time have been found to be misleading, and those who invested on the strength of them have been keenly disappointed. In the sale of the Gilmour Limit, a parcel that was sold by the Government turned out to be very profitable for the purchasers. There was nothing unnatural in this, nothing surprising. If the purchasers of the various parcels sold had not expected that some of them would be profitable there would have been no bids and no sales. Some of them have not turned out profitable, and that is not surprising. With the one in connection with which the purchasers made a large profit there is not a shadow of evidence that there was any collusion between the Government or any public official and the purchasers. The lands, including this parcel, were advertised publicly for sale. Everyone had the same opportunity to make an offer, and it was sold to the highest tenderers. There was no private sale, as had been the case under the former Government, and those who offered to pay the most for it got it. This is not the first instance in which purchasers of mining lands have made a rich find. But there is one marked difference between the good fortune of the men who own this mine and many others who have made fortunate strikes. If the property is as rich as they believe it to be the province will profit further. In selling the lands the Government does not give up all claim to the riches they may contain. The purchasers receive the right to mine, but they must pay to the Government, for the public treasury, ten per cent. on their gross output, which means a very much higher percentage on the net profits. If others of the parcels sold turned out to be rich in minerals it would be a good thing for the province, for the treasury would be still further enriched.

The Globe, among other Liberal papers—or, first among the Liberal papers—tried to make out some sort of case against the Government in this matter. It referred to "suspicion that there would be some tenders guided by information obtained by questionable means" and to "schemes and devices suspected by many of the friends as well as opponents of the Government." This reference to friends of the Government was an impertinence, but the Globe was soon to regret its impetuosity. There could be no questionable method in the transaction on the part of the Government without the purchasers sharing in it, and they did not propose to allow such an imputation from the Liberal organ to pass. The next day the Globe "took it back" by saying:

"Mr. J. J. Young, one of the fortunate purchasers of lot A23, made it clear before the Public Accounts Committee that it was simply an ordinary speculation on his part. There was no grounds for suspecting that either Mr. Young or his partner, Mr. M. J. O'Brien, had any improper relations with the Government in this matter. If the Department possessed the information it should have possessed these investors had no means of profiting by it. The price tendered was what a mining speculator might be expected to offer when there was a fair chance of getting nothing, and a long chance of finding a paying vein. They secured the paying vein, and, quite properly, resent any reflection or suspicion being cast on them for their part in the transaction.

"It would be quite unfair to allow any suspicion to rest on Messrs. Young and O'Brien in this regard or to reflect on their course in any respect."

It was an ordinary speculation on the part of the purchasers. It was a sale in an open and public way on the part of the Government, in which the highest tender was accepted. The purchasers were Liberals, but that, so far as the Government was concerned, had nothing to do with the matter, for they made the highest offer and were entitled to the property. That it has turned out valuable is fortunate for them, and that there is a Government in office that retains for the province a large share of the profits is fortunate for the people. Perhaps it is in this instance fortunate for Messrs. Young and O'Brien that they are Liberals, because otherwise the Globe might not have been so ready to have withdrawn its insinuations.

EDITORIAL NOTES

One of the latest large mergers in the United States is of automobile manufacturers. Some of us will have to wait a while longer before the price of cars comes down to the level of our purses.

An amendment to the Assessment Act introduced by the Provincial Secretary provides for an increase in the exemption of wages to $1,200 for married and $900 for single men. The wage earner receives consideration from the Government.

The Toronto Board of Trade wishes the city's water-front placed in the hands of a commission to control it for the city. Montreal has sixteen miles of water front on each side of the St. Lawrence, under control of a public commission. These large cities regard the public ownership of their water-fronts as among their best assets.

Mr. Wallace Nesbitt was chosen by the Liberal members of the committee appointed to investigate Mr. Lumsden's charges, although Mr. Nesbitt had previously given an opinion in the matter unfavorable to Mr. Lumsden's contention. It is to Mr. Nesbitt's credit that he did not accept the appointment. Another lawyer has been chosen and the farce will no doubt proceed.

According to the brief filed by the United States Government in the case against the Standard Oil Trust, it is stated the Trust and the Standard Oil Company on an investment of $69,000,000 had earned $838,783,000 in twenty-five years, an average during all those years of nearly fifty per cent. per annum. If a money lender had collected interest at that rate he would have been in court long ago.

If any re-arrangement of the polling sub-divisions is to be made in Peterborough consideration might reasonably be given to a section of the East Ward. When the ward boundaries were changed a few years ago, Auburn was united with the part of the city that was formerly Ashburnham, and the electors in that section have had to come all the way from the vicinity of the Auburn mills to Hunter street, near the bridge, to vote, a distance that causes inconvenience.

The Man From Brodney's

By GEORGE BARR M'CUTCHEON

Copyright, 1908, by Dodd, Mead & Co.

Rasula, undaunted, but crazed with disappointment, stuck to his colors on the deserted dock. He cursed and raved and begged. In time two or three of the more canny, realizing that safety lay in an early peace offering, ventured out beside him. Others followed their example, and still others slunk trembling to the fore, their voices ready to protest innocence and friendship and loyalty.

They had heard of the merciless American gunner, and they knew in their souls that he could shoot the island into atoms before nightfall.

The native lawyer harangued them and cursed them and at last brought them to understand in a feeble way that no harm could come to them if they faced the situation boldly. The Americans would not land on British soil; it would precipitate war with England. They would not dare to attempt a bombardment; Chase was a liar, a mountebank, a dog! After shouting himself hoarse in his frenzy of despair he finally succeeded in forcing the men to get up steam in the company's tug.

All this time the gunners of the American warship were dividing their attention between land and sea. Another vessel was coming up out of the misty horizon. The men on board knew it to be a British man-of-war!

Suddenly a party of white men approached the startled Rasula. A hundred eager hands were extended, a hundred voices cried out for mercy, a hundred Mohammedans beat their heads in abject submission.

Hollingsworth Chase, Lord Deppingham and a familiar figure in an ill fitting red jacket and forage cap strode firmly, defiantly between the rows of humble Japatites. Close behind them came a tall, resolute grenadier of the Rapp-Thorberg army.

"Make way there! Make way!" Mr. Bowles was crying, brandishing the antique broadsword that had come down to Wyckholme from the dark ages. "Stand aside for the British government! Make way for the American!"

Rasula's jaw hung limp in the face of this amazing exhibition of courage on the part of the enemy. He was glaring insanely at the calm, triumphant face of the man from Brodney's, who was now advancing upon him with the assurance of a conqueror.

"You see, Rasula, I have called for the cruiser, and it has come at my bidding." Turning to the crowd that surged up from behind, cowed and cringing, Chase said: "It rests with you. If I give the word that ship will blow you from the face of the earth. I am your friend, people. I would do you no harm, but good. You have been misled by Rasula. Rasula, you are not a fool. You can save yourself even now. I am here as the servant of these people, not as their master. I intend to remain here until I am called back by the man who sent me to you. You have"—

Rasula uttered a shriek of rage. He had been crouching back among his cohorts, panting with fury. Now he sprang forward, murder in his eyes. His arm was raised, and a great pistol was leveled at the breast of the man who faced him so coolly, so confidently. Deppingham shouted and took a step forward to divert the aim of the frenzied lawyer.

A revolver cracked behind the tall American, and Rasula stopped in his tracks. There was a great hole in his forehead. His eyes were bursting. He sank to the ground dead!

The soldier from Rapp-Thorberg, a smoking pistol in his hand, the other raised to his helmet, stepped to the side of Hollingsworth Chase.

"By order of her serene highness, sir," he said quietly.

"Good God!" gasped Chase, passing his hand across his brow. Deppingham, repressing a shudder, addressed the stunned natives:

"Take the body away. May that be the end of all assassins!"

* * * * * * *

The King's Own came alongside the American vessel in less than an hour. Accompanied by the British agent, Mr. Bowles, Chase and Deppingham left the dock in the company's tug and steamed out toward the two monsters. The American had made no move to send men ashore.

Standing on the forward deck of the swift little tug, Chase unconcernedly accounted for the timely arrival of the two cruisers.

"Three weeks ago I sent out letters by the mail steamer, to be delivered to the English or American commanders, wherever they might be found. Undoubtedly they were met with in the same port. That is why I was so positive that help would come sooner or later. I knew that we'd need help, and I knew that if I brought the cruisers my power over these people would never be disturbed again."

"My word!" exclaimed the admiring Bowles.

"Chase, you may be theatric, but you are the most dependable chap the world has ever known," said Deppingham, and he meant it.

The warships remained off the harbor all that day. The British captain consented to leave a small detachment of marines in the town to protect Chase and the bank. To a man the islanders pledged fealty to the cause of peace and justice. They shouted the names of Chase and Allah in the same breath and demanded of the latter that he preserve the former's beard for all eternity.

The King's Own was to convey the liberated heirs to Aden, whither the cruiser was bound. At that port a P. and O. steamer would pick them up. One white man elected to stay on the island with Hollingsworth Chase, who steadfastly refused to desert his post until Sir John Brodney indicated that his mission was completed. That one man was the wearer of the red jacket, the bearer of the king's commission in Japat, the undaunted Mr. Bowles.

The Princess Genevra, the wistful light deepening hourly in her blue gray eyes, avoided being alone with the man whom she was leaving behind. She had made up her mind to accept the fate inevitable. He had reconciled himself to the ending of an impossible dream. There was nothing more to say except farewell.

The last day dawned. The sun smiled down upon them. The soft breeze of the sea whispered the curse of destiny into their ears. It crooned the song of heritage; it called her back to the fastnesses where love may not venture in.

The chateau was in a state of upheaval. The exodus was beginning. The princess waited until the last moment. She went to him. He was standing apart from the rest, coldly indifferent to the pangs he was suffering.

"I shall love you always," she said simply, giving him her hand—"always, Hollingsworth." Her eyes were wide and hopeless; her lips were white.

He bowed his head. "May God give you all the happiness that I wish for you," he said. "The end!"

She looked steadily into his eyes for a long time, searching his soul for the hope that never dies. Then she gently withdrew her hands and stood away from him, humbled in her own pride.

"Yes," she whispered. "Goodby."

He straightened his shoulders and drew a deep breath through compressed nostrils. "Goodby! God bless you!" was all that he said.

She left him standing there. The wall between them was too high, too impregnable, for even love to storm.

Lady Deppingham came to him there a moment later. "I am sorry," she said tenderly. "Is there no hope?"

"There is no hope—for her!" he said bitterly. "She was condemned too long ago."

On the pier they said goodby to him. He was laughing as gayly and as blithely as if the world held no sorrows in all its mighty grasp.

"I'll look you up in London," he said to the Deppinghams. "Remember, the real trial is yet to come. Goodby, Browne. Goodby, all. You may come again another day."

The launch slipped away from the pier. He and Bowles stood there, side by side, pale faced, but smiling, waving their handkerchiefs. He felt that Genevra was still looking into his eyes even when the launch crept up under the walls of the distant ship.

Slowly the great vessel got under way. The American cruiser was already low on the horizon. There was a single shot from the King's Own, a reverberating farewell.

Hollingsworth Chase turned away at last. There were tears in his eyes, and there were tears in those of Mr. Bowles.

"Bowles," said he, "it's a beastly shame they didn't think to say goodby to old man Skaggs. He's in the same grave with us."

CHAPTER XXXIII.

A TOAST TO THE PAST.

THE middle of June found the Deppinghams leaving London once more, but this time not on a voyage into the mysterious south seas. They no longer were interested in the island of Japat, except as a reminiscence, nor were they concerned in the vagaries of Taswell Skaggs' will.

The estate was settled—closed!

Two months have passed since the Deppinghams departed from Japat, "for good and all." Many events have come to pass since that memorable day, not the least of which was the exchanging of £500,000, less attorneys' and executors' fees. Lady Deppingham and Robert Browne divided that amount of money and passed into legal history as the "late claimants to the estate of Taswell Skaggs."

It was Sir John Brodney's enterprise. He saw the way out of the difficulty, and he acted as pathfinder to the other and less perceiving counselors, all of whom had looked forward to an endless controversy.

The business of the Japat company and all that it entailed was transferred by agreement to a syndicate.

Never before was there such a stupendous deal in futures.

The grandchildren of the testators were ready to accept the best settlement that could be obtained. Theirs was a rather forlorn hope to begin with. When it was proposed that Agnes Deppingham and Robert Browne should accept £250,000 apiece in lieu of all claims, moral or legal, against the estate, they leaped at the chance.

They had seen but little of each other since landing in England, except as they were thrown together at the conferences. Lady Agnes went in for every diversion imaginable. For a wonder, she dragged Deppingham with her on all occasions. It was a most unexpected transformation. Their friends were puzzled. The rumor went about town that she was in love with her husband.

As for Bobby Browne, he was devotion itself to Drusilla. They sailed for New York within three days after the settlement was effected, ignoring the enticements of a London season. The Brownes were rich. He could now become a fashionable specialist. They were worth nearly a million and a quarter in American dollars. They now had nothing in common with Taswell Skaggs. Skaggs is not a pretty name.

Mr. Britt afterward spent three weeks of incessant travel on the continent and an additional seven days at sea. In Baden-Baden he happened upon Lord and Lady Deppingham. It will be recalled that in Japat they had always professed an unholy aversion for Mr. Britt. Is it cause for wonder, then, that they declined his invitation to dine in Baden-Baden? He even proposed to invite their entire party, which included a few dukes and duchesses who were leisurely on their way to attend the long talked of nuptials in Thorberg at the end of June.

In Vienna the Deppinghams were joined by the Duchess of N., the Marchioness of B. and other fashionables. In a week all of them would be in the castle at Thorberg for the ceremony that now occupied the attention of social and royal Europe.

"And to think," said the duchess, "she might have died happily on that miserable island. I am sure we did all we could to bring it about by steaming away from the place with the plague chasing us. Dear me, how diabolically those wretches lied to the marquis! They said that every one in the chateau was dead, Lady Deppingham, and buried, if I am not mistaken. It would be much better for poor Genevra if she were to be buried instead of married next week," lamented the duchess.

"Other women have married princes and got on very well," said Prince Lichtenstein.

OBITUARY

MRS. J. J. MAIN.

Toronto, March 12.—Mrs. Main, wife of J. J. Main, manager of the Polson Iron Works, Limited, died at midnight at her home, 40 Prince Arthur avenue. She was out in the afternoon, and shortly after returning was stricken with apoplexy. Dr. Heggie was called in, but she sank gradually and death followed in a few hours.

Mrs. Main was a member of the Avenue Road Methodist church. She is survived by her husband, a sister, and four brothers. Mrs. Main was in her 56th year.

Mrs. Main was an aunt of Misses Ruby and Pearl Main, formerly of Peterborough.

$500 FOR FOREIGN WORK OF Y.M.C.A.

The matter of Peterborough's subscription of $500 for the foreign work of the Y.M.C.A., asked for at the mass meeting at the Opera House the other evening, will be taken up shortly by the local Board of Directors and placed before the members. Last year $150 was the amount requested, but owing to the increase of the work in foreign lands and the consequent additional expense, Peterborough is asked to contribute $500 this year for the worthy and rapidly growing cause.

In a city of this size such a comparatively small sum should be conveniently raised.

POLICE BELIEVE THEY HAVE MAN WHO STOLE JEWELRY

Larry Kelly Was Arrested Saturday—Thomas Newhall is Wanted for Peddling Without a License—Children's Aid Officers Investigate a Case in Ashburnham.

Saturday afternoon, about five o'clock, Larry Kelly was arrested on George street, and at the police court this morning was charged with the theft of a quantity of jewelery from the sample room of the Oriental hotel on the night of Wednesday, March 3. The jewelery stolen consisted of one hundred and twenty-six lockets and fourteen gold-filled watch cases, the property of A. Michaels, a traveller for the J. A. Knox Co., of Toronto. The prisoner did not plead or make any election, and the case was enlarged till next Monday, and Kelly was remanded to jail.

Kelly for some time had been an employee at the hotel, but was not employed there when the theft took place.

A CHEAP WATCH.

There was no response when the name of Thomas Newhall, charged with peddling without a license, was called, and a warrant was made out for his arrest. Newhall lives in Norwood and the summons was served at that place. He was in this city last week, and one of his sales was a lady's gold watch, which he sold for $2.

CHILDREN'S AID CASE.

Acting under instructions from the secretary of the Children's Aid Society, Mr. George Cochrane paid a visit to the home of James Anderson, Driscoll Terrace, Ashburnham, on Saturday night, and found that a nine-months-old baby in the house was not being properly taken care of. The mother had been taken to the hospital last Wednesday, and the father had since that date shown himself to be incompetent to look after the child. It is said that he uses liquor to excess, and Mr. Cochrane stated that on Saturday night he was, to all appearances, just recovering from the effects of having taken too much liquor. He refused to give the child over to its aunt and grandmother, but it is now under their care.

To the magistrate Anderson said that he had not had time to make any arrangements for the child, but was willing that it should be taken care of by others.

There was no evidence produced in court that Anderson used liquor to excess, and the case was enlarged for one week, and if sufficient evidence is forthcoming he will be placed on the prohibited list.

ANOTHER GAY CAT.

A young man faced a charge of having made a disturbance on Water street Thursday night. He was one of the "Gay Cats" who took part in the celebration at Carters' Roost, but the magistrate was inclined to take a lenient view of his case after he had explained that he did not do any foot work or partake of the refreshments. He was discharged.

A SERMON APPROPRIATE TO THE APPROACHING DAY

Rev. Father Fitzpatrick's Interesting Discourse at the Church of the Sacred Heart on the Life and History of Ireland's Patron Saint — Present Day Conditions in Ireland.

The Church of the Sacred Heart was filled to overflowing last evening on the occasion of the eloquent sermon by Rev. Father Fitzpatrick, of Lindsay, in commemoration of the anticipated feast of St. Patrick. Father Fitzpatrick is an interesting and forcible speaker, and his discourse last evening was one of great eloquence, and could not fail to impress its hearers.

Father Fitzpatrick traced the life of St. Patrick from his birth in France down through captivity and preparation for the priesthood, followed by his consecration in Rome by Pope Celestine. He referred in beautiful language to St. Patrick's work of converting Ireland, and of the unparalleled success he met with in the establishment of schools, colleges and convents. The efforts Ireland made to convert Europe was touched upon, and Rev. Father Fitzpatrick at some length dealt with Ireland during the fourth, fifth and sixth centuries. He pointed out how different nations at different times held intellectual supremacy. Away back when history gives but scant information, this supremacy was held by China, Arabia and Egypt. Greece succeeded Egypt and Rome followed Greece. Italy held this supremacy in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, England in the seventeenth, France in the seventeenth and Germany in the present century. No historian has attempted to deny that from the sixth to the ninth centuries exclusive, that this supremacy belonged to Ireland. This was Ireland's golden age.

The eloquent priest spoke of England's misgovernment of Ireland. The discontent of the Irish people, he said, sprung from a legitimate ambition to improve their lowly condition. They were anxious to eliminate the commercial stagnation, emmigration and absentee landlordism. He spoke of the sad condition of the Irish people, politically and socially, owing to this misrule. He also referred in eulogistic terms to Ireland's soldiers, statesmen, scholars and heroes, and drew attention to all that Ireland had done for other countries of Europe at various times.

In conclusion Father Fitzpatrick appealed to the people to be ever mindful of their glorious past and worthy sons of their sainted forefathers, faithful to the teachings of the church.

The choir sang splendidly at Vespers solos being taken by Miss Annie Simons and Mr. H. Quinlan.

PLATE GLASS IN WINDOW BROKEN

Disorderly Conduct on George St., Saturday Nights, a General Complaint

Saturday night about ten o'clock, as a result of the actions of some person or persons at present unknown, the plate glass in the north window of Mr. Benj. Shortley's store, on George street, was broken. This means a loss of $100, as a new glass will have to be put in. Mr. Shortley noticed some evidence of disorderly conduct while busy in the store, but before he could ascertain who the offending ones were they had made good their escape. This case is only one of the many which have occurred lately, and Mr. Shortly has, with other George street business men, good cause to complain against the actions of a certain class of young men and boys who block up the store entrances and jostle each other about the street. The police could do a good work by putting a stop to this kind of conduct, and prompt action by this department appears necessary.

INTERESTING PRESENTATION

A Father Matthew Total Abstinence Medal Given to St. Peter's T. A. S.

An interesting event in connection with yesterday's meeting of St. Peter's T.A.S. was the presentation of a large lead medal to the society by Mr. George N. Cain. The medal was presented in Ireland in 1852 to Mr. Cain's father by Rev. Father Matthew, Ireland's great apostle of temperance, when the latter was president of the Cork Roman Catholic Total Abstinence Society, of which Mr. Cain was a member.

The medal is the insignia of the total abstinence pledge which the members of the society took, and on it is inscribed:—"I promise to abstain from all intoxicating drinks except used medicinally, and by order of a medical man, and to discountenance the cause and practice of intemperance."

Pots and pans in which foodstuffs are being soaked will soak much more effectively if filled with cold water than if hot is used.

Airships and Fogs.

The Germans are considering the problem of how aeronauts are to determine their location at night or in a fog. An ingenious engineer has proposed for the convenience of those traveling at night a very complete network of signal lights which will enable any aeronaut at some little distance above the earth's surface to determine his location with considerable precision. To such special signal lights naturally signals by bell or siren can be added to be used in case of fog. Dr. Bidlingmaier of the imperial observatory at Wilhelmshaven has, however, proposed a very simple adjunct for the equipment of the aeronaut which will enable him to locate his position with some measure of accuracy without the use of eye or ear as dependent upon terrestrial signals. The instrument in question is the so called "duplex compass," devised by Dr. Bidlingmaier and used by him lately during the explorations of the German antarctic expedition.

Zoological Puzzle.

Italian zoologists have a puzzle to solve, owing to the discovery on Mont Blanc of the body of a white bear, which has been taken to Aosta. It was thought at first that the bear must have died some 300 years ago and must have been preserved by the ice, since it has always been held that white bears vanished from the Alps three centuries ago. But it has since been demonstrated that death could have taken place only a few days previous to discovery. As this would seem to show that there are still white bears in the Alps, expeditions are now to be sent to test the theory.—Dundee Advertiser.

VILLAGE WAS IN DANGER FROM FIRE

Norwood Had Two Blazes Sunday Morning—Looks Like Work of Incendiary—Exciting Incidents

Special to the Review.

Norwood, March 14.—About 1.30 Sunday morning Norwood was aroused from peaceful slumbers by the wild clang of the fire bell. In a very few minutes the streets were alive with excited men, and, urged on by the clanging toll of the bell, they rushed for the business portion of the village, only to find that the fire, which apparently had been started by some incendiary in the Avery barn formerly occupied by Mr. Way, had already been extinguished by those earliest on the scene.

In a few minutes the people who had assembled returned home, and had just time to get snugly in bed again, when the bell again rang out its wild clang, and this time there was indeed a blaze, which, for a time, threatened the safety of the business portion of the village.

The barn in the rear of the McGregor House had also been set on fire.

There seems to be no doubt that the fires were started by some wild-minded person, as both places were comparatively unused, and at the late hour the fires occurred it is safe to say they could not have started only by incendiary methods.

The barn that was destroyed adjoined the Avery barn of Mr. L. Killoran, being separated by a tying shed. The adjoining property was only saved by willing hands chopping and tearing down the sheds east and west of the burning building, and so confined the flames to the one building.

A bucket brigade watched the roof of the adjoining building, and several times fire had to be extinguished, caused by flying embers.

The night was very still, which made the task of keeping the fire within bounds easier for the men. The loss will be light, as the barn destroyed was an old building.

MONARCHAL PINE IN NORTH HARVEY

Was 5 ft. 10 Inches in Diameter and Was Cut Into Five Logs

North Harvey, March 12.—The large pine that has stood for so many years on lot 20, con. 14, is now down and out. It was cut by Messrs. Edward and Alex. St. Thomas and Harry Palmer. They started about eight o'clock in the morning and finished in time for dinner. It was a very large tree, measuring 5 feet 10 inches at the stump, and made four 12-foot logs and one 10-foot.

Mr. McWilliams, foreman of Kelly's camp, had messrs. O'Leary and Bert Jones do the skidding, while the drawing was done by Vin Paul, Wallace McConkey and Wm. Robinson. Thos. McGee, Bert Atchison and Wm Melborgall were top loaders. It was a great event, and the boys all had a big time. The camp broke up a few days afterwards.

VICTOR RECITAL PROVED A DELIGHT

Records Were Wonderfully Natural—Entertainment Won the Approval of Many

A striking demonstration of the practically perfect mechanical reproduction of the human voice was given at the Victor gramophone recital at the Oriental Hotel Saturday night. A large and very much interested audience was present in the rotunda and in the upstairs parlor of the hotel, the machine, which was on the first landing of the stairs, being heard to excellent advantage in both places. Mr. Wm H Freeland, the Victor representative, acted as chairman of the recital, and the selections ranged from "I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now" to the "Sextette from Lucia."

One of the most attractive and commanding selections was the Miserere from "Il Trovatore," by Caruso, Aida and a grand opera chorus, and many other of the most famous singers of grand opera were heard in the magnificent numbers of old masters.

And then there was Harry Lauder. He was not there himself in person, but the records were so realistic that one would almost have imagined the little Scotchman was concealed somewhere in the big horn. "Stop Your Tickling Jock" "I've Loved Her Ever Since She Was a Baby," and "Foo' the Noo" and several other Lauder numbers got an immense reception from the audience. Besides this there were xylophone solos, violin solos, band selections, etc., of the most entertaining character.

The entertainment in every respect was a very successful and highly appreciated one, and the repertoire of records was varied enough to suit all tastes.

THE PLAN WILL OPEN TO-NIGHT

The plan for the production of "Shaun Rhue" at the Grand Opera House on March 17th, will be opened at the box office to-morrow morning at eight o'clock. The prices will be 25, 35 and 50 cents and the boxes will be 75 cents.

ANOTHER DECK ON LADY'S HAT

Amusing Incident in a Hat Store on George St. on Saturday

People are pretty nearly case-hardened enough to expect a woman wearing anything on her head, but there was a "turnout" on George street on Saturday that caused passersby to come to attention. A woman was in a hat store on George street and when she was coming out a small felt hat that was on an upper shelf, tumbled down and landed on the headpiece of the lady. There it stuck among the feathers, tin cans, rope and other articles that went to make up the trimming. The lady did not known that another deck had been put on her skypiece and she walked a considerable distance along the street before becoming aware of why people were staring at her. Then she blushed and hurried back to the store.

CITY LEAGUE BANQUET TO-NIGHT

Champion Strathconas Will be Guests of City League and Presented With Trophy

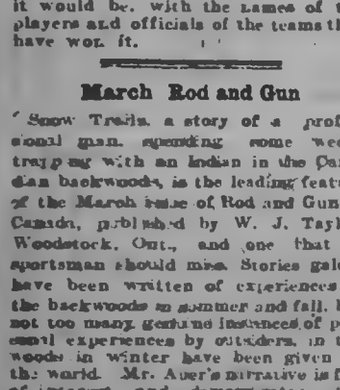
All arrangements have been completed for the holding of the City League banquet to-night, at which the champion Strathconas will be presented with the Stratton trophy. The affair, which takes place in the Oriental dining hall, will commence at eight o'clock. An interesting toast list has been prepared and vocal and instrumental numbers by local talent will be given.

MUG COMES BACK FROM LAKEFIELD

The J. R. Stratton trophy, emblematic of the City Hockey League championship, is again in Peterborough. It was brought to the city from Lakefield Saturday night by Mr. Fred Craig, and will grace the club rooms of the Strathconas for another season. The mug looks as if it had been packed in a keg of shingle nails, being "scratched" pretty nearly everywhere it would be, with the names of the players and officials of the teams that have won it.

March Rod and Gun

"Snow Trails, a story of a professional man spending some weeks trapping with an Indian in the Canadian backwoods, is the leading feature of the March issue of Rod and Gun in Canada, published by W. J. Taylor, Woodstock, Ont., and one that no sportsman should miss. Stories galore have been written of experiences in the backwoods in summer and fall, but not too many genuine instances of personal experiences by outsiders in the woods in winter have been given to the world. Mr. Auer's narrative is full of interest and demonstrates the health and pleasure to be obtained from a visit to the winter woods. To penetrate too far in, as the author says, only for the strong, but there are few cases which would not be benefited from following the author's advice and example. The time may come when winter visitors will only rank second in numbers to those enjoying summer outings. The difficulties of prospecting trips in Northern British Columbia are well brought out in the story of a 'Wild Goose Chase' by Mr. F. Bullock-Webster. The experiences gained by fire ranging for two summers in the Metagami Forest Reserve are told in an interesting style by Mr. H. W. Lyons. These are supplemented by a full list of contents, dealing with big game hunting, woodcock shooting, fishing, protective work, mountaineering, and kindred subjects, the whole bringing with it the whiffs of the woodlands in very full measure, and largely accounting for the widespread influence the magazine has gained amongst sportsmen on both sides of the border.



ST. MICHAELS ARE CHAMPIONS

Won From Parkdale on Overtime -Berlin Failed In Attempt to Lift Stanley Cup

St. Michael's won the championship of the senior O. H. A. Saturday night at Mutual street rink, Toronto, by defeating the Parkdale septette in twenty minutes' overtime, by a 2—1 score. The work of the goaltenders was always conspicuous. The ice was in poor condition.

Berlin failed to lift the Stanley Cup at Montreal on Saturday night. Only 1,200 people witnessed the game, which went to the champions by 7—3. The defence of the challengers was very strong, but the forward line was outplayed by the opposing line. Berlin scored first, but Wanderers soon evened up and kept the lead throughout the remainder of the contest.

HOCKEY

Mr. William H. Freeman, the Victor gramaphone representative, will have the splendid machine which entertained so many at the Oriental Saturday night, at the City League banquet to-night.

SPLENDID ICE FOR THE CURLERS

With the assistance of the weather man, Caretaker McIntosh has three splendid sheets of ice available for the curlers, and the curling rink should be the scene of some good games to-night. Bobcaygeon rinks have yet to play the remaining games for the Fitzgerald-Bottum shield here, and an endeavor will be made to have these games played off at once.

Y.M.C.A. Baseball Meeting

To-night at eight o'clock there will be a meeting in the association rooms to organize a Y.M.C.A. baseball club. A full attendance is desired.

JORDAN NOT A RIVER.

The Renfrew Lad Knew His Hockey Far Better Than That.

The thriving town of Renfrew, Ontario, is hockey crazy, as everybody knows—at least everybody interested in sports. And those who do not peruse the sporting pages of the daily papers occasionally miss a story full of suggestion in a broad, human way. Such a story, for example, was that which concerned the recent downfall—for the time being—of Renfrew's mighty professional hockey team. This organization of stars, collected regardless of expense, made a brave showing when they lined up on the home rink, for their first game—against Cobalt—and all Renfrew grinned and felt sorry for the poor, clumsy huskies from the silver town. And what a lesson in humility to giants was then most harshly read to all that mighty aggregation and their friends and backers, when it went down to defeat before the good team play of undistinguished opponents! Still Renfrew is still greatly interested in hockey, as will be noted by an incident which occurred there recently. It is told by The Renfrew Journal as an absolutely true story. To appreciate it one must know that Renfrew's amateur hockey team is called "the Rivers" and that the centre man on Renfrew's famous National Hockey Association team is an expert named Jordan.

The true tale runs like this: At Sunday school in that town a week ago the teacher of a class was giving a fine description of the River Jordan. Noticing that one boy in the class was inattentive, the teacher thought to catch him napping by suddenly turning to him and asking:

"And now (calling him by name) what is Jordan?"

"A hockey player," was the prompt but unexpected reply.

"Oh, no!" said the teacher, "will some one who has been paying attention, give me the correct answer?"

"Jordan is one of the rivers——" began another scholar in response to this, but he was promptly interrupted by the first boy.

"He isn't one of the 'Rivers,' at all, he plays centre for the seniors," he said.

BATTLING WITH ODDS

THAT HAS BEEN THE LIFE WORK OF T. C. ROBINETTE.

Famous Criminal Pleader Is a Man Who Dearly Relishes a Fight, and He Has Managed to Keep Well Supplied With Them—Is a Quiet Man With a Fund of Secrets Locked Away In His Breast.

All the world loves a fighter. And when that man almost invariably has the losing end of the fight and as frequently as not wins out the world is prone to love him all the more.

The warrior who is a warrior for the sheer sporting instinct that is in him comes in all classes and conditions of men. He may be as like the ordinary breed as two peas, but there is always one thing by which you can distinguish him. He has a trick of fighting backwards when the odds are too great and keeping at it until he comes to the last ditch. Presently he recognizes that it is the last ditch and if there is nothing else left to do he lies down and dies in it. But a man of that sort can usually find something else to do and that is why you so frequently hear from him again.

Canada has a liberal quota of such men, but there is not one of them who piques the imagination quite so much as T. C. Robinette. Of course no one ever calls him T. C. Robinette—except in a newspaper item or a legal document. Conversationally he is Tom on the same principle that William Mackenzie is Bill, and his distinguished confrere, Daniel Mann, is Dan. It gives a fine odor of familiarity.

It was back in the regime of the Earl of Aberdeen that Tom Robinette registered his first indelible mark as a criminal pleader. A man named

T. C. ROBINETTE.

McWherral killed an aged couple near Brampton, and out of nowhere in particular came a young lawyer named Robinette to defend him. It was a long fight, but ultimately McWherral went to the penitentiary and not to the gallows. Some say that McWherral should have been hanged, but that has nothing to do with the case. Counsel for the defence was there to defend and every reason why McWherral should have hanged is a testimonial for his lawyer.

From that day the name of Tom Robinette took its place along with Ayer's Almanac and the Bible as a family tradition in Canada.

Although this was his first introduction to the country at large the young criminal pleader had up till that time been quite a celebrated person in a smaller circle. He had arrived at the University with a reputation as a political spellbinder, and whenever an opportunity arose he was found on the Liberal stump "pointing with pride," and "nailing another lie." Nor were his pugnacious propensities limited to oratorical invective. There is a well authenticated story of his student days to the effect that once on a midnight foray he fell foul of the police. Failing to outdo the officer in debate he was forced to fight for it, and eventually appeared in court charged with beating up a constable. He showed conclusively, however, that the policeman had been completely in the wrong and the charge was immediately dropped.

He graduated from the university in 1884 with a gold and silver medals, after having been the first president of the Modern Language Club, and in 1887 finished his Osgoode Hall course.

From that time on he threw himself into criminal law and since the McWherral case he has figured in almost every great sensation in eastern Canada. There was Healey, who killed Corrigan in 1898; there were Smith and Broome, who killed an old woman near McMaster University, Toronto; there was Mrs. Kyle, who shot and killed an assailant near Woodstock; and last year Mrs. Turner and Walter Blythe. In addition to these there have been scores of cases just as sensational in their time involving lesser crimes than the capital one. Then there are the divorce cases. The majority of them pass through his hands. They say in Toronto that there is no man in that city who carries locked up in his bosom quite so many family secrets.

And this is one of the most fascinating things about Tom Robinette. At any hour in the day you may see in the waiting room of his office a dozen persons drawn from every rank in life. Each in his turn goes in at the door with its inscrutable frosted glass. And while the visitor delivers up every shred of his private life that he has tried so hard to keep hidden, the calm impressive director of defences sits beating a tattoo with his long, slim fingers, and coining the fighting chance. Presently the interview is at an end and the campaign is planned. It happens over and over again a score of times a day but never a word passes the frosted glass door. This is no business for a man garrulously inclined.

Now and again long years afterward the loose ends of a story find their way out into the world. Indiscreet assistents sometimes talk too much or messages provide a loophole for escape. And when such a bit of information gets away it provides interesting reading.

McWherral, for instance. Walter McWherral was the illegitimate son of an English nobleman, who sits today in the House of Lords. His mother was a governess in the peer's family. This was a fact well known to Lord Aberdeen, and a judicious reminder of the fact secured a commutation of the sentence of death.

Everyone remembers Fred. Lee Rice, who with Rutledge and Jones created so great a sensation some years ago. Rice was a university graduate whose father had been an intimate friend of Abraham Lincoln. The father is still living and is now a millionaire in the State of Illinois. When Rice the last of the band, lay in Toronto Jail awaiting execution every possible step was taken to secure a commutation of his sentence. His father went to Speaker Joe Cannon, himself from Illinois. Cannon communicated with Ambassador Joseph Choate, then plenipotentiary at St. James, and Choate took train a few hours before the execution and rode all night to Windsor Castle to ask King Edward to grant a pardon. The elaborate scheme was unavailing, however, and Rice was hanged.

It is such stories as these that Tom Robinette could tell if he only would, but he will not. Some day his friends say, he has promised to write a volume of his reminiscences, but not until after the last ones who care are gone.

But this is only the criminal side. He figured, too, in some notable civil cases, the Toronto Parks Investigation and the London election fraud cases. Then there was the celebrated Peterboro election case where he appeared for the Government. He has on two occasions been through the political mill as a candidate, twice contesting Centre Toronto in the Liberal interest.

So when Young Canada stops in the middle of a game of "pirut" and feels certain misgivings about the fate of Blackbeard and some of his other illustrious predecessors he can take comfort in the thought that Tom Robinette will be on hand to defend him so long as there is a fight in it.

MOTOR BOATING.

It Is a Pastime That Is Steadily Spreading In Canada.

Of the many manly sports, particularly water sports, indulged in by men of all ages and classes in Canada, in none has greater interest been shown than in motor boating, and this notwithstanding the fact that it is only within recent years that engines have been constructed for propelling all kinds of craft by motor power. What we possess to-day in this respect, is the result of many years of strenuous and necessarily scientific study. The ingenuity displayed by inventors in improving motor engine has been rewarded by producing a mechanism undoubtedly one of the most perfect ever constructed.

The steam engine was justly regarded as a great invention, and was so perfected as to be applicable to the propulsion of any kind or size of boat but the discovery of the use of electricity has practically resulted in the superceding of everything in the way of steam power in pleasure boating. The reasons for this are found in the fact that the use of the electric spark for generating power saves time, gives greater speed, is much cleaner and economizes space. Each of these reasons is a matter of the greatest importance, especially in the smaller classes of boats.

With motor power a yacht can be started on a minute's notice, and can develop a tremendous speed by which a small 35-40 foot launch can outdistance even such ocean greyhounds as the Mauretania, the Cunard record breaker of the fast service across the Atlantic.

The supply of fuel (gasoline) can be stored in bunkers well protected, but which occupy a space practially unnoticed. The saving of space due to the absence of large boilers and the necessary fuel, together with the great convenience resulting from absence of heat from boilers are sufficient to give some idea of the indubitable advantages of the motor engine over that of the ordinary steam engine.

of the Empire, there is no country equal to Canada either for short or long cruises. The enormous areas covered by rivers and streams of various sizes, as well as the inland fresh water lakes, all of which are navigable and picturesque, makes this country the home of pleasure boating. Every province in Canada, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, contains streams and lakes which are being utilized for this pastime, so that in every part of the broad Dominion this manly sport is growing in popularity amongst those who need or seek recreation. Even the great streams of the Rocky Mountains, created by the melting snows and which form lakes and rivers in the valleys, are being utilized for motor boating. It is a sport that takes one out into the open, that is enjoyed in the fresh air and, while it is not strenuous, affords some physical exercise and calls for the display of considerable skill. And what may be equally important and beneficial, it tends to develop an appreciation of the beauties of nature and of the charms of our landscapes.—Canadian Life and Resources.

The Chinese consul-general at Ottawa told the Canadian Club of that city that constitutional government, as we understand it in this country, is nothing new, but had been practiced in China twenty-four centuries ago. So many good things were known and practiced by the Chinese in ancient times that it is no wonder the Chinese of to-day hold their ancestors in such profound reverence. But it would be more to the purpose if they imitated those ancestors instead of worshipping them.—Hamilton Herald.

Nickel Industry.

It is hoped that the investigation the mines committee has begun into the economy of nickel production in this country will lead to the taking of effective measures for a great expansion in the production and consumption of nickel and nickel-steel in Canadian industries.—Toronto Mail and Empire.

Insurance Companies Lose About $125,000.00 by the Wreck at Spanish River

Double Liability for About Twenty-five Persons

A loss of somewhere in the neighbourhood of $125,000 is what the Accident Insurance Companies estimate the wreck at Spanish River bridge means to them.

They figure that about 25 of those who met death carried Accident Insurance, and the average insurance, according to the tables, is $5,000. In case of death in a railway disaster there is a double liability, making the figure $6,000, or $5,000 to be more conservative.

Their loss may total more than that, for the commercial travellers, a number of whom were killed, usually carry very heavy insurance. In addition, some of the companies make the policies payable on the death of the wife while travelling, though the policy is taken out in the husband's name. In such cases they pay the husband the same amount as they would have paid the wife were the husband killed.

A Notable Article

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—Let me call the attention of your readers to the following reply by Mr. Hyndman to Dr. Norman Angell's new book, "Europe's Optical Illusion," which bids us pay no attention to the German scare. It is directly "on" our Dominion Canadian navy scheme also. It is as follows:—

Mr. H. M. Hyndman writes:—"I am obliged to you for sending me Public Opinion with a reprint of the Prussian Ambassador's speech and a resume of a book by Mr. Angell.

"The Ambassador tells us what he is told to tell us by his master, the Kaiser. Prince Henry of Prussia is coming here on a similar mission. My countrymen will be fools indeed if they are gulled by these persons.

"As to Mr. Angell, assuming him to be acting in good faith, I advise him to read up Prussian history, to take note of quite recent Prussian acts, to travel about quietly in Germany understanding and speaking German well, to make a few inquiries in Belgium, Denmark and Holland, and to come back by way of Paris, to ask M. Delcasse if, he will furnish Mr. Angell with a few facts, not theories, which I know that French statesman has at his command.

"A nation does not borrow £50,000,000 when its finances are not bad order, to build up a powerful navy In order to preserve peace, nor does it threaten first France and then Russia with immediate war on commercial principles purely. I am too old to pay attention to mere bluff, bluster and buncombe on serious matters of policy. I was travelling about Germany, as an English lad knowing German, in 1858, when Mayence was garrisoned by Prussians and Austrians; I was out in the campaign of 1866 in Italy, and I have watched Prussian policy carefully for fifty years. A new period of aggression has already begun"

Must Keep Sober

Those who want to travel on railway trains must keep sober. The railway officials have issued a special circular to their train hands regarding the carrying of passengers while under the influence of liquor. The instruction in the circular concludes by informing the train hands that this rule must be observed or those violating it will be dismissed from the service.

TRY THE MONEY-BACK CURE FOR INDIGESTION

Nine times in ten stomach derangements are responsible for sallow complexion, dull eyes and thin body.

It is the stomach that supplies nourishing blood to the muscles, the nerves, and skin. If the stomach is healthy, plenty of nutritious matter will be absorbed by the blood. If it is not healthy, the food will ferment, and undigested, will pass along through the bowels, furnishing so little nutritious matter that the blood becomes impoverished, and the glow of health vanishes.

If you suffer from nervousness, sick headache, belching of gas, sour taste in the mouth, heaviness after eating, or any other miserable stomach disturbance, you need Mi-o-na, and the sooner you get it the quicker you will be healthier and happier.

It will relieve any distressed stomach condition almost immediately. It will cure if used according to directions. Wm. Medill sells it for 50 cents a large box, and he thinks enough of it to guarantee it to cure indigestion.

BYRON AND THE BALLOON.

How the Poet in 1822 Predicted the Airship of Today.

Those who have read the fiction of Edgar Allan Poe will recall his wonderful story of the balloon with a propelling rudder, which, crossing the Atlantic from Europe in three days, landed on the coast of South Carolina. This story was published in 1838, preceding the flight of Blerlot from Calais to Dover more than seventy years. And now it is remarked that as early as 1822, sixteen years before Poe, Byron foretold the motor.

It was in 1822 that Byron lived at Pisa, Italy, where he had rented for a year the Lanfranchie palace, and it was there that he entertained a Captain Medwin, who on his return to London published his "Conversations With Lord Byron." One of these conversations is to this effect:

"Who can but regret," said Byron, "that he has been born two or three hundred years too soon. Here is a letter from a savant of Bologna who claims to have discovered the secret of guiding balloons by means of a rudder and who assures me that he is ready to disclose this secret to the government. I imagine that we are soon to make journeys through the air instead of sea voyages. At last to find a way to go to the moon despite the lack of atmosphere that Fontanelle has discovered there. There is not as much madness in this idea as one may suppose. The sciences are now in their infancy."

Medwin left Pisa in March, 1822. It was near the close of that year that Byron published the latter parts of his "Don Juan," in which the poet shows that he had been inspired by the discovery of the Bologna savant. See the second stanza of the tenth canto:

Man fell with apples and with apples rose,
If this be true, for we must deem the mode
In which Sir Isaac Newton could disclose
Through the then unpaved stars the turnpike road,
A thing to counterbalance human woes.
For ever since immortal man hath glowed
With all kinds of mechanics, and full soon
Steam engines will conduct him to the moon.

Byron's "Don Juan" was translated into French by Amedee Pichot in 1825; but, daring as was that translator, he did not venture to put "Don Juan" into rhyme, and today the foregoing stanza done in French prose is supposed to be a prediction of aviation by motor, though Byron's suggestion goes no further than steam.—London Globe.

The Size of Raindrops.

Raindrops do not always have the same size or weight, and this is primarily due to the fact that they are not formed like the drops of water that fall from a wet cloth or the spout of a pitcher or the drops that rush out of the small holes in a garden sprinkler. In all these latter cases a solid stream of water is broken up into drops. But the raindrop is formed in the cloud by the accumulation of minute atoms of water drawn together into one drop and sometimes by the melting of a large snowflake or a solid little icy hailstone. When a drop is thus formed in the clouds it begins to fall, no matter whether it be large or small, and observers in balloons state that all sizes of drops are to be found within the clouds themselves, from the finest fog and drizzling mist up to the heavy rain. It is commonly said that the bigger drops fall faster than the smaller ones and overtake them and grow bigger. This sounds reasonable, but no one has really proved it.—St. Nicholas.

Nicaragua.

Nicaragua, wedged in between Honduras and Costa Rica, is triangular in shape, its base of some 280 miles resting on the Caribbean sea. Its area is about 58,000 square miles and its population somewhat less than a million, mostly Indians, mestizos negroes and mulattoes. The whites of pure blood constitute but a small part of the people. The main products of the country are rice, cocoa, coffee, Indian corn and hides. Like most of the South American countries, Nicaragua is noted for its military "pronunciamentos," popular revolts, revolutions, etc., by which the land is almost constantly troubled to the verge of ruin.—New York American.

Jeweled Monsters.

In the upper cretaceous deposits at White cliffs, New South Wales, two skeletons of plesiosaurian reptiles have been found, both of which were completely opalized, like the tree trunks found in Arizona and other western localities. In the first example of these jeweled monsters that were unearthed the color was rich and striking. The second was less brilliant of hue, and precious opal occurred only here and there on the specimen, especially in the transverse process of the neck. The plesiosaurs are an extinct race of very long necked creatures which swam in ancient seas.—Harper's Weekly.

What Eskimos Think of White Men.

The Eskimos' opinion of white men is sometimes as uncomplimentary as the white men's opinion of them. Vilhjalmr Stefansson, who was the ethnologist in company with the recent Anglo-American polar expedition, writes in Harper's Magazine of his experiences in the arctic while living with Eskimo families, and he reports with Eskimo as saying that white men are as bad to travel with as babies. Indeed, they go further and say that white men are worse than babies, because though babies cry they don't argue, and white men are always "giving directions about things they don't understand."

DOINGS IN GAYGOTHAM

Fashions Seen at a Carnegie Hall Musical Recital.

AN OLD LADY AND HER SWIRL

The Art of Giving Pleasure—Hints on How to Get on With People Who Find Mrs. A. Haughty and Mrs. B. Snubby—A Peace Crusade.

Dear Elsie—I don't know when anything has so musically satisfied me as the recital of Mischa Elman, the Russian boy violinist, at Carnegie hall last week. The immense building was simply packed with a fashionable and enthusiastic audience. Elman's playing is wonderful, and he certainly gets more tone and soul sounds out of a violin than any virtuoso I have ever heard. A musical prodigy at four, a genius of the stringed instrument now at nineteen, what will he be at twice the age? I could bore you to death with my Mischa ravings, but I do, dear, wish you could have heard him play his own arrangement of Schumann's "Wanderer." I've forgotten the German equivalent and Mr. Wine and Whisky's "Faust Fantasie." Well, it's always merely a step from the sublime to the ridiculous, and an old lady at the recital furnished the comedy part. This ancient specimen was evidently a member of what Dick calls the "submerged Four Hundred," and her years were surely the allotted threescore and ten. The lady, judging from her makeup, had been converted to the doctrine that the date of a woman's birth has nothing to do with her years.

Angels and ministers of grace defend me from such spectacles of bedizened old age!

What did she wear? The very latest and most unsuitable addenda of the mode. Her hair—well, her hair was of nature's coloring. This much she had conceded to time, but it was fixed in the extreme swirl style. Imagine seventy years or more of femininity done up in a swirl!

On top of the coiffure rested, or, to be more explicit, roosted, a huge ermine turban ornamented with a pink orchid and a youthful, weirdly gay aigret. Madam's furs were of the same royal pelt. Her gown was made so modishly floppy all round as very seriously to impede her tottering steps as she walked down the aisle to her seat.

That old woman's appearance disgusted me more than I should have allowed such a trifle to do.

But has it ever, Elsa, struck you how much you are influenced during the day by the moods of the people around you and the trifles of existence?

If there is a chilly atmosphere at the breakfast table, if you receive a letter—bill would hit the mark nearer—if some little incident jars the harmony of things, it seems to throw you out of gear and makes you, if not downright unhappy, at least awfully uncomfortable for the entire day.

A slit of suits from the maid, an argument with the butcher, put a cloud on the horizon and give you a dissatisfied, disconsolate feeling which is twin sister to the blues. All these things are trifles, but trifles make up a large part of our life.

There is no getting away from the fact that your happiness depends a great deal upon the moods and tenses of the people we come in contact with and the impression they make upon us.

I can never get on with people when they don't seem pleased with me. I'm terribly sensitive on this point. If I feel that I'm not welcome I simply can't be at my best.

Dick says that I'm foolish on the subject and that you can't always tell from a person's manner what his real feelings are. You may think you can, but you can't.

Mrs. A., he argues, perhaps seems proud and reserved and you never feel at ease with her for fear of being "sat on," when, as a matter of fact, she may be merely dreadfully shy and more afraid of you than you are of her. But she gives you the impression that she is haughty and distant, and you go away feeling rebuffed.

I've been turning the idea around. If the impression other people make on you has so much to do with your happiness, why, then, the effect you produce on other people must influence them the same way.

Do you know, I don't think we realize this half enough. We don't understand that just as a little coldness or a little temper on the part of somebody else upsets us so does the same thing on our part make others unhappy.

I reckon all this happens because we see the mote in our neighbor's eye, but not the beam in our own.

I know a woman who is the soul of hospitality, but who has such an unfortunately chilly manner that she literally freezes her guests by her apparent coldness, though she is really delighted to see them.

I am going to see what a little personal investigating along friendly lines will do for my own character, and I am going deliberately to set to work to cultivate a pleasant, winning and welcoming manner. The people who possess it are rare. But I think it can be acquired. You, dear, have such a sunny nature that you won't be bothered in this direction, but I am sure that if the rest of us took pains to express our warmest and pleasantest feelings and repress the opposite sensations of coldness and dislike our way in the world would be the brighter for it. We would add to the sunshine of many a dull day, and we would have our own material reward, for people with pleasant ways are always welcome wherever they go. I shall begin my crusade of pleasantness when I don the new house gown I've just had finished and a sketch of which I am inclosing. The frock is such a quaint, demure, lovely affair in dove gray silk and chiffon that I am sure the proverbial bird of peace will hover over me when I wear it.

Don't you think I might suggest the wearing of a peace frock to the members of the Universal Peace league as a part of its platform? I'm getting flippant, so goodby before you are dreadfully shocked by MABEL.

The Farmers' Interest in Pure Seed

From now to the end of seeding the trade in seed will be active, and it behooves every farmer to take stock of what he has on hand to sow or what he has to buy.

In many places dealers say that the seed which is now coming in quite freely from the farmers is more polluted with obnoxious weed seeds than it has been for several seasons. As a consequence there is a heavy loss in cleaning, and high-class No. 1 seed will be expensive. In view of these conditions it is likely that there will be a smaller proportion than usual of No. 1 seed placed on the market, and considerable of the second-rate seed will probably be pretty close to the prohibitive line. It is therefore especially important this year that farmers who have to buy seed should use every precaution to see that they do not get a supply of weed seeds. If you want high-class, pure seed, and are willing to pay the price, place your order early for guaranteed No. 1 seed, and to see that the seed delivered is up to standard, send a sample to the Seed Laboratory, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, and you will be sent a report giving the grading and the kinds and number of weed seeds present, if any. The standard for No. 1 seed is not more than one noxious weed seed per 1,500 of good seed, while in the second quality five weed seeds per 1,000 are allowed or 71-2 times as many. Farmers who have seed for sale, or even if they have only enough for their own use, should also have it tested for purity before selling or sowing. If this is not done there is danger of selling seed in violation of the Seed Control Act, and farmers are quite as liable to prosecution for selling low grade clover seed as seed dealers.

Ribgrass is one of the commonest seeds found in clover seed and one of the most difficult to separate by machinery. Where a farmer has only a small quantity of seed to handle, the following method of separation might be found practicable: Wrap a few fanning mill sieves with two or three ply cheese cloth. Dampen the cheese cloth and sprinkle the clover seed containing ribgrass over it. In a minute or two the moisture will develop the mucilage of the ribgrass, causing it to stick to the cheese cloth. With a little drying by wind or heat the clover seed will fall off and leave the ribgrass sticking to the cheese cloth. The ribgrass can then be scraped off and the operation repeated with as many sieves as can be kept going. This method, of course, is slow, but it can be used for small lots.

Care in the selection of seed is the first essential in the production of clean crops, but to produce a clean clover seed crop this must be supplemented by seeding on well prepared, clean land and weeding in the field.

PLACING BASS FRY IN STURGEON LAKE

The Forest, Fish and Game Association held a meeting on Monday with Mr. A. E. Bottum, president, in the chair. It was stated that Mr. Mason, member for East Victoria, was moving to have some bass fry placed in Sturgeon Lake, and after discussion it was resolved that Pigeon and Sturgeon Lake being accepted as amongst the best lakes in the district for spawning and feeding facilities, the Government would do well to place a liberal supply of young bass in each of the lakes, and Mr. Mason will be notified of the views of the Association. Another meeting will be held on Friday, the 18th, at the Council Chamber, at eight o'clock, and all persons interested in the preservation of the fish and game should be present.—Bobcaygeon Independent.

THE LORDS CONSIDER PLANS TO REFORM THEIR CHAMBER

Resolution Presented Declare That the Time Has Come When a Purely Hereditary Body Will no Longer Serve—Suggests Special Form of Elections.

London, Eng., March 15—The House of Lords entered upon a discussion yesterday of the ordinance proposed by Lord Rosebery preparatory to the radical reform of the Upper Chamber.

The great crowd present indicated the general interest in the subject. Not a seat in the Chamber was vacant when Lord Rosebery rose to move that the House resolve itself into a committee of the whole to consider the best means of reforming the existing organization so as to constitute itself a strong and efficient second chamber.

At the same time, he presented a set of resolutions to the effect that there was a necessity of a strong and efficient second chamber for the well being of the state; that such a chamber would be best obtainable by the reform and reconstitution of the House of Lords; and that a necessary preliminary to such reform and reconstitution was the acceptance of the principle that the possession of a peerage in itself should no longer afford the right to sit and vote in the House of Lords.

Lord Rosebery declared that the time had come for a reform from within without waiting for the Government to carry out its proposals to hamstring the peers and so emasculate the House of Lords that it would become no better than a painted chamber in which no self-respecting peer would care to sit.

He said that it was wished to establish the elective principle, but it must not be through popular elections, but by elections by associations, corporations and county councils.

Lord Rosebery poured scorn upon the suggestion of a single chamber, which he declared was a proposal to dig the grave of the Empire. In America, he said, the veto of the Senate was stronger than was ever the veto of a sovereign. He trembled at the scorn of the United States when contemplating Great Britain's one-eyed, one-legged search for a constitution.

The House of Lords adjourned the debate after a discussion which revealed marked difference of opinion as to the value of Lord Rosebery's proposal.

Viscount Morley expressed surprise that Lord Rosebery had not waited for the Government's proposals and pointed out that the Rosebery plan of reform would entirely fail to remove the possibility of future deadlocks arising between the two Houses, which was the real difficulty to be solved.

An interesting phase of the political situation yesterday was Premier Asquith's announcement in the House of Commons that the budget would be re-introduced and disposed of before the House rises for the spring recess.

This announcement revived political speculation in the lobbies. It is generally believed that the Nationalists will abstain from voting, in which case the budget will be passed. If the budget is defeated there is no doubt the Government will resign and go to the country again on the question of the budget and the reform of the House of Lords.

EMMERSON LEADS ATTACK ON AMERICAN POWER COMPANY

In Stormy Night Session the Opponents of the Incorporation of the St. Lawrence Power Transmission Co. Put up Fight.

Ottawa, March 15.—There was a battle royal in the Commons last evening over the bill to incorporate the St. Lawrence Power Transmission Co.

Hon. H. R. Emmerson joined the ranks of the opponents of the bill, and gave F. F. Pardee (West Lambton) and Robert Smith (Stormont), the chief advocates of the applicant interests, a warm time. Talking of the bill Mr. Emmerson said: "I see lurking in it a menace and a danger to Canadian interests."

He understood that this bill was simply preliminary to another bill which would be brought to the attention of the House, and would be the counterpart of a bill passed by the New York State Legislature. Parliament had already given powers to a company in 1894 to dam the St. Lawrence. The present bill would supply the power for transmission, which the company now lacked.

When it was recognized, said Mr. Emmerson, that the State of New York insisted upon the new company, just incorporated, exercising its power only for a consideration, he wondered why this Parliament was willing to give this power for nothing. "It is time for this Parliament to halt," he insisted, "and to enquire fully how far the powers of this company of 1894 are to be used by this great American company."

Major Sharpe (North Ontario) opposed the bill strongly. Any policy that tended to detract from the hydro-electric policy of the Ontario Government, he said, should not be encouraged.

Dr. Reid (Grenville) said Mr. Parlee seemed quite willing to protect a municipality, but not the province.

F. B. Carvell (Carleton, N.B.) said the Hydro-Electric Commission pretended to sell the people power for $20 per unit, when they really charged from $60 to $70.

J. E. Armstrong (East Lambton), "Will the hon. gentleman be good enough to give an instance?"

Mr. Carvell named Stratford, Ingersoll, Galt, "and lots more." Stratford would pay $65 to $75 per peak load, transforming and a hundred and one other things.

Andrew Broder (Dundas) believed the company was but the forerunner of a bigger project to come. He objected to the independent right the company would have to cross farms.

Mr. Armstrong defended the Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission and its operations. Stratford would get a full amount of power for $20.48 per h.p., three-quarters for $21.48, and half for $24.04.

J. G. Turiff (Assiniboia) agreed with Major Sharpe that the bill should be referred back to the committee, in order to verify the statements made by Hon. H. R. Emmerson.

R. L. Borden said that the right of the people of Ontario to develop their own natural resources should not be interfered with in Parliament.

Hon. Wm. Pugsley supported the bill and declared that the Ontario Government had already encroached upon the rights of the Dominion. In this case, the Ontario Government had no privilege to develop power on the St. Lawrence, because it was a navigable river, and an international stream.

Mr. Pugsley said that the plans of the St. Lawrence Power Co. to dam the St. Lawrence had been submitted to his department. No plans would be approved which would not protect Canadian interests. Half of any power development must be conserved for Canada, and the Canadian Government would demand the same revenue from the company as is demanded by the State of New York.

Mr. Borden asked if he had any objections to tabling the plans.

Mr. Pugsley said he had not, but that they were not necessary to this bill.

Hon. H. R. Emmerson supported Mr. Borden's requests for plans, and Mr. Borden said he was astonished that Mr. Pugsley had gone so far. Big questions were opened up, and he suggested to the Finance Minister, who was leading the House, that the committee rise.

Supplementary estimates for the current year amounting to $2,302,117, were tabled in the Commons yesterday by Hon. W. S. Fielding. Of this, $1,718,650 is chargeable to consolidated fund, and $500,300 to capital, while the rest covers "unprovided items."

The votes include:

Experimental farms and additional branch stations $25,000.

Port Arthur and Fort William harbor improvements, $36,000.

Tiffin harbor improvements, $23,000.

ONTARIO LEGISLATURE MAY COMPLETE WORK TO-MORROW

Round Robin Asking for an Increase of the Sessional Indemnity Makes its Appearance. But Members Are not Agreed and it Will Probably Fail

Toronto, May 15.—Much work with little of general interest is the tale of yesterday's session of the Legislature.

A wide swath was cut in the order paper, especially in third readings. Twenty-three bills passed the final stage and await the assent of the Lieutenant-Governor.

Ten private bills received their second reading, the only one on the order paper left over being the Toronto bill, which the Premier announced was not complete.

A large number of bills were also passed through the committee stage.

The Premier announced that he had had a conference with the leader of the Opposition, in consequence of which the House would take up the first thing to-day all the contentious bills on the paper. These include, beside the Toronto bill, Mr. Charters' telephone bill, and the two bills introduced by the Premier dealing with the street railway situation.

As the Government seems determined to finish the business of the House to-day and to prorogue on Wednesday, this evidently portends a long and probably stormy session to-day.

Allan Studholme arose in his place to call the attention of the House to a rumor which was going the rounds respecting a certain "round robin," and to the statement in the press that his name appeared thereon. He had not seen any "round robin," and certainly had not signed it.

Sir James Whitney expressed his gratification at the ornithological information imparted to the House by the honorable member.

It is true that robins do appear at this season of the year, he said, "but I have never seen a round one—or a square one either," he added.

This interesting natural history interlude arose out of the agitation for an increased sessional indemnity, most of the members being apparently possessed of the honest conviction that their contribution to the public weal should be valued at $1,500, instead of $1,000 as at present.

The Premier, it was understood, was of the opinion that the increase ought not to go through except by the unanimous consent of the House. Whereupon an attempt was made to round up the necessary consensus of opinion.

It is understood that five members, one Liberal and four Conservatives, stood out against the "salary grab." One, it is said went so far as to threaten to resign his seat rather than be a party to the transaction.

From which it may be gathered, in view of the short time still at the disposal of the "larger indemnity" men, that the members will have to rub along on $1,000 for another year at least.

Allan Studholme privately expressed himself as opposed to the increase, but rather than stand in the way of a popular measure, he would not oppose it. He took the view that the proposed increase would be in the nature of a violation of contract with his constituents. If the increase carried he would take the $1,500 and hand over the additional $500 to the funds of the labor party.

Sir James Whitney introduced a bill to amend the act respecting Government House. It was designed, he said, to enable the Government to carry out the proposed changes.

The clause in the bill of Hon. J. J. Foy, to amend the Judicature Act, in which the number of high court judges to be added to the bench had been left blank, was filled in in committee to provide that there should be three judges in each division of the high court of justice, and two additional unattached high court judges.

Hon. W. J. Hanna's bill "respecting juvenile courts" passed its second reading. It was designed, he said, to allow the authorities to make use of the Children's Aid Society and the machinery already provided for dealing with juvenile delinquents. It was in pursuance of the passing of the Dominion "Juvenile Delinquents' Act," passed in 1908.

In moving the second reading of the bill "Respecting Steam Boilers," Hon. J. O. Reaume stated that it was the outcome of a conference held with representatives of other provinces at Regina. It had been the sad experience of the past that boilers built in Ontario when they reached British Columbia had in many cases to be reconstructed to meet the regulations of that province.

Dr. Reaume's bill provides for regulations regarding materials, modes of construction, tests to be applied and inspection at the factory, which will, with the co-operation of the other provinces, provide standard regulations over the whole Dominion.

Four Cremated in Idaho.

PRESIDENT TAFT IS UNDECIDED

Does Not Know What to do About the Tariff for Canada

Washington, D.C., March 15.—At the end of a four-hour conference with his tariff advisers yesterday, President Taft had not arrived at a decision as to the action he will take with respect to extending to Canada and France the 25 per cent. reduction in tariff rates, which he is allowed to grant to nations that are shown to be not "unduly discriminatory" against the United States.

It is said that the situation with respect to Canada is all but hopeless, and the indications are that the biggest and nearest neighbor of the United States may be the one important country which the maximum rates of the Payne-Aldrich law will have to be applied.

Negotiations looking to a settlement with France are progressing satisfactorily. It is said a new proposal was received from France yesterday, and it was intimated that a settlement by which France may send its products to the United States under the 25 per cent. reduction clause is not unexpected. The negotiations are far from complete, however, and another hitch may occur at any time.

President Taft is charged with deciding from all the facts available just what nations unduly discriminate against the United States and may extend a 25 per cent. reduction in all rates to those nations not included in this unfavorable list.

Canada is said to have made no effort to secure this preferential treatment from the United States.

It is declared, in fact, that the Dominion Government has left no loophole for President Taft to do otherwise than allow the maximum rates automatically to go into effect against imports from that country.

TWENTY-SEVEN DREADNOUGHTS IN THREE YEARS

London, March 15.—Introducing the navy estimates in the House of Commons yesterday, Reginald McKenna, First Lord of the Admiralty, expressed regret that he was unable to hold out any hope for the future of a decline of the estimates.

He defended the present large increase, which he said had been rendered necessary by th building program of foreign nations.

An expenditure of over $200,000,000 was imperative to properly safeguard the security of the country and to provide against contingencies.

Mr. McKenna explains that, counting the Australian and New Zealand ships, which would still be in British waters, Great Britain would have, in the summer of 1912, 22 Dreadnoughts, while in the following January five Dreadnoughts in addition to this year's program, would be added to the fleet, and thus Great Britain's security through this type of ship would be absolutely secure.

Ossining, N.Y., March 15.—Frank Schleiman, the second of two men convicted of the murder of Mrs. Sophie Staber, in Brooklyn, last July, was electrocuted in Sing Sing prison here yesterday. The other was put to death here a few weeks ago.

"I die for burglary only; I never took a human life," was Schleiman's final protest of innocence. "I hope gentlemen, you will forgive me for my mistake. I realize mine now. I die with a clear conscience."

His speech is said to be the longest ever made from the death chair.

This is the second offence for each of them.

Vancouver, B.C., March 15.—From early Sunday evening till noon yesterday, the main line of the C.P.R. was again blocked by snow slides at some half a dozen points, the principal avalanches having occurred at Rogers' Pass, Bear Creek, Cambie, Illecillewaet and Albert Canyon.

The largest slide was at Albert Canyon, where the tracks for some 300 feet were buried under 30 feet of snow and rock.

The train from Montreal, due in Vancouver at noon yesterday, was caught on the eastern side of the slide at Albert Canyon, and will not reach this city till 4 o'clock to-day.

Freshet water rushed down a ravine in Bear River Canyon yesterday and drowned two thousand sheep. The entire herd was overwhelmed within a few minutes.

DOGS CONTINUE IN LIMELIGHT

Woodstock, March 15.—A dog belonging to James Minera, concession 3, Dereham Township, suddenly turned savage, bit its owner, then escaped and ran to a neighboring farm, Austin Miller's, where it got among the cattle, chasing and biting at them. Leaving there the animal went to R. J. Mitchell's place, to whom Miller telephoned, and the hired man loaded a gun and went after the canine. On trying to shoot the gun hung fire, and the dog chased the man into a barn. He escaped, reloaded the gun and shot the dog. It had been frothing heavily at the mouth.

SOME UNUSUAL PROVISIONS IN THE CONTRACT

Ottawa, March 15.—The contract with the New Zealand Shipping Co. of New Zealand for the steamship service between Canadian Atlantic ports and the Antipodes contains some unusual provisions.

The service, which will start this spring, provides for a monthly sailing from Montreal in summer and from St. John, N.B., in winter, with a call at Halifax in the latter case.

The subsidy is to be $10,000 a month. The freight rates from the Canadian Atlantic ports are not to exceed similar rates from Atlantic ports in the United States, and through rates from any interior point in Canada are not to be greater than from a corresponding point in the States. The company contracts, after the first sailing from St. John, N.B., next autumn, to carry at least 5,000 tons of cargo on each outward trip.

The vessels, which have a gross tonnage of 8,000 tons, are to be provided with cold storage of the latest design.

SCIENTISTS WANT TO BE INCORPORATED

Montreal, March 15.—The Christian Scientists are making a big fight to be incorporated in this province. Last session of the Legislature the Assembly passed the bill unanimously. But the council rejected it.

Adelard Turgeon was the champion of the bill, saying that the Catholics of the majority should not reject the bill. They must stand for religious liberty. They had received religious liberty at the hands of a Protestant majority. This year there is to be a bigger attempt and the fight is likely to be bitter.

HOLLANDERS FOR CANADIAN WEST

Winnipeg, March 15.—An advance guard of 500 natives of Holland, who intend settling on the irrigated lands of southern Alberta, arrived here today on a special train from Montreal.

On the same train are 150 from the old country and 75 from Sweden. This afternoon another special will bring in 200 settlers from the old world and some 600 more are en route.

A TARIFF WAR POSSIBLE

The two members of the United States Tariff Commission who visited Ottawa, hold that the commercial treaty between Canada and France is a discrimination against the United States, and if this view is accepted by the United States Government the maximum tariff will be applied to Canada after March 31. The Ottawa correspondent of the Toronto World, referring to this, says:—

"The seriousness of the situation from the point of view of Canada is that a tariff war with the United States might wreck the Laurier Government quicker and more surely than any internal administration of which they might be capable."

If the Laurier Government should sit still and allow the United States Government to increase the already high tariff against Canada without seizing the Canadian tariff against United States imports, the Government would be wrecked, but if the Laurier Government asks Parliament to raise the tariff on American products coming into Canada it cannot be made a party question. Any member of Parliament, whether Conservative or Liberal, who votes against raising the customs tariff on American products will deserve to be deserted when he again appeals to his constituents, and probably will be defeated.

Conservatives may rightly criticize the tangle the Laurier Government is getting the country into by means of its complex tariff system, but they cannot gain political capital by supporting the United States Government in any war of tariffs that may ensue. All Canada should be united in such an emergency.

A DISGRACE TO CANADA

If the Quebec bridge had been successfully completed every Liberal politician and every Liberal newspaper would have given the Laurier Government credit for it. It is fair, therefore, to blame the Government at Ottawa for its collapse, especially in view of the unbusinesslike arrangements made by the Government for the construction of the bridge, arrangements which made the people of Canada responsible for the whole cost of the undertaking, while if it had proved a success a small company of Liberal promoters would have owned it and made immense profits without the investment of any capital.

The Scientific American says in reference to this bridge;—

"Engineering and architectural works of the first magnitude are to no little degree an expression in concrete form of the character of the people by whom they are built. It would be difficult to define the extent to which our impressions of the ancient Greek are based upon the architecture of his noble structures and temples or how far our respect for the later Roman is due to feats of engineering skill that would do credit to our twentieth century civilization. Because of the skill and daring which are, or seem to be involved, the design and erection of bridges of unusual magnitude has ever been considered one of the most difficult. We had almost said spectacular, feats of construction; and the successful erection of such structures has brought world-wide fame to the engineer, and distinct national credit to the country in which the work was done. Thus the Forth Bridge stands to-day as one of the noblest monuments of constructive engineering in the whole of the British empire, and a memorial to the man who was responsible for the design has recently been placed in Westminster Abbey. So, too, our own beautiful and dignified Brooklyn bridge over the East River is a lasting tribute to bridge engineering as individualized in America, and the city of Trenton has recently unveiled a monument to the memory of Roebling, the father of long-span suspension bridges.

But that self-same notoriety, which brings international fame to the man and the people who carry great engineering works to a successful issue, must in the nature of things throw a proportionate shadow of discredit when one of these great structures falls in utter ruin, and, as in the case of the Quebec Bridge, carries nigh upon one hundred souls to destruction."

That is the opinion of an unprejudiced, independent observer. The Scientific American says nothing about the discreditable bargain made by the Government with the Quebec Bridge Company promoters. It judges simply by results.

Unfortunately, if "The Scientific American is right, there is grave danger that the disaster may be repeated on a bigger scale, for that great scientific authority says that the plans for the new Quebec bridge, which is to take the place of the one that collapsed, provide for a structure that will be both ugly and unsafe. In tomorrow's issue of the Review we will publish a synopsis of the Scientific American's severe criticism of the new plans.

MR. DOWNEY'S ADDRESS

Prison reform, as outlined by Mr. J. P. Downey in his address before the Peterborough Canadian Club last night, opens up a wide field of possibilities. Mr. Downey made it clear that those interested in prison reform did not wish to make it easier for the criminal. There is little hope of saving the man who has set his face against his fellows and is bound to live a life of crime. Behind the prison bars all the time is his place. All the persons sent to prison, however, are not confirmed criminals and if a change in our penal system will effect the reformation of a larger number of those committed that does the present system, it is well to give serious consideration to the advisability of making such a change. Men and women are the greatest asset a country has. Canada is in need of industrious, law-abiding citizens and a system that will put those who have gone wrong back on the right path and make them useful members of society cannot come too soon.

Peterborough people testify to this.

Mrs. T. DeRussia, of Mary and Bethune street, Peterborough, Ont., says;—

"I believe Doan's Kidney Pills a remedy of exceptional merit in relieving backache caused from disordered kidneys. I frequently suffered with a dull, heavy pain in the small of my back. It would extend around my sides and into my shoulders. Headaches were frequent and often accompanied by spells of dizziness. Doan's Kidney Pills were recommended by a friend, and I procured a box at Wm. Madill's Pharmacy. I soon found them to relieve me. I have had no trouble since and can credit this only to Doan's Kidney Pills."

The sheep and lamb market was very firm at an advance in prices. Lambs sold at from $7.80 to $8 per cwt.; sheep, ewes, sold at from $5 to $6 per cwt.

Hogs.

Dealers quoted $6.85 for selects, fed and watered, at the market, and $6.60, f.o.b. cars at country points.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, March 14.—(Special.)—At the Montreal Stock Yards West End Market the receipts for last week were 2575 cattle, 375 sheep and lambs, 1700 hogs and 200 calves. The supply this morning consisted of 1000 cattle, 300 sheep and lambs, 1200 hogs and 225 calves.

A feature was the stronger undertone for cattle, and prices for really choice Ontario stall-fed stock show an advance of 10c, due to limited offerings. Supplies of other grades were quite ample, with values unchanged from a week ago. Another feature was the display of some very choice bulls, from 1200 to 2000 lbs., for which demand was fair at 5½c to 6c. Notwithstanding stormy weather, the gathering of buyers was fairly large. A few extra choice stall-fed Ontario steers sold at $6.65 per cwt., while choice brought 6½c to 6¾c; good, 5½c to 6c; fair, 5½c to 5¾c; medium, 4½c to 5c; commons, 4c to 4½c; cows, 3½c to 4½c, and ordinary bulls, 4c to 4c per lb.

Hog prices are still soaring, and show a further advance of 25c per 100 lbs. since this day week, and indications are that they will go still higher, on account of limited supplies. The demand from packers was fairly good, and sales of selected lots were made at $6.50 to $6.75 per 100 lbs., weighed off cars.

The foreign market for Canadian bacon is strong, and cables just to hand from Liverpool, London and Bristol note a further advance of 4s to 5s per cwt., making a net rise within the past two weeks of 8s to 7s.

A feature of the market for small meats is the keen demand from butchers for calves, and, while supplies are steadily increasing, sales of these choice stock, from 130 to 175 lbs., dressed, were made at $8 to $8 each. Consumer once said from the inside figure down to $5.

The butchers complain very much about the system drovers have adopted in dipping of their calves. For instance, if a drover has a lot of fifty head, of which 5 per cent. are not fit for human food, he will not sell any unless the buyer takes the lot, with the chances of having probably half of them condemned by the inspector.

The trade in sheep and lambs was very quiet, and prices ruled firm. A few small lots of yearling lambs were sold at 7c to 7½c, and sheep at 6½c to 6¾c per lb.

East Buffalo Cattle Market.

The Man From Brodney's

By GEORGE BARR M'CUTCHEON

Copyright, 1908, by Dodd, Mead & Co.

"Oh, come now, prince," put in Lord Deppingham; "you know the sort of chap Brabetz is. There are princes and princes, by Jove."

"He's positively vile!" exclaimed the duchess, who would not mince words.

"She's entering upon a hell of a—I mean a life of hell," exploded the duke, banging the table with his fist. "That fellow Brabetz is the rottenest thing in Europe. He's gone from bad to worse so swiftly that public opinion is still months behind him."

"Nice way to talk of the groom," said the host genially. "I quite agree with you, however. I cannot understand the grand duke permitting it to go on unless, of course, it's too late to interfere."

"Poor dear! She'll never know what it is to be loved and cherished," said the marchioness dolefully.

Lord and Lady Deppingham glanced at each other. They were thinking of the man who stood on the dock at Aratat when the King's Own sailed away.

"The grand duke is probably saying the very thing to himself that Brabetz's associates are saying in public," ventured a young Austrian count.

"What is that, pray?"

"That the prince won't live more than six months. He's a physical wreck today and a nervous one too. Take my word for it, he will be a creeping, imbecile thing inside of half a year—locomotor ataxia and all that. It's coming positively with a sharp crash."

"I've heard he has tried to kill that woman in Paris half a dozen times," remarked one of the women, taking it as a matter of course that every one knew who she meant by "that woman."

"She was really responsible for the postponement of the wedding in December, I'm told. Of course I don't know that it is true," said the marchioness, wisely qualifying her gossip. "My brother, the grand duke, does not confide in me."

"Well, my heart bleeds for her," said Deppingham.

"She's going into it with her eyes open," said the prince. "It isn't as if she hadn't been told. She could see for herself. She knows there's the other woman in Paris and— Oh, well, why should we make a funeral of it? Let's do our best to be revelers, not mourners. She'll live to fall in love with some other man. They always do. Every woman has to live at least once in her life—if she lives long enough. Come, come! Let us forget the future of the Princess Genevra and drink to her present!"

"And to her past, if you don't mind, prince," amended Lord Deppingham, looking into his wife's somber eyes.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

THE TITLE CLEAR.

TWO men and a woman stood in the evening glow looking out over the tranquil sea that crept up and licked the foot of the cliff. It was September. Five months had passed since the King's Own steamed away from the harbor of Aratat. The new dispensation was in full effect. During the long, sickening weeks that preceded the coming of the syndicate Hollingsworth Chase toiled faithfully, resolutely, for the restoration of order and system among the demoralized people of Japat.

With the transfer of the company's business his work was finished. Two young men from Sir John's were now settled in Aratat as legal advisers to the islanders, Chase having declined to serve longer in that capacity.

He was now waiting for the steamer which was to take him to Cape Town on his way to England—and home.

The chateau was closed and in the hands of a small army of caretakers. The three widows of Jacob von Blitz were now married to separate and distinct husbands, all of whom retained their places as heads of departments at the chateau, proving that courtship had not been confined to the white people during the closing days of the siege.

The head of the bank was Oscar Armheimer, Mr. Bowles having been deposed because his methods were even more obsolete than his coat of armor.

Selim disposed of his lawful interest in the corporation to Ben Ali, the new cadi, and was waiting to accompany his master to America. It may be well to add that the deal did not include the transfer of Neenah. She was not for sale, said Selim to Ben Ali.

It was of Mr. Bowles that the three persons were talking as they stood in the evening glow.

"Yes, Selim," said the tall man in flannels, "he's a sort of old dog Tray, ever faithful, but not the right kind. You don't happen to know anything of old dog Tray, do you? No? I thought not. Nor you, Neenah? Well, he was"—

"Was he the one who was poisoned at the chateau, excellency?" asked Neenah timidly.

"No, my dear," he replied soberly. "If I remember my history, he died in the seventeenth century or thereabouts. It's really of no consequence, however. Any good, faithful dog will serve my purpose. What I want to impress upon you is this—it is most difficult for a faithful old dog to survive a change of masters. It isn't human nature—or dog nature, either. I'm glad that you are convinced, Neenah. But please don't tell Sahib Bowles that he is a dog."

"Oh, no, excellency!" she cried earnestly.

"She is very close mouthed, sahib," added Selim, with conviction.

"We'll take Bowles to England with us next week," went on Chase dreamily. "We'll leave Japat to take care of itself."

He lighted a fresh cigarette, tenderly fingering it before applying the match.

"I'll smoke one of hers tonight, Selim. See! I keep them apart from the others in this little gold case. I smoke them only when I am thinking. Now, run in. I want to be alone."

They left him, and he threw himself upon the green sod, his back to a tree, his face toward the distant chateau. Hours afterward the faithful Selim came out to tell him that it was bedtime. He found his master still sitting there, looking across the moonlit flat in the direction of a place in the hills where once he had dwelt in marble halls.

"Selim," he said, arising and laying his hand upon his servant's shoulder, his voice unsteady with finality, "I have decided, after all, to go to Paris. We will live there, Selim. Do you understand?" with strange fierceness, a great exultation mastering him. "We are to live in Paris!"

To himself all that night he was saying: "I must see her again! I shall see her!"

A thousand times he had read and reread the letter that Lady Deppingham had written to him just before the ceremony in the cathedral at Thorberg. He knew every word that it contained. He could read it in the dark. She had said that Genevra was going into a hell that no hereafter could surpass in horrors! And that was ages ago, it seemed to him. Genevra had been a wife for nearly three months—the wife of a man she loathed. She was calling in her heart for him to come to her. She was suffering in that unspeakable hell. All this he had come to feel and shudder over in his unspeakable loneliness.

He would go to her. There could be no wrong in loving her, in being near her, in standing by her in those hours of desperation.

A copy of a London newspaper stuffed away in the recesses of his trunk, dated June 20, had come to him by post. It contained the telegraphic details of the brilliant wedding in Thorberg. Every royal family in Europe was represented. The list of noble names seemed endless to him, the flower of the world's aristocracy. How he hated them!

The next morning Selim aroused him from his fitful sleep, bringing the news that a strange vessel had arrived off Aratat. Chase rushed out upon his veranda, overlooking the little harbor.

A long, white, graceful craft was lying in the harbor. He stared long and intently at the trim craft.

"Can I be dreaming?" he muttered, passing his hand over his eyes. "Don't lie to me, Selim! Is it really there?" Then he uttered a loud cry of joy and started off down the slope with the speed of a race horse, shouting in the frenzy of an uncontrollable glee.

It was the Marquis of B.'s white and blue yacht.

* * * * * * * *

Three weeks later Hollingsworth Chase stepped from the deck of the yacht to the pier in Marseilles. The next day he was in Paris, attended by the bewildered and almost useless Selim. An old and valued friend, a campaigner of the wartime days, met him at the Gare de Lyon in response to a telegram.

"I'll tell you the whole story of Japat, Arch, but not until tomorrow," Chase said to him as they drove toward the Ritz. "I arrived yesterday on the Marquis of B.'s yacht, the Cricket. Do you know him? Of course you do. Everybody does. The Cricket was cruising down my way and picked me up—Bowles and me. The captain came a bit out of his way to call at Aratat, but he had orders of some sort from the marquis by cable, I fancy, to stop off for me."

He did not regard it as necessary to tell his correspondent friend that the Cricket had sailed from Marseilles with but one port in view—Aratat. He did not tell him that the Cricket had come with a message to him and that he was answering it in person, as it was intended that he should—a message written six weeks before his arrival in France. There were many things that Chase did not explain to Archibald James.

"You're looking fine, Chase, old man. Did you a lot of good out there. You are as brown as that Arab in the taximeter back there. By Jove, old man, that Persian girl is ripping. You say she's his wife? She's"— Chase broke in upon this far from original estimate of the picturesque Neenah.

"I say, Arch, there's something I want to know before I go to the marquis' this evening. I'm due there with my thanks. He lives in the Boulevard St. Germain—I've got the number all right. Is one likely to find the house full of swells? I'm a bit of a savage just now, and I'm correspondingly timid."

His friend stared at him for a moment.

"I can save you the trouble of going to the marquis," he said. "He and the marchioness are in London at present. Left Paris a month ago."

"What? The house is closed?" in deep anxiety.

"I think not. Servants are all there, I dare say. Their place adjoins the Brabetz palace. The princess is his niece, you know."

"You say the Brabetz palace is next door?" demanded Chase, steadying his voice with an effort.

"Yes—the old Flaubert mansion. The princess was to have been the social sensation of Paris this year. She's a wonderful beauty, you know."

"Was to have been?"

"She married that rotten Brabetz last June, but of course you never heard of it out there in what's-the-name-of-the-place. You may have heard of his murder, however. His mistress shot him in Brussels"—

"Great God, man!" gasped Chase, clutching his arm in a grip of iron.

"The devil, Chase!" cried the other, amazed. "What's the matter?"

"He's dead? Murdered? How—when? Tell me about it!" cried Chase, his agitation so great that James looked at him in wonder.

"Gad, you seem to be interested!"

"I am! Where is she—I mean the princess and the other woman?"

"Cool off, old man. People are staring at you. Brabetz was shot three weeks ago at a hotel in Brussels. He'd been living there for two months, more or less, with the woman. In fact, he left Paris almost immediately after he was married to the Princess Genevra. The gossip is that she wouldn't live with him. She'd found out what sort of a dog he was. They didn't have a honeymoon, and they didn't attempt a bridal tour. Somehow they kept the scandal out of the papers. Well, he hiked out of Paris at the end of a week, just before the 14th. The police had asked the woman to leave town. He followed. Dope fiend, they say. The bride went into seclusion at once. She's never to be seen anywhere. The woman shot him through the head and then took a fine dose of poison. It was a ripping news story. The prominence of the"—

"This was a month ago?" demanded Chase, trying to fix something in his mind. "Then it was after the yacht left Marseilles with orders to pick me up at Aratat."

"What are you talking about? Sure it was, if the yacht left Marseilles six weeks ago. What's that got to do with it?"

"Nothing. Don't mind me, Arch. I'm a bit upset."

"There was talk of a divorce almost before the wedding bells ceased ringing. The grand duke got his eyes opened when it was too late. He repented of the marriage. The princess was obliged to live in Paris for a certain length of time before applying to the courts for freedom. Gad, I'll stake my head she's happy these days!"

Chase was silent for a long time. He was quite cool and composed when at last he turned to his friend.

"Arch, do me a great favor. Look out for Selim and Neenah. Take 'em to the hotel and see that they get settled. I'll join you this evening. Don't ask questions, but put me down here. I'll take another cab. There's a good fellow. I'll explain soon. I'm—I'm going somewhere, and I'm in a hurry."

* * * * * * * *

The voiture drew up before the historic old palace in the Boulevard St. Germain. Chase's heart was beating furiously as he stepped to the curb. The cocher leaned forward for instructions. His fare hesitated for a moment, swayed by a momentary indecision.

"I want you for my husband, dearest."

"Attendre," he said finally. The driver adjusted his register and settled back to wait. Then Chase mounted the steps and lifted the knocker with trembling fingers. He was dizzy with eagerness, cold with uncertainty.

She had asked him to come to her, but conditions were not the same as when she sent the compelling message. There had come into her life a vital break, a change that altered everything. What was it to mean to him?

He stood a moment later in the salon of the old Flaubert palace, vaguely conscious that the room was darkened by the drawn blinds and that it was cool and sweet to his senses. He knew that she was coming down the broad hallway. He could hear the rustle of her gown.

Inconsequently he was wondering whether she would be dressed in black. Then, to his humiliation, he remembered that he was wearing uncouth, travel soiled garments.

She was dressed in white—a house gown, simple and alluring. There was no suggestion of the coronet, no shadow of grief in her manner, as she came swiftly toward him, her hands extended, a glad light in her eyes.

The tall man, voiceless with emotion clasped her hands in his and looked down into the smiling, rapturous face.

"You came!" she said, almost in a whisper.

"Yes. I could not have stayed away. I have just heard that you—you are free. You must not expect me to offer condolences. It would be sheer hypocrisy. I am glad—I am glad! You sent for me—you sent the yacht, Genevra, before—before you were free. I came knowing that you belonged to another. I find you the same as when I knew you first—when I held you in my arms and heard you say that you loved me. You do not grieve—you do not mourn. You are the same, my Genevra—the same that I have dreamed of and suffered for all these months. Something tells me that you have descended to my plane. I will not kiss you, Genevra, until you have promised to become my wife."

"Hollingsworth, I cannot, I will not blame you for thinking ill of me," she said. "Have I fallen in your eyes? I wanted you to be near me. I wanted you to know that when the courts freed me from that man I would be ready and happy to come to you as your wife. I am not in mourning today, you see. I knew you were coming. As God is my witness, I have no husband to mourn for. He was nothing to me. I want you for my husband, dearest. It was what I meant when I sent out there for you—that and nothing else."

CONVENTION AT OTTAWA MAY BE POSTPONED

Ottawa, March 14.—From all parts of the country pressure is being brought to bear upon the Conservative members to arrange a postponement of the convention until some date later than June. The convention was called for June, but the Western Conservatives cannot be ready for it, nor can many of the rural constituencies be represented. It is urged that it would not be wise to hold the gathering until a thorough representation of all sections of the country and all shades of thought can be assured. The whole question will be taken into consideration in a few days by the committee having the matter in charge.

Some Appetizing Samples

Mr. A. G. Carruthers, the local agent of the Dominion Express Co., showed some exceptionally fine samples of home grown mushrooms to the Review to-day. They were grown from the spawn in a bed in Mr. Carruthers' furnace cellar and are of even conformation with the dark pink on the lower side that indicates the perfectly healthy and palatable mushroom.

Plans for the new armory at Niagara Falls have been made.

WATCH AND MONEY WERE RETURNED

Charge Against Thos. Newhall of Peddling Without a License Was Dismissed

Thomas Newhall answered to his name this morning at the police court court and pleaded not guilty to the charge that he last week peddled in the city without a license. After hearing the evidence the Magistrate discharged the defendant.

James Anderson and Sandy Trotter told of how Newhall had met them in the Crown Hotel and offered to sell them a watch. He had stated that it was worth $30, but had been willing to take $4 for it. Anderson paid $1 and Trotter $2. The remaining $1 was to have been paid later.

The Magistrate did not think there was any evidence of peddling and dismissed the case.

There followed a scramble for the possession of the watch. Each of the three principals and a friend of Newhall's, was of the opinion that one or the other was about to get the short end of the deal, but the parley ended by the three dollars and the watch being returned to the former owners.

FEW STOP AT PETERBOROUGH

Large Number of Immigrants Passing Through the City

So far this spring Peterborough has not had many new arrivals from the Old Country. A large number of immigrants have passed through the city on the C. P. R. during the past two weeks, the majority of them having tickets for Toronto. If the new-comers cared to work on farms a large number of them could secure employment in the country around Peterborough.

At the conclusion of the musical numbers progressive euchre was played until near midnight, when refreshments were served. Those taking part in the programme were Miss Montgomery, who gave a humorous reading, Mr. J. Mercer, who rendered a solo and Mr. Waring gave a reading. The proceeds will be devoted to charity.

UP TO THE HILL FOR TWO WEEKS

Vags Who Were Unruly on Geo. St., Will Take a Light Diet for a Change

George Jarrett and William White, two pals, were gathered in by the police last evening, and charged with being vags, on appearing before the magistrate this morning. Both drank too deeply of the cup of joy yesterday, and their performances on George street, while amusing to the passerby, fell under the ban of the blue coats.

Jarrett's head looked as though something more delicate than a lawn mower had been called into action, for there was no bing to show in the line of hair. He stated that he only drifted into the city yesterday and was on his way to Campbellford, where he expected to find work.

"There are about forty cords of wood up on the hill which needs to be cut, and there is a scarcity of help," quote the chief. The magistrate did not think it wise to have many men up there together, as it might result in a strike, but thought a two weeks' visit would not cause any friction.

"Better give him a month," advised the chief.

"Well, which do you prefer, George?" asked his Worship.

"Fifteen days is enough, thank you" replied George.

Billy admitted being a pal of Jarrett's.

"I am on my way to Cobourg to get a job on a boat," said he.

"Well, it would be a pity to separate them," was the comment of the magistrate, as he marked each down for a term of two weeks.

About thirty persons from Peterborough and district left for the West this afternoon on the C.P.R. It was regular Tuesday settlers' excursion to the Canadian West.

It is learned that there will be quite an exodus of Peterborough people to the western provinces this spring.

REPORTS WERE ENCOURAGING

At Annual Meeting of 57th Regiment Committees Were Appointed

The annual meeting of the 57th Regiment, held last evening in the officers' mess rooms, at the Armories, was marked by great interest and enthusiasm. All the officers were present and the affairs of the regiment were interestingly discussed. Col. Stevenson the commanding officer, was in the chair. The reports of the various committees were presented and adopted. They were all of an encouraging nature. A special committee, consisting of Captains McWilliams and V. Eastwood was appointed to communicate with the Board of Education and the City Council for arranging a systematic plan of beautifying Central Park. Upon the recommendation contained in the report of the Rifle Committee, it was decided to at once form a Garrison Shooting League, which would take up aiming, drills, judging distances, and other competitions. In this regard the importance of shooting was emphasized. The Garrison Athletic Association reported much enthusiasm in indoor baseball, bowling and tennis.

The Commanding Officer stated that he had received a communication from Kingston, informing him that an officer would be sent here for the purpose of examining all rifle ranges with a view to equipping one at an early date. Col. Stevenson also read another communication from headquarters, applications to Lieuts. Higgins, Lech, Langford and Cameron, to proceed to Toronto for the purpose of taking a special course at the Royal School of Instruction. The class will open on the 25th inst.

MUCH INTEREST IN MEETINGS

Being Held in Bethany Tabernacle —Mr. Woodberry Will Speak To-night

The meetings in Bethany Tabernacle are still going on with increased interest and blessing. On Sunday the addresses given were deeply spiritual and heart searching. Yesterday afternoon Mr. Woodberry spoke on the Evangelizing of China and the coming again of Christ. In the evening Mr. Richards, whose messages were so much blessed to many who heard them, spoke on "Ye stiffnecked and uncircumcised in heart and ears, ye do always resist the Holy Ghost." He spoke of many conditions and habits of life which show that people are doing this continually, bringing everlasting sorrow and ruin upon themselves.

This evening Mr. Woodbury, who has spent fifteen years in China, and travelled in fifteen out of the eighteen provinces, will speak of his work and experiences in that land. In writing of his work, some of the home papers have called it "The Marvel of Missions." During his ministry in Tientsin, twenty-one graduates of the Medical College were converted, many of them being from official families. Many of these afterwards were engaged in evangelistic work, one of them, the late Dr. Y. S. Lee, being so much used of God that he was called "The Moody of China."

The Rev. H. L. Stephens, of Toronto, is expected to speak to-morrow afternoon at three o'clock, and Rev. Mr. Richards will speak in the evening.

Mr. Wright pointed out that it was the duty of all to strengthen in every way the bonds that bind scattered Britain beyond the seas to the people of the old Country.

PRISONS SHOULD BE REFORMATIVE AS WELL AS PUNITIVE IN NATURE

Mr. J. P. Downey, M. P. P., Deals With Prison Reform in Address Before the Canadian Club—What Has been Accomplished at Elmira and Mansfield Prisons —Advantages of the Indeterminate Sentence

The day is past when we can divide society into two classes and say, "Here is one class that must be confined in the prisons and here is the other class that are to have their liberty."

You and I know men that are walking the streets to-day who if they had their just deserts, would be behind prison bars.

Perhaps you and I, if we had been subjected to the same temptation under the same conditions, would be in the same place as the men in Kingston penitentiary, who are wearing the striped clothes and who have the chains clanking around their ankles.

I have often thought that the sentence a man gets from a judge or magistrate depends a good deal on the condition of the judge's liver at the time the sentence is given.

The indeterminate sentence system has many advantages over the definite sentence system now in vogue in Ontario.

The above were some of the terse sentences of Mr. J. P. Downey, M.P.P., of Guelph, in his eloquent address before the Peterborough Canadian Club at the Hotel National last night. His subject was "Prison Reform," and he dealt with it in a manner that won the hearty approval of the members of the club, a large number of whom were in attendance. Mr. Downey has made a study of this important problem and as a result of his address the thoughts of those present last night have been turned in a direction to which they devoted very little consideration in the past. He showed how many improvements could be made to the present system of reformative methods in Ontario, and outlined a system that has been found to give splendid satisfaction in the United States and some other countries.

The president of the club, Mr. H. R. H. Kenner, was in the chair and introduced the speaker of the evening with a few appropriate remarks. The club was fortunate in having secured Mr. Downey to address one of the meetings.

Mr. Downey expressed his pleasure at having an opportunity to address the Peterborough Canadian Club and to meet the members. He referred to the good work the Canadian Clubs were doing in promoting Canadian sentiment. "I have always been of the opinion," said Mr. Downey, "that we in this country can best serve this country by cherishing the traditions that have been handed down to us from the races from which we have sprung. This is what the Canadian Clubs are doing."

Apropos of the Learness to St. Patrick's Day, Mr. Downey, touched on the glorious traditions of the men from the Emerald Isle and the important part played by Irishmen in the history of the world."

The question of prison reform was a simple problem presented in a simple way, Mr. Downey said. It was a question about which there was a good deal of misconception. There was hardly any good reason for this. It was a plain question and one that should be easily understood. Prison reform did not mean any more consideration for the criminal. In fact those interested in the question believed that the hardened criminal should not be at large at all. He had no right to be at liberty with his fellows. Mr. Downey laid down the principle that a criminal is punished when he is sent to prison; he should not be punished when he is there if he conforms to and obeys the regulations of the institution.

The speaker traced the growth of prison reform in an interesting manner, referring to the good work done by John Howard, the English Commoner, throughout Europe in the first half of the eighteenth century. He pleaded for safer, more humane and more civilized methods of dealing with prisoners. The prisons of Europe were in a terrible condition at that time and improvements were made in Bavaria and Spain before reform came in England. In fact it was not till the middle of the nineteenth century that the seed sown by John Howard began to take root in England. Prison reform had been adopted in the United States in the latter part of the last century. The speaker made special reference to the reformatories at Elmira and Mansfield. New systems had been adopted then and great work had been done. Attention was paid to the reformative as well as to the primitive side of prison life.

There should be the corrective side of prison life, and that was what was aimed at at the Elmira and Mansfield prisons. The prisoner should be told when he enters the prison that he should make use of every minute of the period of his incarceration to improve himself and put himself in a position that when he becomes once more a free man he can go out into the world, begin new again, live down the old taint, and become a useful citizen. (Cheers.)

At the two prisons mentioned above there were three grades in connection with the life of the inmates.

The prisoner comes in on the second grade, and his conduct for the first six months will determine whether he moves up to the first grade or go down to the third grade. If his conduct is exemplary, if he is industrious in the classes and at the trade at which he is placed, he is placed in the first grade, when he will have different clothing and slightly better food than in the second grade. If he has black marks against him he goes back into the third grade. After getting into the first grade the prisoner can apply to the Institutional Parole Board, and if he is successful he is given more liberty, being allowed to work on the prison farm, and even to visit the nearby town. After that, if he has obeyed the regulations, he can be paroled by the State Parole Board, who will assist him to secure a position. If he fulfills the regulations enforced by the State Parole Board for a year, he is given his unconditional liberty.

The indeterminate sentence system is used, and Mr. Downey claimed that it had many advantages over the definite sentence system. Under the indeterminate system there is a maximum and minimum limit on the sentence for each crime, and the authorities at the prison have the right to say how long a man shall serve. Under the definite sentence system different judges gave different sentences for the same offence, and the result is that when the prisoners get together at the central institution and compare notes they are more prejudiced than ever against society. In Massachusetts, under the indeterminate sentence and parole system, eighty per cent. of those released from the prisons had never come into the hands of the law again. This was a splendid record, and it was duplicated in many other States of the Union.

In closing, Mr. Downey said that the reclaiming of men and women was of more importance to Canada than the building up of riches out of her great natural resources. Prison reform was a great work, and deserved serious consideration.

A vote of thanks to Mr. Downey was moved by Mr. J. H. Burnham and seconded by Mr. D. W. Dumble, police magistrate. Mr. Burnham referred incidentally to the great work of the Children's Aid Societies, and Mr. Dumble agreed with Mr. Downey on the good that could be accomplished by the humane treatment of prisoners. Mr. Dumble favored the birch rod for juvenile offenders.

The vote of thanks was gracefully acknowledged by Mr. Downey, and the meeting closed with the National Anthem.

THREE MONTHS IN COUNTY JAIL WITH HARD LABOR

Was Sentence Meted Out to Young Man Who Was Proven Guilty of the Charge of Having Robbed Nelson Shaughnwhite of $6.00 in the Bar-room of a Hotel Yesterday.

Magistrate Dumble sounded a note of warning at the police court this morning when he committed a young man to the county jail for a term of three months with hard labor, after he decided that the evidence produced was sufficient to warrant him finding the prisoner guilty of the charge against him—that of robbing Nelson Shaughnwhite in a local hotel yesterday afternoon of $6, by taking it from his trousers' pocket. His Worship said that he had no doubt but that the prisoner was one of the gang of young thieves in the city who take advantage of the condition of drunken men and rob them of their money. There were other names mentioned in the evidence this morning. Some of these young fellows, well known to themselves are not a credit to the city or their parents, and it would be well for them to call a halt and make up their minds to get into the race on the straight and narrow path.

Shaughnwhite, in narrating the facts of the robbery, explained that he had that day been paid the sum of $17.32 as wages due him for work done at the waterworks dam. Of this amount he paid $7 for board. In the afternoon he was in the bar-room of the hotel drinking, and the prisoner was one of the number at the bar. Taking two one-dollar bills and a five-dollar bill from his pocket, he placed one of the one-dollar bills on the bar as payment for a treat which he had given, and returned the other two notes to his pocket. Shortly afterwards he felt a hand in his pocket, and, turning to the prisoner, who stood next to him, asked him what he was doing. The prisoner replied that he did not have his hand in his pocket. Immediately afterwards he felt in his pocket and found that his money was gone. On being charged with the theft the prisoner denied having stolen the money and offered to allow a search of his clothes being made. Later he met the prisoner in another hotel, and on demanding that his money be returned, the alleged thief wanted to fight.

Two witnesses called by the prosecution swore that they saw the prisoner put his hand in Shaughnwhite's pocket, but neither could say that he abstracted any money. One of the witnesses was standing at the bar and the other immediately behind the informant and prisoner.

For the defence, a brother of the prisoner was called, but he did not furnish any evidence of material value. Against the evidence given by the previous witnesses, he stated that he did not see his brother put his hand in Shaughnwhite's pocket, although standing behind both men.

The prisoner, on his own behalf, went into the box and swore that he did not commit the theft.

Another charge of having escaped from the custody of P. C. McGinity, to which the prisoner pleaded guilty, was not pressed.

A "Lady Mayoress."

The Lady-Mayoress of Montreal for the next two years will be Miss Guerin, sister of the mayor. Dr. Guerin, who has been mistress of his home since the death of his wife. Miss Guerin is well-known socially, and entertains her friends from time to time at an extremely pleasant little tea or afternoon musicale, rather than at one or two big assemblies. She is one of the leading members of the Women's Branch of the Antiquarian Society, for which she has written interesting sketches of the early days in Lower Canada's history, and she has also contributed articles to periodicals. Like many Montreal women, Miss Guerin does much for charity and for the cause of the poor and unfortunate. Dr. Guerin's young daughter, Miss Carroll Guerin, who was a debutante last year, will assist her aunt in her duties as Lady-Mayoress. The mayor's residence is one of some half-dozen fine homes on Edgehill avenue, off Dorchester west.

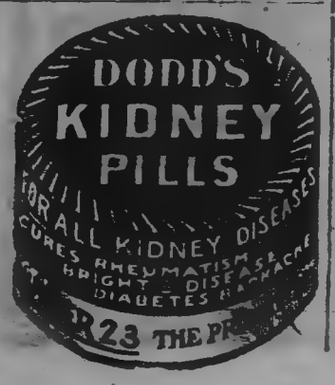
Construction Wanted.

What is wanted now is rapid naval construction. For some years to come Britain will doubtless be able to keep pace in construction with her chief rival, and, if need be, new facilities for construction can be rapidly provided if orders are received from the over-sea Dominions. Canada should give such an order as will comply with the suggestions of the admiralty—an order that will include a first-class armored cruiser which would be a factor that would count for something in a naval engagement.—Hamilton Herald.

Hecklers at English Elections.

The most systematic method of dealing with the questions of election hecklers was devised by the late Sir John Rigby, who was Solicitor-General in the British Administration of 1892. When he was a Parliamentary candidate he was accustomed to make a note of the questions that were put to him, and then, after reading them again to the audience, he would settle half-a-dozen of them at once. His answer would be something like this: "To the first question I answer, No; the second, Yes; the third, No; the fourth I do not comprehend, and I do not suppose the questioner does either; the fifth I will consider when I see the Bill; as to the sixth, Certainly not."

The result was that, while Sir John could not be accused of evasion, both the audience and the hecklers themselves were unable to realize at the moment what his replies really amounted to, and had to wait until the paper the next morning gave them an opportunity of sifting out questions and answers.



AT THE GALLERY DINNER.

Old Time Journalist Tells of Early Days In the House.

At the Press Gallery dinner in Ottawa recently, one of the old-timers who prides himself upon having been present on every occasion "ever since there was a Gallery dinner," talked of the gatherings of the press men and their friends.

"It must have been back in 1883 or so that the late Hon. Thomas White was the guest of honor at a gallery dinner. He was given this place by reason of the fact that his son, R. S. White, universally and fraternally known as 'Bob' White, now collector of customs at Montreal, was the president and ex-officio chairman of the dinner. The Honorable Tom, then one of the old-timers in journalism, gave a reminiscent speech, going back to interesting events which occurred, as he said, 'before the gentleman who presides over this festive board was born.' A feature of that dinner was a song by the guest of the evening, sung in a pleasant tenor voice and enthusiastically chorussed by the company. The song was a ditty popular in that day, 'McSorley's Twins.'

"At a later banquet, another singer who aroused great enthusiasm was also a Montreal man, the late Judge Curran. The dinner was not so bright as press dinners usually are, but when Judge Curran took hold, and, in rollicking voice, and with just a touch of the brogue, sang 'Old King Cole,' everybody woke up, and from that time on the dinner went with a swing which made it one of the most successful ever held.

"For many years, no dinner was quite complete without a speech by the late Nicholas Flood Davin. His finest effort was in a big dinner at the Russell House, about 1890. Burlesque speeches had been chosen for the speakers, and Davin covered himself with glory by a delightful burlesque on 'The Emancipated Intellect.'

"The dinner at which this speech was made was notable, and probably unique, for one reason. It was attended by the Governor-General, at that time Lord Stanley of Preston, now the Earl of Derby. The president of that year, the late T. P. German, had taken it upon himself to invite the Governor-General, and, to the consternation of those who feared that the dinner would be suddenly turned from a convivial gathering into a state function, Lord Stanley promptly accepted the invitation.

"The only hope of those who enjoyed the pleasant freedom of these dinners, was that the Governor-General, when he had responded to his own health and shown a polite interest in his hosts, would gracefully relieve the gathering from the restraint of his official presence. But it turned out quite differently. There was no man at the table who seemed to enjoy better the speeches and songs and conversation than the jovial governor. It was not long before the press men realized that Stanley had appeared without his official robes. He was accepted for the good fellow that he was, he stayed 'until the last dog was hung,' and departed protesting to the president and other members of the gallery that he had not had a pleasanter evening during his stay in Canada.

"There is one institution connected with the press dinner which, to the delight of all the members of the gallery, still stands unimpaired. this institution is the speech of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. In the old days, when a slim, thoughtful, young man, Wilfrid Laurier, a leading member of the Opposition, afterwards leader of the Opposition, sat, as a rule, on the left of the chairman. There was no speech that was more heartily received, for it was understood by all that the gallery dinner was an occasion that Laurier loved and enjoyed. And now, the grey-haired veteran statesman is always the chief guest, and has the place of honor. His speeches on these occasions are never reported, for it is one of the standing rules of the gallery that, as the boys jokingly put it, 'reporters are not admitted.' The speech is always brief, it is nearly always reminiscent, but it is graceful, witty, and, as ever, it seems to be the expression of the speaker's true heart and mind.

"The present leader of the Opposition, Mr. R. L. Borden, is following in the footsteps of his predecessor in that position in his regular attendance at the press gallery dinner, and there is no man who seems to have a better time while there. And no man makes a better speech than does the courteous, thoughtful, virile leader of the Conservatives in the House of Commons."

"ONE OPERA CLOAK, $250."

High Handed Methods Won Where Meekness Had Failed.

By FRANCESS GROFF.

Miss Lilian Fairweather's state of mind was far from pleasant as she sat in one of Schenck & Schenck's stuffy little fitting rooms. Nicholas the meek, Nicholas the downtrodden, had turned. The words of his letter stood out vividly before her eyes:

Jacob served seven years for Rachel and then got her sister. I have served five years, see no hope of getting you in seven, and you have no sister. Unless you say yes in a week to the question I have asked you so often I sail on the Mesaba for Europe. Remember, at a signal from you I shall turn back at the last moment, but my terms are unconditional surrender.

Nicholas had been the subject of gibes, both to his face and behind his back. One that she had coined she gave current issue among her friends because she fancied it was clever.

"Church on Sunday, theater Monday, flowers Tuesday, candy Wednesday, new book Thursday, dinner Friday, dead sick on Saturday of Nicholas Purdy."

It did not seem so clever to her now after a week during which there had been no one to carry her prayer book to church, no one to take her to first night performances, no flowers, no candy, no books, no dinners, no Nicholas Purdy, but there had been a wearied feeling. Much to her own surprise, she found that she missed the man more than his attentions.

This was the day of sailing for the Mesaba. From some feeling—curiosity, of course—she knew the pier from which it started, the car lines leading to it and the time it took to get there. She certainly would not give in to him, especially after the insolent tone of the letter. Yet it was from a fear that she might so far forget herself as to go down to the dock and lose her supremacy over Nicholas forever that had brought her here. Her suit very opportunely needed alteration. Miss Macy, the head fitter, had hurried off with it, promising to seek something to throw around her form a few minutes till it was ready.

Then a girl had appeared with a gorgeous pink opera cape. Such raiment was far beyond the slender means of the struggling artist, but for once she forgot to revel in its richness. She was looking anxiously at her watch. Three-quarters of an hour and then the Mesaba would clear her docks.

She pounded on the door. Miss Macy hustled in. "I'm so sorry, Miss Fairweather. I've been delayed with some customers. You shall have your dress shortly."

"But I must have it at once!"

"Impossible!" And Miss Macy bustled off.

Lilian was now frantic.

She caught the next girl that passed.

"Give me a dress, any kind of a dress!"

A moment later she was tearing a price mark off a sloppy dress of a dirty chocolate color. She rushed into it, quite unmindful of the fact that it was two sizes too large, long waisted and bulging at the hips. Throwing the opera cape around her, she stuck on her blue hat and rushed madly from the store.

She hailed a passing cab. "Five dollars if you get me to pier 17 before the Mesaba sails!"

It seemed an eternity until she was rushing down the long wooden shed. Pushing aside the man who demanded her ticket, she ran up the gangplank, and her feet had scarcely left it when it was withdrawn. No Nicholas was in sight. She approached the steward and asked him where Mr. Purdy's stateroom was. He replied that no such party was booked.

Then Lilian gave a gasp. She ran to the end of the steamer nearest the dock only to find what the vessel had begun to move. She uttered a cry, which attracted the attention of a youngish man sitting on the piles at the corner of the pier hanging his heels over the water.

He jumped up and whistled, for he realized the full enormity of the situation. She was going, and he was to be left behind. The ocean would separate them, besides a sea of misunderstandings. His bluff had worked beyond his expectations.

He ran to the steamer's starting place and found a stout commercial looking man in a state of great excitement bargaining with the owner of a small tug to take him to the outgoing steamer. Nicholas joined forces with him. A common object—to catch the steamer—bound them together.

The thing was all arranged in a few minutes. They quickly got alongside and hailed the steamer.

There was already great excitement aboard the Mesaba. A woman in a dirty brown gown, a pink opera cloak and a blue hat was begging hysterically to be taken back to land.

The captain saw peace for him when he perceived the tug. The steamer stopped, and Lilian was transferred to meet her shameless lover and the justly indignant costumer. She began to upbraid the former when the commercial men interfered:

"Easy now, easy. What about my $250 wrap, not to mention the dress? I see you have damaged the cloak so we can't take it back. Now, how do know you can pay for it?"

Poor Lilian! Two hundred and fifty dollars on demand! Her cheeks burned as she faltered, "I can't."

"Well, then, I will have you arrested for grand larceny!" cried the irate Mr. Schenck.

But Nicholas now interrupted angrily. "How do you dare, sir, to speak so to my wife?"

"Your wife? She is Miss Fairweather, and we have her name on our books."

"My wife. We were starting for Europe today, but were both detained, as you see."

Despair and rage and thankfulness mingled in poor Lilian's mind. But she acknowledged to herself that Nicholas had taken the only way out of the difficulty and caught at the proffered suggestion.

"Miss Macy took my dress to fix it and kept it until I knew I should miss the steamer." And she burst into tears.

"Now, sir, do you understand, and will you accept my check for $250? I will send it tomorrow. You know me, I think, Nicholas Purdy of the firm of Purdy & Bros."

"Yes, sir. I thank you, sir, and I beg the lady's pardon. I did not know she was Mrs. Purdy."

"Well, that's settled. Here are our two cabs. You go in one, my wife and I in the other."

With the look of a loving and obedient wife Lilian staggered into the cab. Once inside, her expression underwent an astonishing change. There were several moments of silence, while the storm gathered fury and broke.

"Scoundrel! Liar! To harrow my feelings for a week, to get me down like this and then to find it was all a bluff! I might have known you would not have spirit enough to do it!"

"I like you when you're mad. But if I were you, Lil, I wouldn't take on so in that thing. High tragedy and it don't agree. By the way, the cloak's mine. I might strip it from you and expose you to the public gaze in the other enormity."

"Oh, you are too bad! I suppose you think you have bought me with your $250!"

"I wish I could, were it a thousand times that amount—I mean your heart, my dear, and I know money can't buy that."

Silence for a few moments.

"You'll acknowledge, Lilian, the situation was awkward. Didn't I do the only thing I could do?"

"Oh, oh, oh, dear!" sobbing. "It's all been too much!"

"That's right, little girl; lean your head against me. That's where it ought to have been long ago, if only I had had the right sort of spunk."

"What do you call the exhibition you are giving me, then?"

"Well, little girl, I don't see what else I can do. When fair words for five years will not win a girl and yet a man finds that she does not care for him a little he is going to get her the way he can. You have shown me that the only way is to take possession as the savages do."

Ten minutes later the cab drew up in front of the boarding house where Miss Lilian Fairweather occupied a fourth floor back room.

"Goodby, savage," then to herself as she mounted the stairs: "It is not so bad to be taken possession of. I do like a masterful man!"

Designed For a Profession.

It was impossible to shake James Martin's self esteem or satisfaction in any way. He had not been the Willowville shoemaker for twenty-eight years to acquire modesty. "I'm glad to hear your boy Willie's got a chance to teach in the college your money put him through," he said loftily to a summer resident as he sewed in the tongue of her shoe. "I always thought he'd be a good one for such a job."

"You did?" said the lady indifferently.

"I certainly did," and James Martin looked at her from his seat on the bench as from a pinnacle of wisdom. "I said to a number of folks after one or two conversations with him as to his prospects when he's just through high school—I said, 'Take a young feller like him that can't tell kid from pebble goat without you point out the difference, and best thing for him would be a so called profession,' I said, 'where he could make use of books, have 'em handy and not trust his own intellects, brain powers nor judgment except in extreme cases, such as would seldom or never occur.'

"That's what I said then, and I say it now, ma'am."—Exchange.

An Intelligent Dog.

A gentleman once had a very handsome and intelligent collie in his possession. One day he lost the dog when taking it through the city. The creature in vain searched everywhere for his master and at last, seeing a hansom cab creeping leisurely along, jumped into it and settled himself determinedly on the seat. The driver tried to entice it out, but without success, and a little crowd collected. None dared to tackle the dog, but at last a facetious spectator shouted, out of say, Bill, darn me if he don't want to be druv home!" "That's it; that's what he wants," they all agreed amid shouts of laughter. Then one examined his collar and found an address clearly engraved upon it. Without further ado cabby jumped up and drove up to this same address, which proved to be the correct one. Needless to say, the cabman was substantially rewarded. The dog had been in the habit of driving home every evening with his master in a hansom and, with doggie reasoning, had decided to follow his usual custom when he had given up hope of finding his master.—London Opinion.

Keeping Tally With Sticks.

Many correspondents have dug into their memories for the survival of the notched stick as tally, which the exchequer has now renounced. "While staying with some friends not far from Rouen," writes one, "I noticed that the baker brought with him a number of sticks tied together at one end, one for each customer. The customer had one also, and, producing the stick, the baker put it with its corresponding stick and notched it." So the accounts were kept. They are kept in a similar way by the tallymen in the Kentish hop gardens.—London Chronicle.

"Dick" Seddon's Manoeuvre.

The approaching resignation of Lord Plunket, who has been Governor of New Zealand since 1904, recalls an amusing manoeuvre on the part of the late Mr. Seddon, when his lordship first arrived to take up his appointment. Had there been any interval between the departure of Lord Ranfurly, Lord Plunket's predecessor, and Lord Plunket, Chief Justice Sir Robert Stout would have been sworn in as acting governor. Mr. Seddon and Sir Robert were old political rivals. "King Dick" was determined that Sir Robert should not be his "boss" even for twenty-four hours. He, therefore, so arranged matters that when Lord Ranfurly was steaming out of the harbor of Wellington Lord Plunket was steaming in.

Our Oldest Freemason.

Dr. Kingdon, of Heavitree, Exeter, England, who has recently reached his ninety-seventh year, is said to be the oldest Freemason in the world. Dr. Kingdon was initiated into the Edinburgh Lodge, Canongate, Kilwinning, No. 2, in the year the late Queen came to the throne, so that he has both long membership and ripe age to his record.

Insurance Companies Lose About $125,000.00 by the Wreck at Spanish River

Double Liability for About Twenty-five Persons

A loss of somewhere in the neighbourhood of $125,000 is what the Accident Insurance Companies estimate the wreck at Spanish River bridge means to them.

They figure that about 25 of those who met death carried Accident Insurance, and the average insurance, according to the tables, is $5,000. In case of death in a railway disaster there is a double liability, making the figure $6,000, or $5,000 to be more conservative.

Their loss may total more than that, for the commercial travellers, a number of whom were killed, usually carry very heavy insurances. In addition, some of the companies make the policies payable on the death of the wife while travelling, though the policy is taken out in the husband's name. In such cases they pay the husband the same amount as they would have paid the wife were the husband killed.

We issue the BEST Accident and Sickness policy offered to the public.

WHOLE COUNTRY AMAZED

AT "FRUIT-A-TIVES."

Wonderful Cure Made by These Remarkable Fruit Juice Tablets.

Moorefield Magistrate Says "The Days of Miracles Are Not Passed."

His cure seems a wonderful thing to his family and all his friends.

Mr. Henry Speers, the well-known J.P. of Moorefield, Ont., suffered for two years with Chronic Indigestion and Dyspepsia, which brought on a serious Heart Trouble. He wasted away until he was nothing more than a skeleton. Two physicians gave him up to die.

Then his son made him try "Fruit-a-tives" and now Mr. Speers is entirely well. NOVELTY IN CENTERPIECE.

A Design That May Be Used For a Chair.

This table center is a piece designed specially so it may be adapted to a cushion, table cover, chair back—in fact, anything which may lend itself to the use of this easy, quickly made and effective piece of work.

The whole charm of this work is in the regularity of the stitches and the art of shading. The simplicity of the stitches is such that any child may attempt it and prove her skill in handling the needle.

Many different materials may be used on which to do the work, the new square canvas in two colors lending itself splendidly to the various decorative schemes. Perforated cloth may also be used with advantage, but quite plain material answers the purpose effectively, and that is why no squares have been marked outside the design.

The work is much easier when done on the square canvas in two colors.

The middle of the material must be carefully found, not only by folding in four and marking exactly the double folded corners, but by measuring or counting the squares. The middle can then be temporarily stitched with a French knot or some other simple device, so one is able to quickly count up from the center.

From this point begin to work the squares as they appear on the design, using the medium shades.

To work the squares the needle is drawn at regular intervals from the sides to the center of each one in star fashion, the pretty effective design of right angle stitch being a mechanical part of the work, shaping by itself, as the threads meet the same point from one square to the other.

When the center part of the design is completed four spider wheels are worked at each corner in black and red, the spider being worked in rich dark red, No. 42°. This is done by taking a long stitch with the black thread from the four corners to the center of each square and again with the four sides. The red is then passed over and under each strand, making a kind of back stitch which gives when finished a pretty embossed effect like a thick cord. This is continued until

The other four corners are worked in cross stitch in a pale pink shade, No. 123°, the half squares in black.

The border is done entirely in spider wheels, the spokes in black and the work in shaded pink, the featherstitching framing them being also in black.

This design can be followed in all sorts of different colors or dark green substituted for the black, but worked as described. The contrast is in exceedingly good taste, and the effect is artistic, especially if the finished article be lined with pink Japanese silk, with a frill to match, headed by a thin black silk cord, ending at each corner with a large soft tassel of mixed pink, green and black silk.

Toast as Medicine.

"Did you ever wonder why toast is recommended for invalids?" said a doctor. "The reason is that toast is predigested bread.

"What makes fresh bread trying for invalids is the starch in it.

"Starch is very hard to digest. It needs a good stomach to take hold of the soggy starch in bread and change it to strengthening, stimulating dextrin.

"But when you cut bread thin and toast it brown the fire itself changes the starch to dextrin. That, in fact, is what the brown color in toast indicates—that the starch is gone and dextrin has taken its place. The stuff is predigested.

"So we feed our invalids on toast, a dish as thoroughly predigested as any of the most famous breakfast foods."

Stale Bread.

A loaf of stale bread can be wrapped in a wet towel, placed in a steamer and steamed tender.

Cold biscuits left from breakfast can be toasted, or a good method is to hastily dip them into water, place in a bread pan and heat in the oven.

Very old bread should be crumbled and added to breakfast cakes and served with maple sirup.

Old bread, broken into small pieces and dampened with milk, makes a good pudding placed in alternate layers with tart apples. Dot with butter, cinnamon or nutmeg, sweeten, cover with milk and bake.

Air and Sunshine.

Nothing is more sunny to be relied upon to secure a fresh and healthy complexion than pure air and sunshine. Allow every ray of sunshine that strikes the window of the sleeping apartment to enter the room. Keep the window always open and invariably [illegible] the hours of sleep.

Peral gray, apricot and tan-colored gloves are fast supplanting white for dressy afternoon wear.

TUMOR OF YEARS GROWTH

Removed by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Winnipeg, Man.—"Eleven years ago I went to the Victoria Hospital, Montreal, suffering with a growth in the uterus. The doctors said it was a tumor, and could not be removed, as it would cause instant death. They found that other organs were affected and said I could not live more than six months in the condition I was in. After I came home I saw your advertisement in the paper and commenced taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I took it constantly for two years, and still take it at times, and both my husband and myself claim that it was the means of saving my life. I highly recommend it to suffering women."—Mrs. ORILLA BRADLEY, 284 Johnson Ave., Winnipeg, Manitoba.

One of the greatest triumphs of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the conquering of woman's dread enemy—tumor. If you have mysterious pains, inflammation, ulceration or displacement, don't wait for time to confirm your fears and go through the horrors of a hospital operation, but try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills.

A Labor Lift

Darning stockings used to be a prevalent industry, but nowadays par-affining the useful articles has taken its place in a measure. Clever mothers have proved to their satisfaction that paraffin rubbed over the heels, soles and toes of stockings when they are new imparts a strength to the threads that doubles their wearing qualities. This is a boon to many an overburdened woman to whom "the darning" is the last straw required to make the day more than she can bear.

Ontario's Railways

According to the report of the Minister of Public Works Ontario has now 8,660.42 miles of railway, of which 260.23 was constructed during the past year.

Eleven steel and twenty timber bridges were completed in the same part of the country; the largest being that near the scene of the Webbwood wreck, which has a single span of 220 feet.

The development of 40,000 horse power will be provided for by the storage dams constructed at the outlet of Dog Lake, near Fort William.

"Drop In Any Time."

One of the pitfalls of friendship is the standing invitation. It is easy and pleasant to say: "Come whenever you like, my dear! We shall be delighted to see you at any time; don't stand on ceremony—come whenever you are this way." But let those who receive such invitations beware. It stands to reason that an unexpected visit cannot always be convenient—the hostess is in the midst of something or other and "not fit to be seen," or her husband has rushed home to take her out somewhere and she would rather go than stay at home and entertain her dearest friend, or the luncheon or the dinner is a makeshift—very nice, so far as the family is concerned, but not exactly suitable to set before visitors. The hostess tries to be nice, but can't help showing her vexation or embarrassment. The guest perceives something indefinable in the atmosphere and is accordingly constrained, and every one is uncomfortable. Yet people still go on giving and accepting standing invitations.—New York Tribune.

From Bad to Worse.

A gentleman was admiring his pigeons the other afternoon, when he heard a curious "thud" and saw one of his birds drop from a window sill to the ground.

Turning round, the gentleman was just in time to see a small boy in the lane drop a catapult and run.

After a short chase the culprit was caught.

"You young scoundrel!" ejaculated the angry owner of the pigeon. "What do you mean by coming and shooting my birds?"

"Please, sir, I didn't mean to do it," whined the captive. "I—I didn't shoot at the pigeon."

"Come, come," said the gentleman, "don't make matters worse. I saw the bird fall, and if you did not aim at it how came you to hit it?"

"Please, sir," blubbered the boy, "the pigeon got in the way. I—I was aiming at the winder."—London Tit-Bits.

THE AMERICAN HEN.

A Wall Street Valuation of the Great Egg Producer.

It is claimed that the average production of a hen is 200 eggs per annum, but is safe to assume that the actual is much below this figure. Adopting the very conservative figure of 120 eggs per hen per annum, we find on the above basis of production there are 150,000,000 laying hens in the United States responsible for the production of 18,000,000,000 eggs.

At the farm price of 20 cents per dozen the total income derived from each hen annually would amount to $2. Allowing 40 cents for maintenance and 10 cents for depreciation, which latter would wipe out the market value of the hen in four years, irrespective of salvage when the period of production is over, the net profit per hen per annum amounts to $1.50.

This profit, according to Wall street authorities, capitalized on a 5 per cent income basis, would place a nominal value of $30 on each hen. For the 150,000,000 hens this would amount to the enormous total of $4,500,000,000.

That the American hen can return a yield of 5 per cent per annum on a capitalization of $4,500,000,000 appears nothing short of remarkable, but such is the case. The entire outstanding capital obligations of the railroads of the United States in 1907 were less than four times this amount, or $16,082,146,683, while the total paid out in interest and dividends represented but 4.05 per cent of this amount.—Wall Street Journal.

Daniel Webster's Carriage.

Captain Albert Hartge of Shadyside, Anne Arundel county, owns a carriage which was once the property of Daniel Webster and which is still a highly serviceable vehicle. Captain Hartge has been using it for several years and says it is far more roomy and comfortable than those built nowadays. The carriage is a phaeton, built on high springs, being as good and strong now as the day it was built. It is constructed of white hickory, and the great lamps, dashboard, rails, handles, etc., are of solid copper, heavily silver plated. The old carriage was the favorite vehicle of Webster at his home near Marshfield, Mass., and was sold to a Marylander several years after his death at a sale in Boston. The purchaser brought it to Baltimore and stored it away in a stable, intending to ship it to his country place in Howard county. Before doing so he died, and the old carriage was again put up under the hammer. Captain A. S. Byus, an oyster packer of this city, happened to attend the sale and bought the old vehicle for a very small sum and later gave it to his friend Captain Hartge, who prizes it highly.—Baltimore Sun.

A Monarch of Many Beds.

One of the Emperor Menelik's weaknesses is the matter of beds. In his sleeping palace there are a number of rooms, and each possesses a different bedstead, either of wood or iron, built high or low. It is the emperor's practice to sleep in one or the other, just as the fancy takes him. Since his last serious illness he has considerably changed his mode of living. He was accustomed to take violent exercise, but he has renounced this for a sedentary life.

THE GENUINE ALWAYS SUPERIOR TO THE IMITATION

The experienced buyer never permits the shrewd merchant to convince him that an imitation is superior to the genuine advertised article. In refusing a substitute he protects himself and the manufacturers who have expended enormous sums in giving the public information regarding their products.

Advertised articles have stood the test of public approval on their merits and materials embracing their make up. The mere fact that they are imitated is competent testimony of their worth.

CHAMPION STRATHCONAS BANQUETTED BY LEAGUE

Annual Banquet of City Hockey League and Presentation of Trophy to the Winning Club—The Toast List and Speeches.

That it's great to be champions, and particularly champions of the Peterborough City Hockey League, was demonstrated last night at the Oriental Hotel, when the Strathconas were royally banquetted by that organization, and presented with the Examiner trophy, in honor of their having won the championship for the past season of 1909-10. The donor of the trophy, Mr. J. R. Stratton, was unavoidably absent, and the presentation was made by Mr. R. M. Glover. The four clubs who competed in the league, were represented by officers, players and members, and the company, which numbered fifty, spent a very pleasant evening together. In the speeches the speakers warmly congratulated the winning club and the West Ends, who finished in second place, also came in for considerable praise, for the grand fight the players had put up in their endeavor to annex the top position in the city hockey league race.

The menu list for the initial part of the affair arranged for by host Graham, was an excellent one. The appetising and variegated list of edibles were partaken of in a manner highly creditable to host and guest alike, and after the well-laden tables had been cleared, smokes were passed around and the following toast list carried out, the president of the League, Mr. Chris. Graham, occupying the chair;—

His Majesty the King.

The Champions.

Presentation of Examiner Trophy to the Strathcona Hockey Club

Sister Sports.

The Referees.

The Ladies.

The entertainers of the evening were Messrs. Mellroy, Brown, Clarke, Busch. Mr. G. Schneider acted as accompanist, and a number of selections were given on the Victor gramaphone by the representative, Mr. W. H. Freeland.

Those in charge of the arrangements displayed good taste in selecting such pleasing talent and each number by those taking part was received in a manner that showed appreciation and pleasure.

HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

The toast to His Majesty the King proposed by the chairman, was honored by the hearty singing of the National Anthem.

THE CHAMPIONS.

In proposing the toast to the champions Mr. R. M. Glover said that he was proud of the privilege to be present to do honor to the Strathconas, champions of the City Hockey League. He expressed regret on behalf of Mr. Stratton, who had through pressure of business been called out of the city, and was therefore unable to be present. Mr. Glover congratulated the Strathconas on winning the championship of 1910. It was the third time for the club, and the players had put up good hockey. They deserved to win and also deserved credit for the manner in which they had played the games throughout the season. At one time the team had been styled the "rough house" team of the league, but the management had since then demanded clean hockey, and this had landed the championship. The Strathconas, he understood, was the only club present at the organization meeting of the league. At present only three or four of the original players were on the champions' line-up. No matter what opposition was met with, the club had always put up a formidable fight. The Peterborough Hockey Club was indebted to the club as whatever demands had been made upon it for players, the request had always been acceded to. Other clubs had helped, too, when called upon, and the pleasant feeling that had been brought about by the City League was highly commendable. The officers of the league deserved credit for the manner in which they had conducted its affairs. Other leagues might well take a lesson and an adoption of some of the rules would be beneficial. Speaking of the game, Mr. Glover stated that it was one of the best a young man could take up, and it was advisable to stick to it as long as possible. After touching on the prospects of the league, the speaker extended his best wishes for another successful season next year, and concluded by presenting the trophy.

The old familiar, "For They Are Jolly Good Fellows" was then sung and three cheeers and a tiger followed.

Mr. "Bill" Metheral, the manager of the champion team, on rising to respond, received considerable encouragement when the gathering broke into "See Him Smiling."

On behalf of the Strathconas he thanked the league for the honor shown the club and expressed his regret at the absence of Mr. Stratton, who had always taken a great interest in promoting clean sport, and had given the trophy for competition amongst the City League teams. The West Ends had made a great showing during the season, and there was every indication that the league would next year have another successful season. He paid a tribute to Mr. Fred Clarke, the former president of the league, who had done much for the organization. It was he who had been instrumental in the drawing up of the iron bound constitution. The past season had been the most successful of the league, and he believed that the abolishing of the ticket system had been of benefit.

SISTER SPORTS.

"Sister Sports" was proposed by Mr. E. N. McWilliams, and in so doing he tendered his congratulations to the Strathconas, not only for winning the championship, but also for sticking to the league. Mr. McWilliams also congratulated the West Ends for the manly way in which they fought, and Keene and the T.A.S. for the splendid spirit displayed in all the games.

The toast was honored by Messrs. W. O'Brien, Jack Deanard and A. St. A. Smith and Dr. McWilliams, of Keene.

Mr. O'Brien tendered congratulations on behalf of the T. A. S. A. C. Speaking of the baseball game, he remarked that he had been glad to be identified with the champions of the City Baseball League last season, and hoped that the same success would attend them this year, and also that the league would enjoy the same success that had attended the City Hockey League.

Mr. Deanard expressed his pleasure at being present, and congratulated the Strathconas.

Mr. St. Smith voiced the sentiments of the Keene Club in extending congratulations to the champions and to the West Ends. Although the Keene team had finished last, he hoped that more success would be met with next year. The speaker incidentally remarked on the showing Keene had made in Peterborough in curling, and concluded by expressing a hope that a trophy would be won next year.

Dr. McWilliams stated that it had been a great pleasure for the Keene team to be represented in the Peterborough City League.

They had learned something about the hockey game, and this would be of benefit to them. The team had shown that it could take defeat in the proper spirit. Keene had had the honor of being represented in Stanley Cup games by Jack Miller, and they were proud of the honor. The players had had a pleasant time during the season, and had put up some interesting games, even against the Strathconas, and if the league would receive their application another season it would be a great pleasure to the Keene Club.

THE REFEREES.

Mr. Jos. Hoard, in proposing the toast to the referees, commended the work of the officials, whom he was sure had always acted fair and above board.

Mr. "Bill" Ross, in responding, stated that it gave him great pleasure to be present to congratulate the Strathconas and West Ends for the plucky fight put up. The Keene and T.A.S. clubs also deserved much credit. Mr. Ross thanked the players for the manner in which they had received his decisions, and he assured them that he had always endeavored to be impartial in his rulings.

Mr. Roy McDougall tendered his congratulations and stated that although only officiating in one game, his experience with the players had been a pleasant one.

THE LADIES.

In Mr. F. Dolly Craig the ladies found an able champion. On rising to propose the toast, Mr. Craig was visibly agitated, but recovered in time to narrate several thrilling incidents which had had the effect of increasing his admiration for the ladies.

Mr. Leo Derocher, in responding, told in an eloquent manner of how the "dreamy eyes" had played an important part in the championship game, and Mr. Ben Dusty spoke feelingly of the sympathy which had been tendered to him when away from home in the big leagues.

THE HOST.

Mr. F. D. Craig proposed a toast to the host, and in doing so, expressed the appreciation of the league for the kindness shown.

Mr. C. G. Graham responded, and assured the gathering that it was a pleasure to act in the capacity of host to such an organization as the Peterborough City Hockey League.

Messrs. Young and McConkey, the local agents for the McCormick harvesting and farm implements, are holding a demonstration to-day which ably evidences the popularity in which the goods manufactured by their company is held by the farmer of the present day. Ten carloads of various kinds of machines have been received and these are being distributed to the customers, all the sales having been made through them. SIXTY PER CENT UNDER WORK

Is What is Being Accomplished in Building the Grand Trunk Pacific.

Since the turning of the first sod on the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway at Fort William, Ont., September 11th, 1905, by the Premier, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the construction work has proceeded steadily to the extent that at the present time, covering a period of four years and a half since the building of this Transcontinental Railway was commenced, of the entire main line from Moncton to Prince Rupert, a distance of 3,550 miles, a total of 3,000 miles has been placed under construction on which there has been laid 1,795 miles of track, which in some cases is made up of disconnected sections and is therefore not all continuous. That portion of the line, however, from Winnipeg to Edmonton, 793 miles, has been constructed and in partial operation by the construction department for the past 18 months and within the past 90 days the track has been completed continuously from Edmonton westerly to Wolf Creek, 122 miles, thus completing the track laying on that portion of the line, designated as the Prairie Section, Winnipeg to Wolf Creek, 915 miles. The track laying was also recently completed from Winnipeg to Fort William, 445 miles, thus making a continuous line from Fort William via Winnipeg, Edmonton to Wolf Creek, 1,360 miles, which, however, cannot be completed for practical operation for some months as considerable work is required to be done on the easterly and westerly ends of the line, to put it in a suitable condition for the movement of regular trains. The other portions of the main line on which the rails have been laid, are situated at different points east and west of the city of Quebec. During the past year contracts have been let for the construction work from Wolf Creek, Alberta, westerly to Tete Jaune Cache in the Rocky Mountains, 179 miles, and there are at present engaged on this section of the line, 1,000 teams and a large army of men. Similar forces are also engaged on the construction of the line from Prince Rupert, the terminus of the Pacific Coast, easterly to Aldermere, B.C., 240 miles.

In addition to the mileage referred to above the Provincial Governments of Saskatchewan and Alberta passed acts at the sessions of their Legislature in 1909, authorizing guarantees for the construction of branch lines by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company in these provinces to the extent of 686 miles, comprising branch lines from the main line of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway to Yorkton, Regina, Battleford, Calgary, Lethbridge, MacLeod and Coutts, the construction of which are at present under way. At the session of the Saskatchewan Legislature in December, 1909, an act was passed authorizing the guarantee of the construction of additional branch lines by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway in that Province, to the extent of 475 miles comprising lines from Regina south-easterly to the United States boundary line, from the main line of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway to Prince Albert and from Regina westerly to Moosejaw, Calgary, etc., etc., the construction of which will be undertaken during the present year. From the foregoing it will be observed that out of a total mileage of main line and branches of approximately 7,000 miles there have been completed and under construction at the present time, approximately 4,800 miles or sixty per cent. of the entire mileage authorized in the company's charters.

HAT PINS HARMLESS IF PROPERLY PLACED

A tirade against that feminine weapon of many shapes and purposes, the hat pin, has been commenced in Chicago, and some other American cities, and is receiving strong support.

The judiciary committee of the Chicago City Council is to draw up an ordinance stipulating that hat pins worn in public places "shall not extend more than one-half inch beyond the crown of the hat."

From conversation with a leading milliner of the city the Review learns that it is not so much the length of the pin which makes it project as the way in which it is stuck into the hat.

"A hat pin should be the exact length of the width of the crown of the hat worn," was contended. "A twelve inch hat pin is not too long for a twelve inch crown, and will not project if properly placed in position but I often see women using a 12-inch hat pin through a nine-inch crown, in which case the pin stands out from the crown and doubtless is dangerous."

ALL SALOONS WILL BE CLOSED ON CHRISTMAS DAY

Amendments to the License Law Are Discussed in the Legislature—Hon. Mr. Hanna Defends Three-Fifths Clause.

Toronto, March 16.—Amendments to the license act formed the chief dict of the people's representatives elected to serve in the Legislative Assembly during yesterday's session.

The principle changes in the law are that Christmas becomes a "dry day," and raising the wholesale license fee from $350 to $500 all over the province. The three-fifths clause stands.

Mr. Hanna pointed out that it might be urged against his bill that it made no provision for the application of penalties for corrupt practices to local option contests, but this would be done in an amendment to the municipal amendments act.

The City of Toronto bill passed its second reading, and will furnish the opportunity for lively discussion in committee of the whole to-day.

Before adjourning the Premier stated that they had hoped to sit till they got through all the contentious measures, and finish up slowly to-day. This, however, had had to be abandoned, and he moved that the House meet at 2 p.m. to-day, as there were no committees in the morning. Formal prorogation, he said, would take place on Saturday morning.

The second annual appearance of the bill of W. Proudfoot (C. Huron), to amend the liquor license act by returning to a straight majority instead of three-fifths vote in local option contests, was given the six months' hoist on motion of Hon. W. J. Hanna.

"I think it is sufficient," declared Mr. Hanna, "to say that three years' experience of the three-fifths clause is that it has proved fully up to all that was expected of it.

"I think it sufficient, in view of the progress in local option in Ontario under the three-fifths clause, compared with the progress made prior to the passage of that clause, I say that apart from those who in conventions have passed resolutions against it, I think we might safely leave it to the temperance people themselves, how greatly that clause has contributed to the cause of temperance and certainly to its permanence."

"Some reference has been made," the Minister continued, "to a deputation which waited on the Government, and to what I said then in regard to the Town of Barrie. I wish to repeat here what I said on that occasion, that the mere passing of local option is a very small part in the work of enforcing it.

"I said that local option in Owen Sound was difficult to enforce, not because it was carried by a 50 per cent. vote, but because it was liable to be repealed by a 50 per cent. vote. That was the argument. In 1910 the Government spent $9,000 in enforcing local option in Owen Sound, while only $25 was spent by the province in another town similarly situated in every other respect to Owen Sound, but which carried local option by a three-fifths vote."

"Members of the Government," declared Sir James Whitney, "are in a position to know—not to guess, to know—that the atmosphere which surrounds the discussion of this three-fifths clause to-day is quite different from that which surrounded it on previous occasions.

"The three-fifths clause has become an integral part of the scheme and principle of local option."

WIRELESS FOR POCKET

German Priest Invents a Wonderful Little Machine —Simple Apparatus.

Berlin, March 16.—A pocket wireless telegraph apparatus was exhibited by the inventor, Prof. Cerebotani, the priest in charge of the Munich parish, during a scientific lecture before an audience of persons engaged in the various branches of scientific investigation, Monday night.

The instrument consists of a wooden base with the letters of the alphabet thereupon, arranged in a circle. A small metal indicator swings on a pivot in the centre, so adjusted as to respond to the wireless dot and dash currents, and spells out the message. The apparatus is very simple. It is somewhat larger than the ordinary card case.

Prof. Cerebotani declared that a French journalist had attributed to him erroneously the invention of a pocket wireless telegraph instrument some time ago. He wrote to the journalist denying the invention. However, his letter was not published, and, accordingly, nothing remained for him in the way of vindication except to invent the apparatus described, which he proceeded to do.

SAYS BILL IS RUBBISH

Dr. Mary Walker Says American Women Have a Vote — Rev. Anna Shaw Criticized.

Albany, N.Y., March 16.—Dr. Mary Walker, in which she called a "constitutional argument" before the assembly judiciary committee yesterday, made a violent attack on the women who are advocating the women suffrage bill. The terms "grafter" and "fool" figured liberally in her remarks.

She was particularly severe in her criticism of Rev. Anna Shaw, president of the National Woman's Suffrage Association, whom she designated as a preacher who does not preach and followed woman suffrage advocacy for a living.

The speaker insisted that all laws such as proposed are in violation of the United States constitution, which, she claims to have discovered 30 years ago, contains authority for woman suffrage.

"There's no use of such silly rubbish as this bill," she exclaimed. "If women go to the polls in a body and demand their right to vote, the men won't dare to refuse them."

CONSERVATIVES FORCE HON. MR. PUGSLEY TO GIVE UP LONG SAULT PLANS

After a Seventeen-Hour Session in the Commons the Minister of Public Work Promises to Produce Specifications for Dam, or Say Why Not.

Ottawa, March 16.—After a Parliamentary battle, involving a continuous session of seventeen hours, unexampled so far as private bills are concerned, the Government yesterday was forced to compromise on the St. Lawrence Power Transmission Co. bill, and there is now the prospect that it may not pass this session.

The struggle, which was precipitated during the debate Monday night, when Hon. Dr. Pugsley declined to accede to the Opposition demands to see certain plans which had been prepared by Government engineers in connection with the proposals to dam the Long Sault Rapids, came to a close at a quarter to four yesterday afternoon. The House did not rise, however, but proceeded with other business, just as if it had met at three o'clock. A curious result is that, officially, there will be no Tuesday sitting of the House this week, Monday's sitting continuing over the two days without an adjournment.

The breaking of the deadlock was the result of a compromise arrived at after nearly 17 hours of continuous discussion, commencing at 8 p.m. on Monday. It followed a motion to adjourn, made by Col. Sam Hughes, but which was rejected by a vote of 34 to 32.

Soon after the vote had been taken, Col. Hughes said that he thought he could speak for the Opposition leader in saying that, if Mr. Pugsley would promise the House to bring down the plans for the development of the Long Sault water-power, to which reference had been made during the previous night, that the Opposition would agree to pass one clause of the bill, which would allow the committee to report progress.

Sir Frederick Borden, who was leading the House at the moment, said that he had not been in the House during the night, and therefore did not know as to the plans Mr. Pugsley had spoken of.

Col. Hughes said that they were plans which had been prepared by a Government board of engineers at the request of the Long Sault Development Co. The Minister, he added, had said that he had no objection to bringing down these plans if he could get them.

R. L. Borden claimed that the blame for the protracted debate was due to Hon. Mr. Fielding, who would not agree to the House rising. Then Dr. Black, of Hants, had declared that the Government would not give way if the House continued in session until Saturday night. This was not the way, he said, to deal with such a situation.

Meanwhile Mr. Pugsley came into the chamber and Sir Frederick, having explained to him the proposal made by Col. Hughes, on behalf of the Opposition, the Minister of Public Works said that he would be glad to lay the plans on the table.

He had made enquiry, and had found that the plans were not in the possession of his Department. He would endeavor to get them from the chairman of the International Waterways Commission.

Mr. Pugsley suggested that, as the House had settled down to a discussion of the bill, it would be wise to put through all the non-contentious. This was greeted with cries of "No," from the Opposition benches, and Mr. Pardee, the sponsor of the bill and chief Liberal whip, said he was willing to accept the Opposition proposal. He would produce the plans provided he could get them if the Opposition would allow a clause of the bill to go through. If he could not get them, he would give his reasons to the House.

Mr. Borden: "We will make it our duty to consider these reasons."

Mr. Pugsley: "I do not consider that the necessity for doing so will arise."

The first clause of the bill was then passed, and the committee reported progress. The bill is not likely to come up again until Monday next.

On the second reading of Hon. Mr. Oliver's bill to amend the Immigration Act, the Minister explained that the chief object of the bill is to apply to points along the boundary line, the same regulations in respect to exclusion which apply at ocean ports of entry.

There were, Mr. Oliver said, many changes in detail, all important and calculated to carry out more effectively the policy of the Government. An important provision of the bill was one which, while fully establishing the right of an emigrant to show before the courts reasons why he should be allowed to enter the country, does not permit him to take full advantage of the protection of the courts until he has been accepted by the immigration officials.

Richard Blain asked if any demands had been made upon the Government to abolish assisted immigration.

Mr. Oliver said that in so far as the Government is concerned, there is no such thing as assisted immigration.

Glen Campbell is asking for information as to the cost of the Doukhobors to Canada. He said that these people were a disgrace to civilization, and to the Government which had brought them to Canada.

MOTORMAN SAYS WHEELS SLIPPED

Toronto March 16.—On the charge of manslaughter William McLean, motorman, of 644 West Bloor street was arrested by Detectives Cronin and Sockett yesterday. He was driving the Bloor and McCaul car which ran into the rear of the Dundas car, fatally crushing Sammy Manaceveth Monday night.

Coroner George W. Graham opened an inquest yesterday afternoon. Medical evidence showed that death was caused by shock and hemorrhage. McLean said his car struck a slippery rail as he was applying the brakes to stop at the corner, and the car skidded, running into the other. The version of the affair on which McLean was arrested was that he was fooling with the two boys while going along the street. He would drive up close to them and scare them. The inquest was adjourned until March 23.

BIG SUM MISSING FROM POLICE RELIEF

St. Louis, Mo., March 16.—John M Healey, indicted treasurer of the Police Benefit Association, yesterday made a full confession of what became of the missing funds of the association.

Nearly $100,000 instead of $13,213, has been stolen. It was with the purpose of felling of the extra shortage in an effort to gain immunity that Healey is to talk.

Healey's confession promises to be the most startling revelation of a criminal nature since the boodle trials of members of the house of delegates.

THE WOES OF AN ASSYRIAN

Montreal, March 16.—J. A. Sanda, an Assyrian, who is a partner with his father in a mercantile business, has asked the police to investigate recent efforts of his countrymen, which are believed to have for their object driving him out of the country.

Sanda was at one time afflicted with a form of leprosy, which Dr. Valin, a local physician, cured, securing considerable fame in medical circles as a result. Sanda afterwards married, but his compatriots do not believe in the cure, and evidently want to drive him out of their community.

A few days ago he received in a box by mail a dead rat and a bottle of poison, with admonition, "Eat, drink and be merry." He had been previously persecuted in other ways.

BADEN-POWELL IS COMING TO CANADA

Toronto, March 16.—Baden-Powell and his scouts will be visitors to the Canadian National Exhibition this year. The famous general and a body of his boy scouts are to visit America this summer and will reach Toronto during the first week of the exhibition.

Arrangements are already under way to give him a fitting reception, which it is expected will take the form of a Scouts' Day, attended by all the different camps of scouts in Ontario.

TALK OF PEACE IN PHILADELPHIA

Philadelphia, March 16.—One of the chief difficulties to be overcome in bringing about an amicable adjustment of the car men's strike will be the placing of all the strikers. The company declared it will take back only such men as it needs, and will not dismiss men it has employed since the strike began.

While the air is full of peace talk, the committee of ten having the general strike in charge is working every minute of the day to extend the walkout. There was no very material change in the situation.

The committee is not meeting with much success in forcing unions, that last week decided not to strike, to reconsider their action.

CHATHAM CLUB HAS A BLAZE

Chatham, Ont., March 16.—Fire broke out yesterday morning about one o'clock in the auditorium of the Chatham Club, and considerable damage was done to the club rooms. A dancing club had the auditorium on Monday evening for a dance. They left at 12.30 and it is thought that one of the guests left a cigar stub burning. When the steward of the club left there was no sign of fire. The dancing floor was badly burned as also was the roof of the building. Fire broke through the club rooms below, and a large expensive painting was ruined. There is also considerable damage to the club room from water. The fire was first noticed by some bank clerks who sleep over the Standard Bank.

IS RELIEF TO SHIPPERS

Montreal, March 16.—Montreal shippers and importers express satisfaction with the prospects of having, during the coming summer, competition in the shipping business of the St. Lawrence.

It has been announced that the steamships of the Canadian Northern service will remain outside the Canadian North Atlantic conference, which means that they will not need to conform to the schedule of freight rates fixed by that conference. The steamships of the Thomson line are also outside the conference.

Shippers state that the St. Lawrence needs competition in the worst way, as the conference has fixed rates arbitrarily in the past, and would likely put them even higher the coming summer.

CHARGE AGAINST EX-EMPLOYEE

Berlin, March 16.—In the Police Court yesterday, the Berlin Suspender Co., Ltd., were complainants against Carl Rudolph, a former employe, charged with unlawfully having taken from the firm patterns of different leather parts for the manufacture of suspenders. It is alleged that the defendant had, after leaving the employ of the company, commenced the manufacture of suspenders in Toronto. J. A. Scellen appeared for the plaintiffs, and W. A. Henderson, Toronto, counsel for defendant, who was committed for trial at the next sessions in June. His own bail was accepted.

HON. R. ROGERS IS IN TROUBLE

Winnipeg, March 16.—Something of a sensation was caused in the Legislature by T. H. Johnson tabling the receipt of the Northern Pacific Express Co. for bonds to the value of $50,000 from New York, signed by Robt. Rogers. The receipt was dated Nov. 21, 1902.

In connection Mr. Rogers stated he had no recollection of the incident, but said he would give the opportunity for an investigation of either his private or official life.

ARMSTRONG IS GIVEN A YEAR

Buffalo, N.Y., March 16.—The fact that Edward Armstrong, charged with William Wilson with importing two Toronto girls for immoral purposes, made a pathetic appeal yesterday to Judge Hazel for leniency, promising to marry one of the young women if sentence was suspended, did not prevent the court from imposing a penalty. Armstrong was given one year in the Elmira Reformatory and fined $1. He wept when sentence was imposed.

Five Hundred Girls Rebel.

Des Moines, Iowa, March 16.—Five hundred girls in the State Industrial School at Mitchellville, broke into open revolt yesterday afternoon. Furniture was smashed and the girls threatened to demolish the buildings. Miss Hattie Garrison, the matron, telephoned Governor Carroll for assistance.

WAS LAID TO REST WITH PEN IN HAND

Montreal, March 16.—The funeral of the late George Murray, associate of King's College, B. A., Oxon, and F.R.S.C., took place from the family residence, 11 Brunswick street, yesterday afternoon. There was a very large gathering of old friends, among them being many who received their education from him.

The body of "Uncle George" was not placed in the coffin until late yesterday, owing to his expressed desire. He was dressed in a grey suit, with his right hand across his breast, and between his fingers his beloved pen.

BRITISH OFFICER SUFFERS INDIGNITY

Winnipeg, March 16.—Lieut. B. B. Pryce-Jones, of the Royal Welsh Fusiliers, in the British army, was pulled off the Soo train Monday night because the U. S. immigration officer did not regard him as a suitable person to enter the United States. Pryce-Jones had been spending a holiday of some six weeks in Canada, principally in the Rockies, and was on his way to visit friends in Chicago.

PERISHED AS RESULT OF EXPOSURE

North Bay, March 16.—Anthony W. Barton, aged 45 years, who has been missing from his home in North Bay for one week, was found dead on the lake shore Monday, close to town. Barton leaves a wife and six children. It is supposed that he wandered away while temporary deranged, laid down in the snow and died from exposure. Barton was well-connected in England.

WELL-KNOWN HORSEMAN ENDS LIFE

Winnipeg, March 16.—James Dobie, half-owner of The Broncho, the famous pacing mare, and one of the best known sportsmen in Canada and the Western States, committed suicide on Monday night in his room in the Leland Hotel by blowing out his brains with a heavy Colt revolver. On May 15th last Mr. Dobie suffered a stroke of paralysis, which robbed him of his speech. This is thought to have been the reason for his act. Mr. Dobie was sixty years of age. His home was in Uxbridge, Ont., he coming West twenty years ago. He was unmarried, and leaves a brother in Uxbridge.

EXTENSION OF ELECTRIC ROAD

St. Catharines, March 16.—Mayor McBride presided at a meeting yesterday afternoon when the question of the extension of the Dunnville, Wellandport and Beamsville electric road to St. Catharines was discussed.

The directors claim it will cost $500,000 to come to this city, and ask that St. Catharines, the Village of Beamsville and the Townships of Clinton and Louth and other interested municipalities, together guarantee bonds for half that amount, they agreeing to look after the other half. No definite action was taken.

SHIPBUILDING AT KINGSTON

Kingston, March 16.—S. Dyment of Barrie, president of the Kingston Shipbuilding Co., says that if the by-law asking for exemption of taxes, to be voted on March 21, is defeated, the company will not close the lease with the Government for the drydock, and will drop the shipbuilding proposition at Kingston.

James H. Jones, aged 75, a veteran barber, is dead. He lived here thirty years. He was the first barber in St. Lawrence Hall, Montreal, and was in the business sixty years. He worked up to a couple of weeks ago.

CHILD BURNED IN BRANTFORD

Brantford, March 16.—Florence Campbell, five years old, was fatally burned yesterday afternoon, while playing with older and two younger brothers, in the absence of their parents, at their home, corner of Chatham and Rowdon streets.

The father, Edward Campbell, was at work, while the mother was out washing. The girl put a piece of paper in front of the stove and her dress was ignited. Her sister threw a pail of water over her, but the child, still in flames, rushed out of the house, falling in the yard. She was removed to the hospital, where it is said she will die.

LATE TICKS FROM WIRES

Next year's exhibition of the Ontario Corn Growers' Association will be held at Chatham.

Virginia Harned, actress, wife of E. H. Sothern, actor, is now at Reno, Nevada, to secure a divorce.

Gilbert Wrett, who died in London, Ont., from an overdose of medicine, had for 15 years played "Simon Legree" in "Uncle Tom's Cabin" productions in the United States and Canada.

Conductor Thomas Reynolds says he will not interfere with the arrangements made for the presentation to him in Toronto of the medal awarded him for heroism at the Spanish River wreck.

Walter Hulett, a Windsor negro, who jumped from the ferry boat early Sunday morning in a vain effort to save a drowning woman in the Detroit River, will receive a medal and address from Windsor Council.

The Duke of Norfolk, lay representative of the Roman Catholic Church in England, with a party, accompanied by the Archbishop of Westminster, head of the Roman Catholic Church in Great Britain, will attend the Eucharist Congress in Montreal this summer. The duke will visit Ottawa, Toronto, Hamilton and Niagara Falls.

ADVERTISE IN THE REVIEW.

ELK LAKE VISITED BY BAD FIRE

Haileybury, March 16.—The second fire in less than two months visited the Town of Elk Lake, when, yesterday morning, the town on the west side of the river was almost destroyed by fire.

The buildings include the King Edward Hotel, owned by George Fallenson; Woods' hardware store; Chamandy Bros.' general store, and other smaller buildings and businesses.

The part burned by the fire of several weeks ago destroyed the east side of the river, with a loss of $50,000. The present loss will be more than double that amount.

The town has now but one hotel, the Royal Alexandra, all the others having been destroyed by the two fires.

BURIAL CHARGE WAS TOO HIGH

Toronto, March 16.—Ivan Simoff, the Macedonian, who was murdered by Stefoff, was buried at an expense of $100, and the undertaker is suing Rev. George Atlas, administrator of the estate, for the amount. It is said that a "cousin" ordered the funeral. His Honor Judge Morson wants the cousin located, so the case is adjourned. Simoff's widow needs the money, and it is claimed that $100 is too much for the funeral of a man who earned but $1.25 a day.

WOMAN KILLED AT A CROSSING

Hamilton, March 16.—Mrs. J. M. Mail of Stoney Creek, was struck by a Hamilton, Grimsby and Beamsville car yesterday morning at Battlefield Crossing near Stoney Creek and instantly killed.

The car was traveling at fifteen miles an hour. The woman was hurled against an embankment thirty feet from the crossing, where she was picked up, life was extinct. An inquest was opened at Stoney Creek yesterday afternoon.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 16, 1910.

A MYSTERY EXPLAINED

Canadian newspapers are giving great prominence to a statement made by the United States tariff commissioners, who visited Ottawa recently to the effect that Canadians in general have been entirely mistaken in supposing that the United States tariff on imports from Canada is higher than the Canadian tariff on imports from the United States. These commissioners presented statistics showing that for the fiscal year 1909 the average ad valorem rate on dutiable and free imports from Canada into the United States was only 11.2 per cent. and on dutiable imports 19.4 per cent, while the Canadian ad valorem rate on dutiable and free imports from the United States was 12.5 per cent., and on dutiable imports 24.9 per cent.

This statement has been received with astonishment by many Canadians, but the explanation is very simple. The figures are based on actual imports and the American tariff on many Canadian products is so high that they are completely shut out of the United States, and do not count at all in this estimate. On the other hand the Canadian general tariff is so low that quantities of a great variety of American products come into Canada. There are a few articles upon which our tariff is high enough to exclude, or nearly exclude, American imports, but very few.

It seems strange, but it is nevertheless a fact, that if the general Canadian tariff were made as high as the American tariff the average tariff on actual imports from the United States would be reduced because millions of dollars worth of American products that now come into Canada would be shut out altogether and the imports would be restricted to articles on which our duties were low.

IS ANOTHER DISASTER COMING?

"The collapse of the huge cantilever bridge at Quebec on August 29th, 1907, was at once the greatest and most fatal catastrophe in all the history of bridge construction, ancient or modern," says the Scientific American. It goes on to say that an investigation revealed that the cause of the collapse was the faulty design of the compression members, but that the management of the work was so badly organized that the blame could not be definitely fixed in any one quarter. Under the circumstances the Government, which was responsible for such bad organization, should bear the blame.

But the opinion of the Scientific American regarding the plans for the new Quebec bridge is of more interest to Canadians now than its criticism of the bridge that fell down.

The Scientific American says that new plans prepared at a cost of about $150,000 and as the result of eighteen months' work provide for the building of a bridge that will be both ugly and unsafe.

"It would seem, however," says this scientific critic, "that the Board has some doubts as to the merits of its own work; for it now invites competitive plans from contractors, which are to be filed by May 1st, 1910; the plans to be drawn at the contractor's own expense. But if the Board has taken eighteen months' time and spent $150,000 to produce the present plans, the public will naturally ask 'How can the Board expect responsible firms to furnish them with new plans in one-sixth the time and for nothing?'

"The lay of the land at Quebec crossing is such as to make it almost certain that a thoroughly rigid suspension bridge could be built more cheaply, more quickly and with less risk of failure during erection. On the other hand if a bridge of the cantilever type is selected, it should be one of the first duties of the Board to see that one of the contributary causes to the weakness of the bridge that failed, namely, its extremely narrow width, is removed. But so far from doing this, the authorities have not only prescribed certain limitations of width, but they have actually contracted for the new stone piers upon this restricted basis; and it is a fact that the width is such as would put a serious limit upon any bridge engineer who attempted to design either a cantilever or suspension bridge with the necessary cross-sectional width to give the proper rigidity during erection, and subsequently when express trains are crossing the structure."

The Scientific American proceeds to argue at some length that the vibration is far greater when trains pass over a bridge of narrow width than when they are passing over a wide bridge and that they must go very slowly over narrow bridges to avoid danger.

It objects also to the specifications regarding the height of the towers and says: "The effect of low height and narrow width in raising the weights is shown in the fact that the narrow Quebec structure would require the enormous average amount of 24 tons of steel (about half of which, moreover, is nickel steel) per lineal foot whereas the wide and rigid Forth bridge required an average of only 10 tons of carbon steel per lineal foot."

Whether this criticism is justified or not only experienced bridge engineers are competent to say, but in view of the awful result of Government mismanagement in connection with the building of the first Quebec bridge the greatest care should be taken to secure the opinion of the best engineers.

CHEAP POWER

The most important matter discussed at the Board of Trade meeting last evening was the power question. If Peterborough is to make progress in competition with other manufacturing towns of Ontario we must be able to offer cheap power not only to new manufacturing enterprises, but also to those industries already here, which may require more power to extend business.

It would be a great mistake for the city to endeavor to make a profit by the sale of power to manufacturers. Cheap power will make Peterborough attractive to manufacturers and without that inducement we cannot expect either to get new industries or to keep the ones we already have.

EDITORIAL NOTES

When corporations wish to get special privileges at the expense of the people they go to the Liberal Government at Ottawa, not to the Conservative Government at Toronto. The Liberals, in recent years, have become the servants of the corporations while the Conservatives are the party of the people.

Mr. Reginald McKenna, First Lord of the Admiralty, in introducing the navy estimates in the British House of Commons was able to refer to the Dreadnoughts of Australia and New Zealand as adding to the fighting strength of the Empire. He had nothing to say about the Laurier navy, evidently thinking it was not worth mentioning in considering the fighting strength of the Empire.

Toronto enjoys an unenviable distinction at the present time. There are thirty-five patients undergoing the Pasteur treatment for rabies in the hospitals of that city, a larger number than there are at the well-known institution in New York city, where patients go from all over the country, and several American specialists are in Toronto to study the cases. There is no doubt that the dog muzzling order should be enforced in all districts of the province where any cases of rabies have been discovered.

Airships and Fogs.

The Germans are considering the problem of how aeronauts are to determine their location at night or in a fog. An ingenious engineer has proposed for the convenience of those traveling at night a very complete network of signal lights which will enable any aeronaut at some little distance above the earth's surface to determine his location with considerable precision. To such special signal lights naturally signals by bell or siren can be added to be used in case of fog. Dr. Bidlingmaier of the imperial observatory at Wilhelmshaven has, however, proposed a very simple adjunct for the equipment of the aeronaut which will enable him to locate his position with some measure of accuracy without the use of eye or ear as dependent upon terrestrial signals. The instrument in question is the so called "duplex compass," devised by Dr. Bidlingmaier and used by him lately during the explorations of the German antarctic expedition.

CHAPTER I.

As it was the entr'acte of the opera the lobby of the Casino was filled with a gay and noisy cosmopolitan crowd. All the more, therefore, was it a proof of the celebrity to which Paul Trafford had attained that his entry caused a distinct and general thrill of curiosity. A man who was reckoned the richest in the world could not be other than an object of supreme interest to people whose first cry was money. The fact that he had arrived at Monte Carlo the day before had been as much a topic of conversation as if he had been King Edward or the czar. Now that he appeared and was recognized princes, duchesses and adventurers instinctively fell back a little, making way for him and his party to pass on. Here and there some one claimed the privilege of his acquaintance and bowed before his nod as before a pope's benediction. Those who followed in his train were besieged with greetings. Mr. and Mrs. George Trafford were actually cut off from the procession and made prisoners of war. The Duke of Wiltshire maintained his position at Miss Trafford's side only by being rude to people and turning his back on them.

As for Paula herself, she passed on between her father and the man she had almost promised to marry, unmoved by the stir she created. She was aware of it, but she was used to it. Having been so constantly her father's companion during the last four years, she had come to take public attention as a matter of course. At first the interest she inspired had been impersonal—the interest inseparable from one whom the American press called "the greatest heiress on earth." Her fortune was compared with that of the queen of Holland and of the daughters of the Rothschild and Rockefeller families, but that was all.

Now, however, at twenty-two, she was emerging from the golden mist that had surrounded her and was assuming personality. The flowering of her beauty had done something toward this. People had found it superfluous that a girl with so much money should have a complexion like rose petals floating in milk. They resented the fact that her figure had needless grace and her face an expression of appeal which there was no resisting. Rumors of marriage sprung up wherever she appeared. The girl knew these things without taking actual account of them or letting them form part of her daily consciousness. At this minute she could ignore the fact that her looks were being criticised and her income appraised in gazing about her, with amusement, at the novelty of the scene.

"We're now in one of those spots of No Man's Land," said the Duke of Wiltshire as they entered the first saloon, "which modern civilization likes to set apart as cities of refuge from the rule of caste and conventionality."

Paula turned her soft eyes slowly toward him. They were blue eyes with black lashes—the Celtic eyes inherited from her father's mother—the eyes in which faith is mingled with superstition, in which self devotion has a dash of insincerity, and in which laughter never wholly hides the mist of tears. Between the brows there was a tiny perpendicular furrow, like that of a person endeavoring to see through the rights and wrongs of things and conscientiously trying to be sure. It was this puzzled, inquiring look that the duke of Wiltshire specially loved in her. It gave him an opportunity for the kind of explanatory work in which he excelled in the house of lords.

"Haven't you noticed," he went on in answer to Paula's unspoken interrogation, "that in all the great capitals of the world—London, Paris and New York, for instance—there are two or three expensive restaurants and luxurious hotels where on crossing the very threshold one steps outside all the limitations of nationality, moral prejudice and class distinction?"

"That's very true," Paul Trafford said in corroboration.

He liked to listen to Wiltshire's reflections on subjects that he himself had never thought about. "He's always widening your mind in some direction where you never looked before," he remarked now and then to Paula. The girl was glad to believe it. It was one more attraction of mind where physical charms were so lacking. It was one more explanation of her willingness to marry him. She liked him. "No one could help liking him," she often told herself, and yet as they moved slowly along amid the crowd with so many eyes upon them she regretted the fact that he was shorter than herself and that he had this air of hopeless mediocrity. The men of her own family were all equipped for command. Her father, who had been a New England farmer's son and himself a farmer's boy, overtopped most men by a head and was undeniably handsome. Even her cousin George, who was big and lumbering, had something dominating about him. It seemed strange to her, therefore, that this English duke, the head of the illustrious house of Holroyd, the descendant of a line whose good looks had helped to make Holbein, Vandyke and Reynolds famous, should have been sent into the world by the great capricious mother with the seal of the commonplace indelibly set upon him. She could not stifle in herself the knowledge that she was sorry for this, and yet as her glance took in once more the details of his dull blue eyes, his stubby, sandy beard and the stocky figure that defied the reformatory arts of the most expensive tailors in London she was conscious, too, of a throb of pity, of almost tender pity, that he to whom so much had been given should have to contend with such obvious disadvantages.

On the outer ring of spectators around the table in the center of the room they paused to look on.

Paula's eyes were instantly attracted to the game. The sight of large sums of money to be lost and won appealed by some hereditary instinct to her imagination. She looked at the players facing her and saw them enriched or impoverished with dramatic suddenness. She was sure the girl in a bright red hat, with a wide meshed blue veil making unnatural tints on powder and rouge, would end her days in want. The gray bearded old man, carefully placing a five franc piece en carre, would have his homeward fare paid by the authorities. The purse lipped woman in shabby widow's weeds, working an elaborate system all over the tableau, would win a lot of money. The good looking young man smilingly throwing down the maximum stake en plein would be ruined and would shoot himself.

"Rien ne va plus!" the croupier cried again, and the players drew back their hands to await the result of fate.

"Your father has been called away to be presented to the Grand Duke Dmitri," Wiltshire whispered to Paula, but she only nodded to signify that she had heard.

When the croupier turned the wheel and threw the ball she felt her heart-strings tighten. In the whirling thing before her the blindest and most obscure forces of the universe seemed visibly at work. Destiny was staked on a chance that kept beyond all foresight and eluded all calculation. It was strange, daring and exciting. She wondered how the girl in the red hat could gaze indifferently about her while the wheel spun round. She wondered how the young man could turn with a jesting remark to the companion standing behind him. She wondered still more at the effect upon them all when the rotations of the wheel began to slacken speed, when the ball clicked and tapped and staggered, whirling round and round in a slow, wild, drunken way till it fell at last as if exhausted into the decisive number. The widow saw her system swept away and without a shadow of expression on her stony face began to work out a new one. The girl in the red hat put down another louis on the exact spot whence the last had disappeared. The old man replaced his five franc piece by one of ten. The young man who had played en plein received the value of his stake thirty-five times over.

"Faites vos jeux, messieurs!" the croupier called again. He was a stout man of fifty, swarthy and commonplace, but Paula could not help investing him with some of the inexorable power of the Parcae.

"You seem interested," the duke whispered behind her.

"It's tremendous," she returned over her shoulder. "It's awful. It's as if one had got to the very springs of all happenings, as if one were in touch with the power that has made the world and flung us haphazard on it."

"Wiltshire," said her father, slipping into the crowd beside them, "the grand duke wants to meet you. Paula, dear, you can wait for us here a minute. We shan't be long."

"Very well, papa, dear. I shall be all right."

She was not sorry to have them go, for it enabled her to give herself up to the spectacle of the game. The wheel was twirled again and again, always with variations on the same result. It gave her a thrill to see the croupier rake the gold and silver in with a sort of lavish indifference to its value. There was something superb, too, in the careless ease with which he pushed about to the successful players the various multiplications of their stakes. As each winner picked up his gains she regretted that she had not put down a louis just where he had put his. She wondered what would happen if she did. She wondered whether the obscure, blind power that was throwing destinies about would have anything in store for her.

"If I knew how I'd do it," she said to herself, looking up and down the table to see exactly what the others did.

Just then a man across the table threw down a ten franc piece on pair.

She had seen him do it several times in succession, and on each occasion he had lost. It was an easy conclusion that if pair lost impair would win. It was the simplest form of the game, and before she realized what she was about her own 10 francs were down. The wheel spun and slackened speed; the ball clicked and staggered and stopped. She held her breath, with her eyes fixed upon her stake.

"If he rakes it in," she thought, "I shall know I've lost."

But, no! From the ends of the table the sure, relentless hand swept up the gold and silver into one central pile. Here and there a few isolated stakes were left, her own among the number. A minute later she found two gold coins where she had put down one.

She picked them up timidly and looked across at the young man. Pair had lost again, and she felt sorry for him. He was not in evening dress, and she guessed from slight indications that he was poor. Her first thought was that it was a pity for him to waste his money, her second that the stake she had won was practically that which he had lost. At the idea the tiny furrow deepened for an instant between her brows, and the gold piece clinched in her hand seemed to burn through her glove. She had a confused, mistaken notion that she had taken the money from him; that if she had not played he might have won.

"I oughtn't to have done it," she said to herself, half turning to go away. But the young man threw down another ten franc piece on pair. It was an opportunity, she thought, for him to recover the money she had taken from him. It was not likely that she would win again, and her loss must of necessity be his gain. Once more she put her stake down on impair and, with eyes fixed on it, awaited the result.

Again the croupier raked the gold and silver in, and the young man's stake went with the rest. This time the very coin he had forfeited was pushed across the table to her. She picked it up and slipped it into her glove, looking over at him to see what he would do. If he stopped she would stop; if he went on she would give him the chance to win his money back. She was sure it was his money, and she felt some humiliation in going home with 20 francs that belonged to a passing stranger. Unconsciously to herself her interest was the more sincere because of the fact that he was tall and good looking. "Certainly a gentleman," she commented, "and with such a striking face!"

For an instant he seemed to hesitate; then his bit of gold fell on pair. A second later Paula's fell on impair. The result was the same as before; it was so the next time and the next. On the sixth spin pair won and impair lost, but with the seventh impair's run of luck began again. Paula felt herself growing desperate. The palm of her left hand glove seemed bursting with gold, but in honor toward the poor young man she could not stop till he did. She did not reason that he could win back his money from the bank; she thought it must be from her. Of one thing she was glad—he had not noticed her at all or glanced in her direction. She could therefore look at him with her money in her hand ready to throw her stake when he threw his.

"Rien ne va plus!"

Paula started and looked at the young man across the table. He had put nothing down. He had evidently lost all he could afford. What she had won, she should be obliged to keep. The obscure powers of chance had been true to their reputation and had given the luck to those who had no need of it.

Her hand, with the glove full of gold, fell heavily at her side. Perhaps the unfortunate man had lost everything he possessed and would be driven to take his life, as she understood ruined gamblers generally were. She had a wild thought of asking her father to go and beg him to take his money back when the victim's eyes wandered, apparently by accident, in her direction. For a fraction of a second their glances met, but Paula felt herself coloring and turned away.

"Why—what!"

The broken exclamation came from the Duke of Wiltshire as he pushed his way through the crowd to take his place again at her side.

"Have you been crying or playing or what?" he demanded when he was near enough to speak. For the first time in their acquaintance he assumed a tone of authority.

BASHFUL STANLEY.

William R. Rideing tells in McClure's Magazine of a dinner of the Papyrus club in Boston at which Henry M. Stanley, the explorer, was the guest of honor:

"Whether he (Stanley) sat or stood, he fidgeted and answered in monosyllables—not because he was unamiable or unappreciative, but because he—this man of iron, God's instrument, whose word in the field brooked no contradiction or evasion, he who defied obstacles and danger and pierced the heart of darkness—was bashful even in the company of fellow craftsmen.

"His embarrassment grew when after dinner the chairman eulogized him to the audience. He squirmed and averted his face as cheer after cheer confirmed the speaker's rhetorical ebullience of praise. 'Gentlemen, I introduce to you Mr. Stanley, who,' etc. The hero stood up slowly, painfully, reluctantly, and, with a gesture of deprecation, fumbled in first one and then another of his pockets without finding what he sought.

"It was supposed that he was looking for his notes, and more applause took the edge off the delay. His mouth twitched without speech for another awkward minute before, with a more erect bearing, he produced the object of his search and put it on his head. It was not paper, but a rag of a cap, and with that on he faced the company as one who by the act had done all that could be expected of him and made further acknowledgment of the honors he had received superfluous. It was a cap that Livingstone had worn and that Livingstone had given him."

A Labor Lift

Darning stockings used to be a prevalent industry, but nowadays paraffining the useful articles has taken its place in a measure. Clever mothers have proved to their satisfaction that paraffin rubbed over the heels, soles and toes of stockings when they are new imparts a strength to the threads that doubles their wearing qualities. This is a boon to many an overburdened woman to whom "the darning" is the last straw required to make the day more than she can bear.

THROWN OUT OF WAGGON

James Simmons Received Broken Nose and Injured Arm and Ankle

James Simmons, an employee of Knox's soda water works, Queen street, was painfully injured yesterday afternoon by being thrown out of the delivery waggon. The young man's nose was broken and his arm and ankle sprained. It was while he was driving in the yards of the Quaker Oats Company that a railway engine hove in sight. At it's approach the animal started away, but did not entirely succeed in getting beyond the control of the driver, who turned it up Hunter street, then down Queen. Into the laneway leading to the works the animal was turned so quickly that the waggon turned over and the driver was thrown out, and received the above injuries, which were attended to by Dr. Carmichael.

RECORD SALE OF WOMEN'S DRESSES

At Cressman's Bargain Annex this Morning—Fine Hundred Attended Advertised Sale

Cressman's bargain annex was the scene of a record sale this morning when four hundred women's dresses, selling at 99 cents each, were disposed of within fifteen minutes. The sale opened at 8.10, and at 8.25 the advertised lot of two hundred dresses and two hundred others, from the regular stock, were sold.

When the first lot was sold out, Mr. Cressman decided that rather than disappoint customers who, while on time, were unable, on account of the large crowd in the store, to make a purchase, he would add another two hundred dresses from the regular stock. This was much appreciated. While the goods were sold at a loss, the fact that patrons of the store receive due consideration is apparent.

There was an attendance of five hundred at this morning's sale. The fourth floor was completely filled, and the second and third floors each held one hundred or more.

CONCERT WAS A RECORD-BREAKER

Women's Institute Provided Splendid Entertainment at Bailiboro—Money for Sidewalks

Special to the Review.

Bailieboro, March 14.—The "Joyful Time" concert held on Thursday evening, March 10th, under the auspices of the Women's Institute, Bailieboro, was a gigantic success. Notwithstanding the very short time which was allowed for announcement by the posters and the uncertain condition of the roads at this time of the season, the event proved to be a record-breaker in the history of Bailieboro. The most pessimistic observer will admit, that with the spacious hall filled to the doors, with everyone in whether sitting or standing, packed into the smallest possible space, and then to have presented to the entire house the most elaborate programme that has ever been produced in this section, the honor of the occasion must certainly fall to the wise and progressive policy that had been followed by the ladies in charge of the affair.

Space will not permit a statement of the entire programme but it will suffice to say that the numerous dialogues, recitations, solos, quartettes and orchestra selections were all that could be desired, and that the satisfied, and one might say delighted, impression left on the vast audience is a tribute to the young ladies and gentlemen who gave their talent and energy to each respective production.

However, in passing it is well to note the underlying tone of the suffragette movement which tinged the programme, especially parts rendered by the ladies. It is understood that the proceeds, which amounted to a good sum, will go towards new cement sidewalks. That being the case it would be safe to prophecy that the fair sex will hence forward expect to have a considerable say in all public questions. Therefore do not be surprised in the near future should you hear of a large deputation of suffragettes headed by some of our leading citizens, besieging the Council Chamber demanding "votes for women," "equal rights" and a say in all things in general.

We all hope that success shall attend all efforts made in improvement this coming season, and that the ladies shall reap a rich reward for their energetic contribution to the work.

SEVEN YEAR OLD BOY A TRUANT

From School and Remains Away From Home at Night—The Mother Informs

That a young lad, not more than seven years of age, would refuse to go to school, run away from home and sleep out at night, seems hardly reasonable, but such is the extent of his conduct, according to the statement of the mother, who made inquiries this morning to find out if some steps could not be taken which would in the course of time reform her boy. The mother stated that she could not control him. Only recently he remained away from the home two nights, and on one occasion went to a local hotel and received a quantity of food, which, it was understood, was to be given to the family. Instead of this being done he did not go near the home. It is understood that the boy will be placed on the probation list of the Children's Aid Society.

MILK WILL STAY AT SIX CENTS

Will be no Reduction in Price for the Summer Months

The ruling price of milk in Peterborough this summer will be six cents per quart. This is the figure that has prevailed all winter, and a dealer stated to the Review to-day that there would be no reduction by the majority of the vendors. "Some may come down to five cents," he said, "but the majority will keep the price at six cents. There is no profit in milk at five cents per quart with feed and labor so high."

The dealer was asked if a wet season might tend towards a reduction in the price of the lctal fluid, but he refused to make a statement on this point on the ground that the question was an ambiguous one.

YOUNG PEOPLE SHOWED THEIR APPRECIATION

Of the Splendid Services of Mr. Charles Crane at St. Luke's—Handsomely Honored

A number of the young people of St. Luke's church, including the members of Ald. Turner's Bible Class and of the A.Y.P.A. gathered at the home of Mr. J. Butcher last night to say goodbye to Mr. Charlie Crane, who is leaving for Toronto to-morrow, where he will reside. A delightful gathering was held progressive euchre being a pleasant feature of the evening's entertainment.

Ald. Turner gave expression to the general regret occasioned by Mr. Crane's departure and called upon Mr. S. Whittaker to read an address on behalf of the Bible Class and A.Y.P.A. Mr. Crane was president of the A.Y.P.A. and an indefatigable worker of that society and was also a faithful member of the Bible Class.

A presentation of a fine leather suit case was made to Mr. Crane by Miss Elsie Dawson and the recipient made feeling acknowledgement of the address and handsome gift saying he deeply appreciated the thoughtfulness of the donors. Rev. Dr. Langfeldt spoke in eulogy of Mr. Crane, whose departure was a source of much regret.

Dainty refreshments were served during the evening.

DON'T TELL THIS TO THE DOGS

In other days people waited to see which way the cat was going to jump. Just at present the dog owners of the city are waiting to see which way the aldermen are going to jump for it is pretty well assured that they are going to take action on the dog question. It is learned that the dog by-law is likely to be amended to restrict dogs from running at large in the city. The Legal Committee are building the matter and the action of the Council is awaited with much interest by the public.

CLOSING BARS ON CHRISTMAS DAY

Proposed Legislation at Toronto is Being Discussed

The legislation proposed by the Ontario Legislature to close the bars in the province on Christmas day is causing a good deal of discussion among the hotel men of Peterborough.

"It would mean a big hole in the revenue," said a hotel man to the Review to-day, "and I think that if the bars are closed on that day we should have compensation for our loss. Very little drunkenness is seen on Peterborough streets on Christmas day as the hotels refuse to sell to a man once it is seen that he is showing signs of intoxication. The closing of the bars on Christmas would, however, give the hotel employees an opportunity of spending the holiday with their families."

MISS ERNESTINE BOUVARD, Duck Lake, Saskatchewan, Can., writes:

"At the close of 1908 I took sick as the result of catching cold. I became very weak and could not do anything.

"I consulted a doctor who had me take various kinds of medicine, but I did not find any relief from my suffering. At the advice of a friend, I wrote to you and you advised me.

"After I had taken two bottles of Peruna there was noticeable improvement. I combined the use of Peruna, Manalin and Lacupia and after taking several bottles of each I find myself entirely cured.

"I can certify that it was through your medicines that I recovered my health. I advise every one who is similarly afflicted to obtain Dr. Hartman's advice and be benefited."

Mrs. Wilda Moores, R. F. D. No. 1, Lents, Oregon, writes:

"For the past four years I was wretched woman, suffering with severe backaches and other pains, leaving me so weak and weary that it was only with difficulty that I was able to attend to my household duties.

"I used different remedies, but found no relief until I had tried Peruna.

"Within two weeks there was a change for the better, and in less than three months I was a well and happy woman.

"All the praise is due to Peruna."

Peruna is not a local remedy, but an internal systemic remedy. It will relieve catarrh in its most obstinate form.

TIMELY AND USEFUL PAPER ON PUBLIC UTILITIES

Was Read at the Annual Meeting of the Board of Trade by Mr. W. H. Moore, K.C.—President's Report Shows Progressive Year—Report of Committee re Activities for Industrial Commissioner.

Large questions in the interests of the city were dealt with at the annual meeting of the Board of Trade at the City Council last night, and an intelligent discussion of them was taken part in by representative citizens at the board. President Ald. G. A. Gillespie was in the chair. The minutes of the last meeting were read by the secretary, T. Q. Quartermaine and adopted as presented.

A communication was read from Secretary J. E. Watt, of the Guelph Board of Trade, re the protection of the public at railway crossings. It was suggested that the Legislature be petitioned to force the people to stop before coming to crossings, and that the railway companies be forced to cut down any heavy shrubbery and remove other obstacles of danger at railway crossings. The communication was laid on the table for future action.

A hearty vote of thanks was tendered the Council for the use of the chambers, and a grant of $5 was passed to the reporters of the three local papers for their services.

Messrs. Crane and Wainwright were appointed auditors.

PRESIDENT'S REPORT

President Gillespie's report was presented as follows:

Gentlemen,—In presenting to you my annual report for the season 1909, I wish to thank most sincerely the officers and members for their hearty co-operation during the time I have had the honor of being your president, and I heartily congratulate the Board on their good work in propogating the commercial and general welfare of Peterborough.

I note with pleasure the growing interest taken in the meetings, which were well attended, and the subjects, every one of which were on large questions, relating to the welfare of our city, were well discussed.

As the secretary has reported, the Board held eight meetings, and the questions discussed were:—

1—Waterworks dam.
2—Power question.
3—Purity Ware By-law.
4—Reduction of freight rates on coal.
5—Smith street bridge.
6—Better advertising the city.
7—Conserving the waters in Trent Canal.
8—Our vanishing forests.

With the results that by-laws have been enacted in accordance with the Board of Trade resolutions on the waterworks dam, Purity Ware and Smith street bridge, and that, in reference to the better advertising of the city, the City Council has voted $2,000, on condition that the Board of Trade raise a like amount. This question comes before you to-night.

In trade and commerce Peterborough has passed through a very successful year, despite the fact that in the early part of the season business was, in other communities, at a standstill. The winter passed over, being one of the best in the history of Peterborough, work being plentiful, there was practically no poverty in the city.

One of the drawbacks in this city, in times passed, has been the lack of cheaper houses for the working class, and though building operations increased 44 per cent. over that of 1908, this fault is not yet remedied, and I trust that land owners in the city of Peterborough will, this coming season, see their way clear to build houses at such rental that will make it possible to reduce the price of living to the mechanic and the laborer.

As evidence of the extension of the city during the year 1909, I may state that the Board of Works have built 6,365 feet of sewers and six miles of cement walk. The city has now in use twenty-five miles of sewers and 46 3-4 miles of cement walks. The water commissioners have laid over three miles of water mains and placed 322 services in houses. They have now 33 3-4 miles of mains in use. The new waterworks dam is almost finished and we hope to have power developed before the year is out.

In bringing my presidential year to a close I would urge every member to do his best to keep up the traditions and standard of usefulness set us by our predecessors, by inducing everyone who believes in Peterborough, to become members, by threshing out questions and by working up reforms that effect the city. In this way the Board of Trade will be a force to conjure with and be really effective. In this way our suggestions will have the greatest weight with the City Council in their making of by-laws touching the commercial interest of the city.

There is now coming over Canada a new era of prosperity new capital is coming in and new industries are starting up everywhere, and surely with her splendid water powers and railway facilities Peterborough should boom up in the horizon and so have a share in the general success.

Such is my wish and confidence in the future of this city and in the prosperity of the Board of Trade which has been evident in the past and which I know will be in the future.

Respectfully submitted,
G. A. GILLESPIE,
President.

The treasurer's report was adopted as read. It showed a balance on hand of $227.91.

SECRETARY'S REPORT.

The following report was submitted by the secretary, Mr. T. Q. Quartermaine and was adopted as read:

Gentlemen,—I have the honor of presenting to you as secretary, the 21st annual report of this Board.

This past year we have held eight meetings, viz:—9th March, 18th May, 25th May, 20th July, 9th November, 16th November, 30th November and 14th December, 1909. We have also held several committee meetings.

The following subjects have been discussed at these meetings:—The waterworks dam, the power question, Purity Ware by-law, reduction of freight rates on coal, Smith street bridge, to formulate a policy for better advertising the city with a view of securing more manufacturing industries, appropriation for conversation of Trent canal waters to our north, our vanishing forests, and municipal matters and ald by-laws.

The average attendance was 20 members as against 14 members last year, showing an increase of 6 members on the average of each meeting.

The thanks of the Board of Trade are due to ex-Mayor Rush, his Worship Mayor Morrow and the members of the Board of Aldermen for the use of the City Council Chamber during the past year.

Respectfully submitted.
T. Q. QUARTERMAINE,
Secretary.

Peterborough, Ont., 15th March, 1910.

Mr. D. O'Connell made a verbal report on behalf of the committee appointed to consider the appointment of an industrial commissioner as was unanimously decided upon at a meeting of the Board of Trade. The resolution had been formally presented to the Council, and it had been suggested that the sum of $4,000 be appropriated toward the expense in connection with the office, and it was suggested that a 1-2 mill be levied on the dollar to meet this expense. The Legislature had granted the city power to appoint such an officer. The sum of $2,000 had been voted the Board of Trade in connection with the expense of the office, on the understanding that the Board raised $2,000 or more. The interest of one 1-2 mill on the tax rate was not to be levied.

The committee had interviewed the important industrial concerns of the city and had substantial promise of more than the amount asked for by the City Council.

The election of officers was then taken up, and Ald. G. A. Gillespie announced that he would rather retire and have somebody else nominated for president. The members thought that he had been a very efficient officer and he was again nominated and elected.

The complete list of officers is:—
President—Ald. G. A. Gillespie.
Vice-Pres.—W. H. Bradburn.
Treasurer—P. Campbell.
Secretary—T. Q. Quartermaine.
Messrs. D. O'Connell, J. H. Marmouth and F. H. Dobbin were appointed a committee to strike the standing committees for the year and be a committee to assist in the appointment of an industrial commissioner.

PUBLIC UTILITIES.

Mr. W. H. Moore, speaking on public utilities, first congratulated the president on his re-election and the Board on the choice of its officers.

The public utilities of many municipalities differed widely. In a place like Peterborough they were large and diversified.

There were a great many important utilities of a city, and Mr. Moore enumerated the most important ones and dealt with them from an interesting and practical standpoint.

Most of these utilities mentioned had been used in the city. Another utility was a salubrious atmosphere in which to live. It is extremely fortunate that Peterborough was situated as it is and was so healthy a place.

Mr. Moore told of the original layout of Peterborough, which had grown greatly in recent years, and from an industrial and residential standpoint the city was splendidly situated.

Probably the first thought in any municipality was the streets and sidewalks. Until the speaker recently went to Western Ontario he thought the streets here pretty good. In St. Thomas and Chatham they had good brick pavements, while here the streets were of an inferior macadam. If there was any part of municipal government that should be in a commissioner's hands it was the public works of the city.

The Council did some foolish things. He had been in the Council and they did it then. Mr. Moore strengthened this argument by practical illustration. The men in charge of public works should be thoroughly competent and practical, and Mr. Moore thought the only remedy was to supplement the Board of Works by a commission. The construction of sewers and the general supervision of other public works were too important to be dealt with by inexperienced men.

Dealing with the waterworks system, the speaker said it cost the city $240,000, and the rate had been reduced 40 per cent. The new waterworks dam was a necessity, and the speaker also believed that the water in Peterborough was perfectly pure and healthy. The Water Commissioners had very fairly placed the amount of water in the river before the people. They had found that there were 118,000 cubic feet of water flowing down the river every minute. That would produce about 1,700 horse power net. 600 h.p. of that would be reserved for pumping. Mr. Moore referred to the by-law which would be submitted to the ratepayers on the 19th. The ratepayers are asked for $70,000 for a power house on the new dam, and Mr. Moore approved of the general support of the by-law.

In response to a suggestion that the commissioners sell their power before the by-law is voted upon the speaker said that there would certainly be no difficulty in selling the power at any time.

The speaker contended that more police protection should be given to the city. There was only one officer to every three thousand people and in the large cities there was one to every one thousand. He heartily congratulated the city on its fire protection, which was of the most satisfactory character. The chief was capable and the brigade was an excellent one and as a result of efficient service the insurance rates had been considerably reduced.

Mr. T. F. Matthews said that there was very little for him to say after Mr. Moore's able speech. He thought the streets and pavements of Peterborough were well looked after. Mr. Matthews staunchly advocated a filtration system and said he would urge it in the interests of the public health as long as he was water commissioner. The speaker believed that it would be better to foster the manufactories here at present rather than to run about and spend thousands of dollars in new ones.

Mr. D. O'Connell commended Mr. Moore for his splendid paper and said he had presented many important matters before the board. Mr. Matthews had said that if there was an epidemic at Lakefield Peterborough would be affected unless there was proper means of purifying the water. This was a matter of immediate importance and one that should be taken up by the Council at once.

Mr. O'Connell ably dealt with the power question.

On motion of Messrs. O'Connell and Austin, a vote of thanks was tendered Mr. Moore for his very instructive paper.

The meeting then adjourned.

Woman at One Hundred.

Just entered upon his seventieth year, Mr. Justice Bigham is one of the many eminent lawyers who have first started on other careers. Before devoting himself to law he spent five years on the Liverpool Exchange. Educated in Paris and Berlin, he had already acquired a knowledge of languages that was to prove of excellent service to him in the courts. But it was not destined to be all plain sailing for him at the first. "What on earth has induced you to come to the Bar?" was the discouraging question asked by Lord Russell of Killowen when the future Justice Bigham entered the chambers of the famous advocate as a pupil. It was a question that took the pupils some years to answer! During his first twelve months at the Bar the young lawyer earned only seven guineas, though later on, when he had succeeded Lord Russell of Killowen as leader of the Northern Circuit, his income was one of the largest ever earned at the Bar. Until a few years ago there was a certain judge distinguished among other things for the unpunctuality with which he began the judicial day. On one occasion Mr. Bigham, then one of the busiest advocates in the Common Law Courts, waited twenty-five minutes for his arrival. Having a second case to attend to in another court he went out to see how it was faring, and while he was gone the unpunctual judge made his appearance on the bench. "I have waited five minutes for you, Mr. Bigham," exclaimed his lordship impatiently when the busy counsel returned. "My lord," was the bold retort, "I waited five times as long."

"OLD DRURY'S" KING.

Arthur Collins Is the Manager of the Great Pantomime Theatre.

Mr. Arthur Collins, the man who makes the pantomime at the National Theatre, the world-famous "Old Drury," in London, is a particularly interesting personage. The production of a pantomime at the most renowned of British theatres is a task of huge proportions. It sets and keeps going for many months prior and subsequent to the event a vast army of workers. Some of these are "regulars," some few are enthusiastic "volunteers," whilst there is a large company of "reservists." All drill zealously during the prolonged training period for the ultimate triumph of their able general, Arthur Collins.

Each year sees something glorious attempted, each year sees something glorious done. Each season brings a new ambition to eclipse the one gone before; each season registers the desire fulfilled. For years Drury Lane Theatre has been pursuing a course of pantomime excellence that every recurring Christmas is pronounced by delighted audiences to be superlative.

How is this achieved?

Thus. The scheme of the pantomime having been conceived in the master managerial mind of Mr. Arthur Collins, the heads of the numerous departments in the great National Theatre are enlightened, and soon the whole machinery is set in motion. It is no exaggeration to say that one pantomime has scarcely run its course when the first stages of the next one are entered upon. The "book" is not written till late in the proceedings, so that "topics" may receive their full attention therein; but he who writes a pantomime must be prepared to "miss" the bulk of his pen-work when the piece has been running for a few weeks. This is the result of alterations and interpolations. A well-known pantomime writer was once lately asked by the manager of a theatre, where one of his Christmas pieces was being played, what he thought of it. "Well," replied the scribe, "what I found of it wasn't bad."

The music, upon the attractiveness of which so much of the success of a pantomime depends, has to be composed and arranged; the elaborately beautiful dresses designed and executed, the company and supernumeraries engaged, the scenery painted, and the "properties" made.

Drury Lane has a very fine paint-room and commodious property-rooms. The former is lofty, well-lighted, and fitted with every appliance for the convenience of the scenic artist. Enormous frames, one of them seventy feet long, work up and down through slots in the flooring by means of a windlass. This enables the artist to work at his ease upon any portion of the canvas fixed upon it. Mammoth "cloths," "flats," and "wings" are thus readily dealt with.

The "property-rooms" at "Old Drury" are bustling but orderly beehives for many weeks before the opening of the season's great pantomime spectacle. Men and women work at top speed, the latter attending to bead-work and drapery, the former turning out colossal figures in papier-mache. It is very interesting to note that "properties" of the best quality cannot be procured so satisfactorily from abroad as those which are made in Britain. As may be readily supposed, the cost of a Drury Lane pantomime is enormous, and the "houses" need be packed and many to properly balance the managerial ledger and leave a surplus to be "carried forward." But "thorough" is the watchword of all who take office at "Old Drury," and the traditions of the ancient house can alone be sustained by lavish show and unstinted outlay.

BRITISH FIRM WENT INTO NEW YORK TO DIG TUNNEL.

After All the Great American Engineering Firms Had Announced Their Unwillingness to Dig Under the East River, Pearson & Son of London Went In and Triumphantly Completed the Task.

Tunnelling is a very ancient art, which the Romans in their day effected many notable improvements in; but some of our modern constructions in this branch of practical engineering would assuredly have set the men of old Rome into a state of amazement, could they but have foreseen their audacity and extent.

One of the most remarkable feats in the entire history of tunnelling has quite recently been carried to a triumphant conclusion by a British firm. Messrs. S. Pearson & Son. Pearson's have achieved many engineering marvels in various parts of the globe, but none of which they are prouder than the one which we are about to describe.

This is the tunnelling of the East River at New York and the linking up of the railway system from Manhatton Island to Long Island City. The long neck of land upon which New York City stands is separated from the mainland by two narrow channels on each side; and before the new tunnel—through which trains are now regularly running—was completed, ferry boats provided the only means of transit, a matter of immense inconvenience to myriads of passengers.

Hitherto there has been only one important railway station in the Empire City—the New York Central. The Pennsylvania Railway now extends right across New York by tunnels under the Hudson River on one side and beneath the East River on the other, thus bringing Long Island City into direct communication.

Not any American firm of engineers could be found ready to tackle the tremendously difficult task presented by the construction of the tunnels under the East River; but Messrs Pearson—who have had more experience of this branch of engineering than any other contractors in the world—undertook the work in face of conditions involving very considerable risk, and have now completed it in the most satisfactory way.

Pearson's had done some successful tunnelling, years ago, beneath the Hudson River at New York; and their experiences since the finish of the first great piece of sub-aqueous boring have been greatly expanded. Particularly in connection with the making of the Blackwell Tunnel beneath the Thames had they obtained further mastery of the secrets and perils of shifting clay. American engineers had watched with interest the difficulties that this famous firm had overcome in London, and there was not much surprise expressed in the United States when it was found that Pearson's had undertaken a job which no American contractors dared to handle. But it was a sore point with the Yankees to have to be taught how to do things by the Britisher. Before they could go to work Messrs. Pearson were compelled to register themselves as an American firm, and had moreover to accept a risk of $2,000,000 should they not succeed in carrying out their contract. This, however, in no way dismayed the great English firm. The bright lexicon of Pearson knows no such word as "fail."

Dangers and difficulties of an almost appalling character presented themselves to the bold yet always confident contractors. Four tunnels had to be driven through the solid rock beneath New York City, then through a mixture of boulders and quicksand, then into quicksand and silt. In the middle of the river there is a low reef breaking up through the quicksand, but so shallow that the tunnels, as they now exist, have their roofs ten feet above the reef in some places, and in few places was there sufficient rock over the outer line of the tubes to form a safe cover for the working gangs.

This meant that there was a continuous peril of the roof of the tunnel being blown out by the immense pressure of air from within. It meant, further, that to drive through the quicksands the men had to work in compressed air which would resist the natural and deadly inclination of the quicksand to rush in and swallow up those plucky excavators. It meant, also, that these men were working continually behind the boring shield in an air pressure of 31 pounds to every square inch of the human body.

And it was known that men affected by compressed air died a horribly painful death, caused by bubbles from the high-pressure atmosphere which penetrated the arteries and produced ruptures, or, when they reached the brain, instant death.

As the shield was advanced, the iron lining of the tubes was erected and covered with rings of cement. The four tubes now extend under the river from two steel caissons or cylinders sunk between First avenue and the shore of the East River, Manhattan, to a similar pair of caissons on the water front of Long Island City. Underground on the Long Island side the tunnels continue diagonally, gradually converging, and meeting finally in one huge shaft.

Jowett and Tennyson.

On one occasion Tennyson was Jowett's guest at the Master's lodge, Balliol, with a few other men, and after some good talk the poet had retired early to his room. Next morning at breakfast Tennyson was in a silent mood, but as the men were rising from the table he said: "Jowett, after I left you last night I wrote a few verses. I am not sure that I have ever done anything better. I will read them to you." Jowett, preparing to do off to his day's work, replied hastily: "Oh, no; thank you, Tennyson. I've no time for that sort of thing just now. I am very busy."

AUSTRALIA ON GUARD.

One of the most noteworthy effects of the federation of the Australian states has been the enormously increased interest in the question of defence. Not only has the Central Government, which now controls the whole of the naval and military defence forces, taken the whole question up, but the public have also come to see that it was of little use to go on developing the rich territory which they own unless they took proper steps to defend their hearths and homes against all comers.

When Lieutenant-General Sir Edward Hutton, K.C.M.G., C.B., assumed command of the troops of the six states of the Commonwealth seven years ago, he found in existence six different systems of military organization, which it was his task to coordinate, into one organic whole.

A memorandum that now been issued by the Department of Defence on the military defence of Australia and its progress since federation. And a very creditable and gratifying account it is. Whereas Sir Edward Hutton was forced to report in 1903 that the system of training for both officers and men was bad, and that "the deficiences in equipment alone are sufficient to place the military forces of the Commonwealth as at present constituted on an insignificant plane of efficiency," it is obvious from the memorandum that a very different state of things prevails to-day. Following the plan adopted in Great Britain, the office of commander-in-chief has been abolished, and a Military Board established, with the Minister of State for Defence at its head. Every department was subjected to a thorough and searching enquiry. The need for action at once became apparent, and the Government proceeded without delay to provide the necessary funds.

The coastal fortifications were found to be armed with obsolete guns, and the complete rearmament was forthwith begun. Since federation the sum of £140,000 has been spent in this direction alone, and in securing an ammunition reserve, exceeding the Imperial scale. This type of gun adopted for the harbor fortresses was the 6-in. B.L. Mark VII., a quick-firing weapon.

Sir Edward Hutton recommended that £525,000 should be spent during a period of five years in bringing the warlike stores equipment up to a satisfactory level. The actual expenditure between 1903-4 and 1908-9 was £719,465, including the outlay on rearmament.

A small arms factory is in course of erection at Lithgow, in New South Wales; at a cost of £97,000, and it is hoped to be able to produce rifles and bayonets at a lower cost than the imported article. A cordite factory is being established at Maribyrnong, near Melbourne, on which £66,000 will be expended, and the Colonial Ammunition Co., which is established at Footscray, not far from the Victorian capital, is extending its plant and premises so as to make Australia self-contained as to the manufacture of small arms ammuniton. The company at present supplies 15,000,000 rounds annually.

Since federation the average annual cost of the military forces has been about £750,000. In 1908-9 the estimates were £839,150, and in the current year (1909-10) the estimates reach a total of £1,306,568. Under the scheme of reorganisation now in progress, one of the most important features is the co-ordination of military training and practice in Australia with that in Great Britain and the other states of the Empire under the Imperial General Staff scheme. It is anticipated that the annual cost of the defences—and this memorandum takes no account of the epoch-making event of the establishment of a true Australian navy—will rise to about £1,742,000 in 1914-1915.—Standard of Empire.

Insurance Companies Lose About $125,000.00 by the Wreck at Spanish River

Double Liability for About Twenty-five Persons

A loss of somewhere in the neighbourhood of $125,000 is what the Accident Insurance Companies estimate the wreck at Spanish River bridge means to them.

They figure that about 25 of those who met death carried Accident Insurance, and the average insurance, according to the tables, is $5,000. In case of death in a railway disaster there is a double liability, making the figure $6,000, or $5,000 to be more conservative.

Their loss may total more than that, for the commercial travellers, a number of whom were killed, usually carry very heavy insurance. In addition, some of the companies make the policies payable on the death of the wife while travelling, though the policy is taken out in the husband's name. In such cases they pay the husband the same amount as they would have paid the wife were the husband killed.

We issue the BEST Accident and Sickness policy offered to the public.

ABBIE BEN ADHEM.

Abbie Ben Adhem, pretty as you please
And dressed as neatly as one ever sees.
One day was absent when her friends began
To turn such absent ones beneath their scan.
"She paints!" vowed one and sadly shook her head.
"She flirts!" another, with a shudder, said.
"I've heard that so and so and so and so," a third
Declared, and all cried, "Well, upon my word!"

And so in half an hour poor Abbie's fame,
As well as reputation and once honored name,
Was torn to tatters, and her friends declared
She was the sort by whom fool men were snared
And that if they were she they'd have more pride
Than to give cause for rumors undenied.

In fact, they came to the conclusion then
That Miss Ben Adhem should not be again
Held in their friendship as she once had been,
But that she should be spurned with glances keen
And that, while some reports might not be true,
Of course "a person never really knew!"

The next day these same friends met to compile
A list of those who should be asked to while Away an afternoon at tea and whist,
And each one then prepared her lengthy list,
Suggesting who to ask and who to snub
For it, you see, was an exclusive club.

And who, think you, was most important guest?
Lo, Miss Ben Adhem's name led all the rest!

"Nine o'clock," he said. "What do you mean by coming at this time of the day? I wonder a man of your means troubles about coming at all. Now, then, what's your excuse?"

Pat considered for a moment, and at last the excuse came.

"Sure, sor," he said, "I dreamed last night I were at a football match which ended in a draw."

"What about that?" interrupted the foreman.

"Well, sor, the referee ordered an extra half hour to be played, and, begorra, I only stopped to see the finish."—San Francisco Chronicle.

Wm. Madill Sells the Great Remedy That Cured B. W. Squires

Here is a very simple yet wholly sincere statement of a Norwood, Ont., man who was cured by using Hyomei—the no cure no pay remedy for catarrh, asthma, hay fever, croup, coughs and colds.

"I feel that I can conscientiously recommend Hyomei for the reason that I had suffered for years with catarrh and nothing gave me the same relief as Hyomei. There was a constant huskiness in my throat, pains across my eyes were almost constant and at times there was much difficulty in breathing. The glands were swollen, causing a soreness and stiffness in my neck. I cannot speak too highly of Hyomei and there is nothing that will give quicker relief for catarrh."—B. W. Squires, Norwood, Ont.

Thousands of just such letters are in existence, and thousands more would be but for the desire to avoid publicity.

If you have catarrh, bestir yourself, and drive it out of your system. Kill the germs. You can do that easily if you use Hyomei (pronounced High-o-me.)

Tubby's Dummy

How an American Met an Attack of Head Hunters.

By BRADFORD K. DANIELS.

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

Tubby Hicks paused in his labored progress along the path which led from the Luzon power plant through the fruit laden longboi bushes to his neat little shack upon an Abra hillside, and as he mopped the sweat from his tropic bleached forehead he gave a low whistle of surprise, for impaled upon a bamboo stake at the turn of the path and on a level with his own eyes was the head of an Ilocano, its pock-marked face looking straight into his with a comical leer. "Humph—did it at one lick," he commented wheezingly as he noted the neat way in which the neck had been severed.

First peering cautiously about him, he hastily wrenched the head from the stake, tucked it under the flap of his wide khaki coat, sauntered on toward home and, wrapping the head in several layers of the Manila Times, he carefully concealed it in the bottom of his trunk.

That evening Tubby, to Sebastian's unbounded surprise, permitted the muchacho to leave an hour earlier than usual and, when the streaming tail of his camisa had vanished round the turn of the path, took possession of the smoke incrusted kitchen with its half dozen primitive clay stoves imbedded in a long trough of ashes. When he had kindled a fire in one of these (the pungent smoke made him sneeze and splutter and anathematize Filipino kitchens in general) he filled with water the largest big bellied jar among Sebastian's sooty pots and, fetching out the mysterious head, dropped it in.

By boiling and rubbing he produced a skull which he stowed once more in the bottom of his trunk and retired to rest under a strictly first class mosquito bar upon a wide and very comfortable old Spanish bed that had cost him 25 pesos.

Somewhat overheated from such unusual exertions, Tubby shifted his bulky form from time to time all over the wide cane woven bottom of the old family cama in a vain search for the coolest spot. And as he puffed and squirmed ponderously about like a stranded grampus he reviewed the situation. "Head hunters, hey?" Another squirm. "Didn't like the way I turned the river aside from their cluster of vile shacks, so they're giving me formal notice to vamoose. Well, it's kind and considerate of 'em, all right, but I guess I like the Abra climate better than Manila, even if it is a bit hot"—another shift made the bed creak—"up here this time of year. Let's see; they're due tomorrow night." And Tubby drew in a long, flabbike gasp as certain possibilities were visualised with startling clearness.

As electrician at the Luzon power plant Tubby was the only white man that side of Vegan, twenty miles away, the force under him consisting wholly of Ilocanos. Of course he could telephone to Captain Aiken for a detachment of constabulary to come up and protect him, but the thought of the way the boys would guy him when he went back to Manila rendered such an alternative impossible.

The following morning Tubby made glad the heart of the cook—recently saddened by the large amount of carefully prepared wood that had disappeared from the kitchen during the night—by giving him and the muchacho a holiday, as he was going into the hills to hunt deer, he declared. That the fat senor ever hunted deer was news to them, but they kept their perplexities to themselves and hastened to the cockpit in the village, which the lazy presidente permitted to be kept open on week days in violation of the new law of the "loco Americanos" against the heavenly sport at any time except on Sundays and feast days.

The servants gone, Tubby slipped the heavy wooden bar across the door, closed the sliding bamboo windows and in the subdued twilight of the shack brought out the skull and set to work. With a pillow under his knees to protect them from the hard bamboo slats of which the floor was constructed, he labored over the skull of that obscure and departed Ilocano with as much thought and care as he would have bestowed upon the installation of a new dynamo. Chisels, mallets, wires big and little, solder and a soldering pot, white paper, a can of kerosene oil, a gimlet, to say nothing of heaps of clothing, littered the floor till noon, when, with a satisfied chuckle, the steaming electrician replaced the skull in the trunk, stood a bulky something in the dark interior of the "aparador," or big movable closet, and then opened the windows to the blessed breeze that chanced to be blowing down from the hills.

When he had taken a shower bath from the cask that he had rigged up over the porch he drew up a bottle from the deep well in which he always kept a supply "on ice," as he phrased it in loving reminiscence, lunched on crackers and mangoes and then started for the plant. With him he took his fieldglasses and carefully studied the distant hills as he proceeded. "Humph—they're filing through the pass there from Bontoc now," he commented after a long look through the glasses at a gash in the distant mountains. "Well, I hope they enjoy their reception," he concluded with a fat chuckle, swinging the glasses over his thick shoulder and waddling on.

When Tubby threw the stub of his seventh Dos Hermanos cigar out of the window that night and put aside a back number of the Argosy it was only 10 o'clock, nearly two hours earlier than it was his custom to retire. Although it was a hot night, he closed the windows carefully, switched off all but one of the electric lights that he had installed on a wire from the power house and then brought forth from the capacious closet a bulky dummy dressed in a suit of his own pink pajamas and placed it in a sitting posture in the middle of the bed. Opening the trunk, he brought out the skull and after fifteen minutes tinkering had it secure upon the shoulders of the effigy.

With a wry face, he then made down a bed in the farther corner behind the closet, where the floor chanced to be made of boards and not of openwork slats through which a spear could easily be thrust. Then he opened wide the bamboo windows and, contrary to his custom, the door, switched off the remaining light and, after a glance into the moonless night through the algeroba trees aglow with fireflies, lay down with a groan of protest upon his hard bed, casting a longing look at the dim outlines of the more comfortable one occupied by his alter ego, as he dryly phrased it.

Tubby Hicks was never known to have a case of "nerves" in all his happy life, and the nature of insomnia was quite unknown to him, except as he had observed it in some of his less fortunate fellow mortals. Tonight, however, the usually imperturbable electrician was as wide awake as a cat. For obvious reasons he dare not smoke; he even dare not roll about in search of a soft spot because of the horrible row the groaning boards made. So he lay upon his aching back and listened to the big lizards that scurried over the ceiling and "lok-u'd" in raucous voices as if deriding his misery.

A clammy thing fell with a smart spat upon his face, and he almost screamed like a schoolgirl, but as the horrible something scrambled away over the wide dome of his stomach he realised that it was only a ten inch lizard that had missed its footing as it frisked along a rafter. Then a pig came nosing about under the kitchen for papaya rinds, and, mistaking the sound for something very different, his heart began to thump ominously. Scarcely had the pig revealed its identity by a satisfied grunt when a party of reveling rats began to dance a ragtime upon the bamboo matting overhead.

But what was that? Tubby opened his mouth and held his breath in an effort to determine. Yes, it surely was the sound of stealthy bare feet upon the bamboo slats of the open platform outside the door. And there, vaguely outlined against the sky, was a dark form rising noiselessly above the window cap. Listen! The faint but unmistakable sound of a spear in the cracks of the bamboo floor under his bed came to him and sent a cold shiver down his spine. Now a dark figure was balancing on the window ledge, spear in hand, and some one was standing in the doorway. Now a half dozen heads were visible at the window to the right of the bed, a villainous forked shield showing between two of them. A hand clutching a poised spear rose stealthily in the doorway—and then Tubby pressed the button.

At the magic touch a skull with eye sockets, nose and mouth aflame appeared upon the shoulders of a portly form in pink pajamas under the mosquito netting, the horrible thing leering at its surroundings in a way that gave even Tubby a thrill. For a moment there was silence nothing short of abysmal, and Tubby noted a score of black eyes bulging with terror from under shaggy manes of hair. With the ghost of a chuckle Tubby pulled a string which released a spring, and the fearful thing under the netting leaped up, the three dozen sixteen candle power lights inside of it that the movement switched on making it glow like a fiery demon from the nether world.

And then Tubby had the surprise of his life. Instead of springing through the windows in a general stampede, the Igorrotes prostrated themselves before the pink glowing god, sending up a chorus of deep guttural groans. One gaunt old savage flopped down so close to Tubby that his feet pressed the luckless electrician's stomach, but the old heathen was so taken up with the newfangled god that he had little surplus thought to bestow upon his pedal extremities.

Then a brilliant idea seized Tubby. Rolling cautiously over, he switched off the current, and the hectic god rapidly faded into blackness. For one long moment Tubby heard nothing but the deep breathing of the dark forms about him, while he held his own breath; then a wandering zephyr strayed in through the nearest window, fanning the bald spot on his cranium, and he sneezed. Promptly a hand came groping in his direction, and in his eagerness to see it he again jabbed at the button and switched on the current.

An ominous grunt from the leathery old monster at the other end of the hand brought every head hunter in the room to his feet, his spear poised in a way that made the genial joker in the corner shiver. For a moment Tubby looked death straight between the eyes; then, with an agility of which he had never dreamed himself capable, he sprang to the bed, slipped under the mosquito netting and, clasping the glowing god in an ardent embrace, stood safe from all danger except that of being roasted alive before daylight brought the presidente and relief.

His Cue.

Supers on the stage are responsible for a great many amusing incidents and Mr. Gerald Lawrence, the London actor, told a particularly good one recently. He was conducting a rehearsal, and at one point of the play, where there is a general assembly of soldiers and courtiers, one of the supers lagged behind. "Why didn't you get off with the others?" cried Mr. Lawrence. "You saw them all go." The man looked confused for a moment, then said, "Well, sir, it wasn't the same cue as I 'ad when I played in this piece afore." Now there could only have been one cue so Mr. Lawrence said, "Really! Well what cue did you have before?" "Well, sir," came the reply, 'it was like this: the gentleman as used to stand behind me used to turn round and say, 'Get off, you idiot!'"

Inducements to Servants.

From the plaintive phraseology of their advertisements, one infers that Australian housewives are confronted with a crisis in the problem of domestic service. One offers "plenty of outings"; another throws out the bait of "Sunday free"; while a third rises one better with "Saturday afternoons and Sundays off."

Princess In the Slums.

Sympathy for the poor, kindred and unconventionality are the chief characteristics of Princess Victoria of Schleswig-Holstein, whose water-color sketches have been sold in aid of King Edward VII. Hospital at Windsor. Many instances are recorded of the princess' devotion of both time and money to the poor, and her untiring labors of love and her complete absence of "side" have gained for her a place in the hearts of the people of the slum districts. In Bermondsey, where her good work is chiefly carried on, few of the dwellers are aware of her identity. Princess Victoria tells many good stories of her work in the slums. On the occasion of a visit to a poor home her royal highness found a pale-faced young mother unsuccessfully trying to soothe her crying baby to sleep. Princess Victoria suggested that the mother should try milk as a remedy. "No," said the parent, "'e's 'ad enough. There's only one thing that will do it, and I can't do it because I've got a sore throat." "Perhaps I could?" suggested the royal visitor. "I should be glad if you could," responded the woman. "If you make a noise like a bottle 'e'll be off in a jiffy."

INJURIES & SKIN SORES—QUICK CURE.

A little child ran crying to her mother the other day with a nasty flesh wound and asked for Zam-Buk.

There lies a more powerful argument for Zam-Buk than even the scientists can bring. The child had had Zam-Buk before, and knew it eased pain and healed.

Zam-Buk works in two directions. Prevents worse results from a skin injury or skin disease (such as festering and blood poisoning) while it repairs the damage already done. Zam-Buk is entirely herbal, is pure, contains no trace of animal fat or mineral coloring. Surest and quickest known healer.

FATHER AND SON BENEFIT FROM USE OF THIS BALM.

Mr. Walter Adams, 177 Railway Ave., Stratford, says:—"My son, William, while playing barefooted about the backyard, cut his little toe on the sharp edge of a piece of tin. The toe was cut at the first joint, and almost severed from the foot. My wife hurriedly bathed it with warm water, afterwards applying some lint thickly spread with Zam-Buk. The healing balm quickly checked the flow of blood, eased and soothed the pain, and prevented inflammation and more serious results. In a few weeks Zam-Buk healed the wound so nicely that my son was able once more to go about, and also to wear his shoes without the slightest inconvenience. Not only is Zam-Buk valuable for wounds and cuts, but, used as an embrocation, I have also found it effective for rheumatic pains."

Zam-Buk cures cuts, burns, scalds, ringworm, ulcers, cold cracks, and all skin diseases. Druggists and stores, 50c box, or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price.

GREAT IMPROVEMENT WILL BE MADE AT JUNIPER ISLAND

Mr. T. W. Robinson, who has had the lease of the store at Juniper Island for twenty-three consecutive summers will not act as manager of the store this year, but Mr. Harry Stock, of Stock's Bakery, will be in charge this year. In view of Mr. Robinson's resignation Mr. Stock was granted the lease by a special committee appointed by the Stoney Lake Cottager's Association. The committee met at R. Neill's store yesterday afternoon.

The store, which is one of the best known places on the Kawartha Lakes, will be greatly improved this summer and will no doubt prove a very popular resort. It will be enlarged considerably and will carry a general stock to meet the requirements of the summer cottagers and visitors. A large gasoline tank will be placed at the wharf, where the supply of gasoline may be replenished by the launch owners. An excellent bakery will also be established and a meal service at all hours will be inaugurated. A new boathouse with accommodation for about twenty-five or thirty boats will be erected and a lighting plant will be operated on the island.

It is the intention of the Cottagers' Association to cater thoroughly to the needs of the public.

PASSED AWAY IN MONTREAL HOSPITAL

The death occurred in the General Hospital, Montreal, on Saturday, March 12th, of Miss S. Preston, who was known to a large number of Peterborough people. A number of years ago she was a member of the local Collegiate Institute and Public school staffs. From Peterborough she went to British Columbia and met with much success as a teacher in that province. About a month ago she became ill and came east, and entered the General Hospital at Montreal for treatment.

The funeral took place on Tuesday of this week from the home of the deceased's mother, Mrs. Porter Preston, at Bethany. It was largely attended, many being present from outside points. The service was conducted by the Anglican rector at Bethany and the remains were laid to rest in the St. Mary's cemetery. Besides her mother, the late Miss Preston is survived by several sisters.

Mail Under Difficulties.

In old times there were various devices resorted to to establish mail communication over the water. The steamers from England for several years after the transatlantic service was established threw a can overboard off Cape Race in which the latest English newspaper was enclosed, together with a synopsis of the state of British markets. A pigeon express was likewise established.

The day for thus sending the news has not yet passed. The people of Magdalen Islands have adopted the plan of enclosing their letters in a barrel and sending it adrift on the waters. A barrel was picked up on the Cape Breton coast the other day which was found to contain between thirty and forty letters. These letters were received at the postoffice that night, and were transmitted to their respective addresses. It is the intention to send a similar barrel once a week.

The Magdalen Islanders have adopted this plan because of the fact that the cable between the Islands and Cape North has become unworkable, and the opportunity has been thus taken from them of sending their messages by cable, and having them transmitted, in due course, through the mails.

Too Slow.

"I can say one thing in favor of Mr. Featherly," remarked the landlady. "He never takes the last piece of bread on the plate."

"No, indeed," assented Dumley cordially. "Featherly ain't quick enough."

PRESS DOING MORE THAN THE SCHOOLS

For Civilization, is Decision in Interesting Debate at Lakefield —Other News

Special to the Review.

Lakefield, March 16.—A regular meeting of the Lakefield High School Literary Society was held on Friday afternoon. A very interesting feature of the programme was a debate on the subject:

"Resolved, that Schools have done more for Civilization than the Press."

The speakers for the affirmative were Playter Sherin, Victor Bullock and L. Kennealy. For the negative, H. Madgill, Miss McDougal and Miss Brown. The judges were: Miss Halliday, Miss J. Thompson and Mr. H. Young.

The speakers on both sides showed very promising signs of future success in oratory, but after a spirited debate, the judges decided that the negative had the best of the argument.

Friday, March 18th, will be "Massey-Harris Day" in Lakefield, when the annual delivery of machinery will be made by Mr. Wm. Batten, the popular agent of the Massey-Harris Co. in this section.

The Epworth League held a very successful concert in the Town Hall on Monday evening. Quite a number were present, and the programme was a very enjoyable one. The Chemong Indian choir was present, and the numbers given by the choir were appreciated by all.

QUACK! QUACK! QUACK!

There are folks in every neighborhood
Who surely have the knack
To keep the whole pace lively
With their quack, quack, quack!

There's that gossip with the twirling tongue,
Just like an endless chain,
Who quacketh here and quacketh there
And quacketh back again.

Oh, you old quack, when do you sleep?
How do you eat your grub
With tongue a-twirling overtime
A-rub-a-dub-a-dub?

Then there's that Mr. Goody Good,
Who thinks all others black.
He tells us all our awful faults
With his quack, quack, quack!

Look here, you whitewashed Pharisee!
When do you your prayers say?
When do you practice what you preach
With tongue always in play?

I fear when you reach yonder gate
Peter will say to you: "Too late!
You can't come in because you're lacking.
You wasted your whole life a-quacking."

But now, lest you charge me with quacking,
I guess I'd better just be slacking,
For if I mention every quack
I might put you, too, on the rack.

POINTERS FOR HOUSING DUCKS.

Ducks aren't partial to palaces; but, like human quacks, they can't sleep with cold feet. Therefore, in building, make your duck house simple, but be sure to have a dry floor, for cold trilbys mean dead ducks.

Quacks can stand more cold than a hen, as their thick feathers seem cold proof, but as they sleep sitting a good dry earth floor covered with leaves, swamp grass or straw and protected from drafts is necessary.

Select a well drained site, have floor higher than outside surface and calculate a space of 12 by 14 feet for every fifteen old ducks.

Use rough inch boards, strip all cracks, have a water tight shed roof, place windows to catch the sun and keep floor space clear, as ducks roost and lay on the ground, and obstructions mean crippled ducks.

ROOMS AND RUNS FOR DUCKS.

Arrange for good ventilation, for ducks need lots of air and must not be shut up tight, as they cannot stand confinement like hens.

Arrange outside yards and let them go in and out at their pleasure, for it is their ceaseless motion that keeps their digestive organs in good condition.

Place the water founts outside, where they may splash to their hearts' content.

Our picture shows a good plan for house, yards and water runs for breeding ducks that is simple and may be adapted to large or small flocks.

Breeding ducks should have water, if possible, as their eggs are more fertile than otherwise.

FEATHERS AND EGGSHELLS.

A stale egg naturally dries up, and thus the air space within grows larger. Place a fresh and stale egg in water and the latter will soon be covered with bubbles. Perhaps it's one of those historic hot air, haymow nest eggs.

New Jersey seems to be a paradise for chicken thieves. A thief stole 200 fowls from a Burlington farmer and stopped at the next farm and stole corn to fatten them. The Vineland Poultry association offers $100 for the thief who stole forty-five show birds from a member.

While a fully matured Mammoth Bronze turkey tom weighs thirty-six pounds and a White Holland twenty-six pounds, it requires one year longer for the Bronze to mature.

A woman of Ocean Springs, Miss., was recently sent to the penitentiary for stealing a half pound of butter and five eggs. Her sentence was seven years, and it was affirmed by the supreme court. Too awful sad for comment when so called justice gives such a terror for so small an offense and men steal a million and steal on and on.

A foreigner in Pottsville, Pa., instead of killing his Thanksgiving duck with his stiletto went into his back yard and killed it with a shotgun. As unnaturalized foreigners in Pennsylvania dare not own guns, he was arrested, fined $31, and his gun was confiscated. With such luck could he be thankful over that duck?

The United States agricultural report is $8,760,000,000 and beats the record by $863,000,000. Now, if the poultry census is thorough, as promised by authorities, the people of this country will get a greater surprise. Please get ready to be stunned.

A new use for chicken is reported from St. Joseph's hospital, Omaha, Neb., where a portion of a child's diseased jawbone was removed and a piece of chicken bone inserted. The operation was a success. Jaw wranglers may now swing their talk machines without fear, for chicken bone substitutes are not dear.

A DR. JOHNSON STORY.

Illustrating the Difference Between Assertion and Argument.

Among the anecdotes of Dr. Johnson is one written not by his biographer, Boswell, but by another contemporary, Dr. John Moore. It is illustrative of Johnson's manner and the importance he gave to argument properly conducted. Dr. Moore said that he was one of a company at Mr. Hoole's. Mention was made that counsel were to be heard in a certain case at the bar of the House of Commons. One of the company asked Sir James Johnston if he intended to be present. Sir James answered that he believed he should not, because he paid little regard to the arguments of counsel at the bar of the House of Commons.

"Wherefore," asked Dr. Johnson, "do you pay little regard to their arguments, sir?"

"Because," replied Sir James, "they argue for their fee."

"What is it to you, sir," rejoined Dr. Johnson, "what they argue for? You have nothing to do with their motive, but you ought to weigh their argument. Sir, you seem to confound argument with assertion. But there is an essential distinction between them. Assertion is like an arrow shot from a longbow—the force with which it strikes depends upon the strength of the arm that draws it. But argument is like an arrow from a crossbow, which has equal force whether shot by a boy or by a giant."

The narrator of this incident said the whole company was struck by the aptness and beauty of this illustration, which certainly was expressed in clear and forceful English and with few of the Latin derivatives with which the good doctor delighted to ornament his sentences.

One of the company said, "That is indeed one of the most just and admirable illustrations that I ever heard."

"Sir," said Dr. Johnson, "the illustration is none of mine. You will find it in Bacon."

Englishmen "From Missouri."

There are certain Englishmen who, in the language of the street, are "from Missouri." That is to say they want to find out for themselves. No more colonial newspaper can satisfy them of the genuineness of its news. In fact in some of the Toronto newspaper offices, after calling up over the 'phone to find out the result in such and such a riding, men of this sort have argued at length with the newspaper man at the other end of the wire that his news must be wrong. A Torontonian encountered one of this type the other day. They were waiting at a corner for a street car together and the Canadian at once sized up the other for an Englishman of some education. It was stamped on his dress and demeanor.

"Well, how do the English elections suit you?" he said, by way of an opener.

The Britisher looked him over coldly before making up his mind to reply. At last he vouchsafed an answer.

"Well, really, you know," he said, "I won't know anything about them until I get my newspapers from home."

"Indeed," said the Canadian, "which is the longer distance over home or back here?"

"Back here, I should say," was the response, and the conversation terminated.

GOVERNMENT TRYING TO KEEP MEMBERS FROM EXPLAINING

The Three Conservatives Who Resigned From the Lumsden Enquiry Have Not Had a Chance to Say Why They Quit.

Ottawa, March 17.—Three days of battle in the House of Commons has caused party feeling to run high, and never has the Government, during its years of office, had to face such a determined opposition as now.

Yesterday there was a businesslike scrap of three hours over an unusual incident connected with the Lumsden investigation. Mr. Borden and the Premier entered into the mix-up, and Victor Geoffrion, M.P., was handled by the former in a way he won't forget for a while.

Haughton Lennox (South Simcoe), opened the firing. He demanded to know why the terms of his resolution passed by the Lumsden committee had been changed. The original reading was that the evidence should be "reported to the House from day to day." It was altered to read "printed from day to day."

Until the proceedings of a committee are reported to the House, it is against the rules to make any reference to the proceedings of that committee, hence it is that the retirement of the three Conservatives from the Lumsden investigation has not come formally to the notice of Parliament. The report was held back, declares Mr. Lennox.

Mr. Lennox demanded "how, and by whose hand, and at whose instance, this avenue of information was so effectually blocked." He challenged Mr. Geoffrion, chairman of the committee, to get up and say he had no hand in the mutilation of the report. Mr. Geoffrion did not accept the challenge.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, however, rose to his defence, and resented what he described as an unwarranted insinuation. Samuel Barker then pointed out that the three Conservatives who had retired from the committee had waited twelve days to explain their position to the House. It was apparently intended to prevent them making an explanation. He ridiculed the enquiry conducted by four supporters of the Government, who had "appointed counsel to conduct a prosecution against their own friends."

E. M Macdonald (Pictou) described the Lennox motion as a catch motion, and characterized his procedure as "playing the baby act"

T W Crothers (West Elgin) told the House that Mr Geoffrion had read the resolution of Mr, Lennox to the committee.

Mr. Geoffrion interjected: "I did not read it," and Mr. Crothers replied: "According to the rules of the House, I must accept that statement, but I have stated what took place."

Mr. Crothers then turned his attention to the Premier, and asked him if the reports would be laid on the table, now that the alteration of the resolution had been exposed. He sat down to give the Premier an opportunity to reply, but Sir Wilfrid refused to answer.

Mr. Geoffrion spoke, but despite calls from the Opposition benches, he refused to come to the point.

"What interest would I have to make false reports?" was his argument.

"One of the most extraordinary incidents that has occurred in the history of Parliament," was R. L. Borden's description of the case. Mr Geoffrion, he said, had placed himself in an unfortunate position, not conducive to the decency and dignity of Parliament. It would be well for him to resign the chairmanship of the committee.

Sir Wilfrid described Mr. Borden's speech as false heroics, and advised the mutinous Conservative members of the committee to return to it.

Hon. Wm. Pugsley laid on the table the papers for the development of the water power at the Long Sault Rapids, promised during the course of the long debate on the bill to incorporate the St. Lawrence Power Transmission Co. He also tabled a copy of the report of the engineers.

Hon. H. R. Emmerson said what they wanted was the original report of the Government engineers. Mr Pugsley thought could be got.

The point at issue between H. D Lumsden, C.E., and his subordinate engineers was further illustrated yesterday morning when the former chief engineer admitted once more that the question at issue is one of engineering differences of opinion rather than of bad faith on the part of the engineers.

R. C. Smith, K.C., counsel for the Transcontinental Commission, read opinion by Donald MacMaster, K.C., to the effect that rock found in ledges in masses of more than one cubic yard should be classed as solid rock when it had to be removed by blasting.

Mr. Lumsden said that if a contractor lost much in blasting it would not make the substance solid rock.

Mr. Smith next read an opinion from Wallace Nesbitt, K.C., to the effect that stones and boulders found in masses formed conglomerate and was more difficult to deal with than solid rock. Mr. Lumsden agreed that in such case it should be classed as solid rock. Mr. Nesbitt further expressed the view that solid rock in a commercial sense was material in mass which required blasting to be removed, but Mr. Lumsden declined to accept that definition.

No Cable to Canada.

London, March 17.—In the House of Commons, answering H. Lawson, M.P., the Postmaster-General said no proposals were being considered by the Government with reference to a submarine cable to Canada.

MANY BIG BILLS PUT THROUGH ONTARIO HOUSE

Sir James Makes Amendments to His Two Measures Regarding Rights of the Railway Board Over Street Railway—Big Grist of Work Finishes To-day

Toronto, March 17. Some of the most important measures of the present or any other session were under discussion in the Legislature yesterdya afternoon, on the next to the last day of the session.

Sir James Whitney's two bills dealing with "the intolerable state of affairs," with regard to the Toronto Street Railway situation, passed their third readings. Important amendments were made to each.

To the former a provision is added constituting the Ontario Railway and Municipal Board the judge in case of dispute as to the existence of exclusive rights of radial railways in the annexed districts, in which the bill permits the city to build lines.

To the other bill a clause is added limiting the power of the Railway Board to order extensions and better equipment of street railways, to the City of Toronto.

The Toronto bill was put through committee without discussion or amendment, and after Sir James Whitney's street railway bills had been disposed of, was given its third reading without comment. Sam Charters' telephone bill was also given its third reading, and the license amendment act also passed the last stage.

In spite of the vigorous opposition of Liberal members of the House, Hon. Adam Beck's bill, which gives power to the Hydro-Electric Commission to regulate and inspect, under a penalty of $100 a day for non-compliance with their orders, the operation and equipment of the works of all municipalities and corporations supplying power and light, was passed through committee yesterday without amendment and given its third reading.

J. D. McDougal (East Ottawa) complained that this clause made the commission the judge over its own competitors. The railway board was the right tribunal.

Sir James Whitney "The commission is not a competitor. It is the municipalities that compete."

Hon. A. G. MacKay "Surely the hydro is an operating commission for the transmission of all power."

Among the other provisions of the bill, the question of compensation for easements is brought under the Public Works Act.

A motion of Hon. A. G. MacKay to refer back with instructions to strike out the clause objected to was declared lost on division. The bill was given its third reading.

On a division of 59 to 17 Mr. Studholme voting with the Government, Hon. A. G. MacKay's bill amending the Hydro-Electric act to allow owners of easements to sue without a fiat and to collect damages, no matter how occasioned, was declared lost on its second reading.

Hon. A. G. MacKay made a strong plea for technical schools all over the province. He was not making a political question of it. Neither the present nor the old Government had been moving fast enough in the matter. He did not say the province should support these entirely. What was wanted was something in the shape of intelligent direction.

"This state cannot afford to drop the young man who has to go to the workshop at an early age," said Mr. MacKay. "That is where our educational system is weak, undeveloped and ill-balanced."

Col. Hendrie moved an amendment to Mr. MacKay's resolution, expressing appreciation of what had been already done and for the work of the Dominion commission, with a promise of something to be done in the near future.

The amendment carried on a division of 65 to 18.

The slate was cleared off, with the exception of Allan Studholme's eight hour day act, the statute law amendment act, the supply bill and the reception of the report of the public accounts committee.

VICTIM OF DETROIT ICE CAKE TRAGEDY MAY BE MRS. BEST

Her Husband, Arthur J. Best, of Camber, Ont., is Arrested and Taken to Detroit to Tell What He Can About the Affair.

Detroit, Mich., March 17.—Mrs. Arthur J. Best, formerly Miss Alice Frankfruth, of 291 Lawton avenue, Detroit, is believed to be the name of the woman who was seen floating down the river after midnight on Saturday on a cake of ice, and heard shrieking wildly for help. She was drowned before aid could reach her.

The Detroit police yesterday ordered the arrest of her husband, a young man living in Comber, Ont., township, Tilbury West, 40 miles distant from Windsor. Best was arrested at noon.

The bride of a month was married on Feb. 8 to Best. They did not live together, however. She stayed with her people, and he went to work as a tinsmith in Comber.

On Saturday he went to Detroit, and was to have spent Sunday at her brother's home, with the bride, who, though only 23 years of age, was four years her husband's senior. He says now he decided not to go to the house and placed his wife on a Brush street car, to send her home.

When Mrs. Best did not come home enquiries were made, and the family of the girl, after reading about the dramatic drowning of a mysterious woman in the river, telephone to Best, at Comber, and asked where their daughter was.

"I haven't seen her," Best replied.

The Frankfruth family is well known. The girl's mother lives in Comber, and is reputed to be wealthy.

Best arrived in Windsor at five o'clock. At the Windsor police headquarters, detectives from Detroit were waiting, and the prisoner agreed readily to accompany them across the river, as he expressed it, "to help clear this thing up right."

After he had been served with a substantial supper, Best was taken before Chief of Detectives McDonnell, and asked to explain his movements last Saturday night.

Carefully, as weighing every word, the suspect told of having spent the evening with his wife in walking about the city. About 11 p.m. she accompanied him to the Brush street depot, that he might catch a train for Comber. He put Mrs. Best on a street car for home and then went into the train shed.

On several unimportant instances Best contradicted himself, but the statement that he went to the Brush street depot to catch a train for Comber is the most damaging. No trains leave this station for Comber, and as Best had been in the habit of coming to Detroit at frequent intervals, he must have known the proper station to go to.

Best denied strenuously that he had walked out towards the dock at Brush street, and said he was of the opinion his wife had become despondent and had jumped into the river.

A GERMAN INVASION OF CANADA

Berlin, March 17.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Men familiar with the trade practices of the Dominion, especially in the rapidly developing communities of the middle and far west, are being engaged at fancy salaries and will be despatched to the field of operations equipped to conduct one of the most active business campaigns Germany ever waged on foreign soil.

The management of an aniline dye syndicate, Germany's most important chemical trade, says the new tariff conditions justify the hope for a heavy increase in the sale of the syndicate's products in Canada.

Herr Graumonn, proprietor of an important millinery establishment, says: "The settlement of the tariff war will certainly be of immense benefit to the entire German textile trade."

A leading manufacturer of overcoats and suits says: "Our branch has for a long time been magnificently organized in Canada. Our travelers cover the entire Dominion. Our exports are sure to increase extraordinarily henceforth, as the country's consuming power is enormous."

Twelve years ago the herds there numbered 375,000, and they have been reduced to 134,000, while the breeding seals have been reduced in the same time from 130,000 to 56,000. The President suggests negotiations may be carried on with foreign nations to prevent pelagic sealing.

London, March 17.—The Association of Chambers of Commerce of the United Kingdom in session here marked its jubilee annual meeting by adopting resolutions in favor of a system of tariff reform "in the interests of British trade, increased employment and colonial preference."

There was an animated discussion of the resolution which developed considerable opposition, but the vote by chambers showed the tariff reformers to be in the majority 51 to 12. Forty-one chambers took a neutral attitude.

The association proposes to urge the Government to take the necessary steps to carry out the purpose of the resolutions.

The association also passed a resolution in favor of an imperial council of commerce, on lines suggested by the Congress of Chambers at Sydney.

SCHOOL BOYS ARE BURGLARS

St. Mary's Ont., March 17.—Three St. Mary's school boys of respectable parentage, are charged with breaking into the stores of Parsons' Fair, and the St. Mary's Hardware Store, in January, and taking guns, traps, cutlery, and other things. WHAT ARE THEIR MOTIVES?

The St. Lawrence Power Transmission Bill, over which the House of Commons at Ottawa fought for seventeen hours, is part of a great American scheme for seizing the mighty water power of the St. Lawrence. Although it is a private bill the Laurier Government tried to force it through without allowing the Opposition to see the plans. Cabinet Ministers sat up all night to help the American capitalists who are interested in this project. What are the motives of the Government? The Ministers must know that they are exciting popular suspicion by making such strenuous efforts on behalf of foreign capitalists. What do they expect to gain to compensate them for the loss of popular favor? They were forced in the end to promise to allow the Opposition to see the plans before going further with the Bill.

TALK OF SEPARATION

Referring to the fact that the Toronto Globe protests against the talk about separatism in connection with the Laurier navy scheme, the Hamilton Herald says: "Nothing has been said and done to cause this talk more than the Globe's own statement that Canada is moving in the direction of independence, and that it is better that the movement should be 'so slow as to attract little attention and to cause no irritation.'"

Sir Wilfrid Laurier's remark that Canada would some day drop out of the Empire in the same way that ripe fruit drops off the stem, also excited much suspicion. If Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the Globe would both say frankly that they have changed their views, and no longer look forward to the eventual separation of Canada from the Empire the criticism to which the Globe objects would soon cease. The trouble is that Sir Wilfrid Laurier is quite willing to have his separatist speeches quoted in Quebec province, but does not like to see them quoted in Ontario.

UNCERTAINTY OF TARIFF WAR

From a Canadian point of view the most objectionable feature of a tariff war resulting in the raising of Canadian duties on American products would be the uncertainty of it. No one would know how long it would last. The two governments might come to an understanding in a few months or the disagreement might continue for years. Under these circumstances there would be some hesitation about enlarging Canadian plants or establishing new ones to meet the extra demand for goods made in Canada, which would result from the shutting out of American goods.

On the other hand, if the general tariff of Canada were increased as a permanent policy there would immediately be extraordinary activity in Canada. American manufacturers having a large business in Canada would be forced to establish branch factories in this country or hand over their business to Canadian competitors. There would be busy times in Peterborough then if this city got its fair proportion of the new industries that would be established in Canada.

MAGIC IN CANADA

All the ancient tales of magicians who transmuted common metals into gold are outdone by actual facts in Canada. Nearly all along the Government section of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, which is being constructed under the supervision of the National Transcontinental Railway Commission, ordinary clay or gravel turns to rock in the most extraordinary manner and then the rock turns to gold. The Government engineers made estimates of the quantity of ordinary excavation, loose rock excavation and solid rock excavation there would be on each section and the agreements with contractors were made on the basis of these estimates. Very high prices were to be paid by the Government for solid rock excavation, somewhat lower prices for loose rock excavation and very much lower for ordinary excavation.

Take contract No. 1 for example, the Government engineers estimated beforehand that there would be no solid rock, 100,000 yards of loose rock and 1,841,000, feet of common excavation. On this basis a contract was made to pay $1.50 per yard for solid rock, 55 cents per yard for loose rock and 25 cents per yard for common excavation But by some strange magic 1,320,270 of the ordinary earth was transformed into 12,000 yards of solid rock and 938,600 yards of loose rock, leaving only 520,730 yards of common excavation to be done. The magician's wand with which this strange transformation is alleged to have been accomplished is called over-classification.

As the Government pays $1.50 to the contractors for each yard of solid rock and 55 cents for each yard of loose rock it is easy to understand how the rock turns to gold, but exactly how the common clay, sand or gravel turns into loose rock and solid rock has not yet been revealed as the Laurier Government carefully guards the secret.

THE BRITISH NAVAL ESTIMATES

During the recent Canadian discussions on the naval question, the speeches of Premier Asquith, Mr. Mr. Reginald McKenna, First Lord of the Admiralty, and Sir Edward Grey were quoted by both Conservative and Liberal politicians. The Conservatives quoted speeches made some months before the recent election campaign. The Liberals quoted speeches made during the election campaign. The one set of speeches declared that the situation was very grave. The other set minimized the danger. One very striking quotation from a speech of Sir Edward Grey was made by the Conservative leader, Robert L. Borden. Sir Edward Grey said:—

"First of all the House and the country are perfectly right in the view that the situation is grave. A new situation in the country is created by the German programme. Whether that programme is carried out quickly or slowly the fact of its existence makes a new situation. When that programme is completed, Germany, a great country close to our shores, will have a fleet of 33 Dreadnoughts. That fleet would be the most powerful which the world has ever yet seen. It is true that there is not one of them in commission yet; but it is equally true that the whole programme comprises what I have said, and when completed the new fleet will be the most powerful fleet which the world has yet seen. That imposes upon us the necessity, of which we are now at the beginning—except so far as we have Dreadnoughts already—of rebuilding the whole of our fleet. That is what the situation is."

Equally alarming was the quotation from a speech of Premier Asquith, who said:

"There has been such an enormous development in Germany, not only in the provision of shipyards and ships on which the bulk or fabric of a ship can be built or prepared, but what is still more serious—in the provision for gun mountings and armaments of these great monsters, those Dreadnoughts, which are now the dominating type of ship—such an enormous development—and I will venture to say this without attempting to excite anything in the nature of unnecessary alarm, in this country—such an enormous development as to be so serious a development from our national point of view that we could no longer take to ourselves, as we could a year ago with reason, the consoling and comforting reflection that we have the advantage in the speed and rate at which ships can be constructed. This is a fatal and most serious fact."

But Sir Wilfrid Laurier thought the election time speeches showed that there was no danger, and that consequently it was not necessary for Canada to order Dreadnoughts.

Now the election excitement is over and the Liberal Government of the United Kingdom, having settled down to business again, takes a very grave view of the situation, and asks Parliament to sanction the largest naval estimates ever proposed. Evidently Mr. Borden was right in thinking an emergency existed which demanded prompt action on the part of Canada.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Cheap power and cheap transportation are the modern city builders.

Manufacturing industries are the foundation stones of civic prosperity.

Any citizen who would like to make suggestions to the City Council or the Board of Trade should write a short letter to The Review setting forth his views.

Every additional workingman employed in the manufacturing industries of Peterborough makes extra trade for Peterborough merchants, not only because workingmen and their families purchase liberally at the stores, but also because they consume farm products, thus creating a profitable market for the farmers who get their supplies from Peterborough merchants.

The Giant's Strength

By BASIL KING,

Copyright, 1908, by Harper & Brothers.

"I haven't been crying," she said hurriedly. "I've been playing, and I've won a lot of money. I don't quite know what to do with it."

"So ho!" he laughed. "That's what you do when your father's back is turned!"

"I shan't do it again," she said in some confusion as she moved out of the ring immediately around the table. "You see, it was this way: I played against that tall young man over there. Don't look now, because he'll notice it. That is, whatever he did on one side of the table I did on the other, and he always lost, and I always won. I'm so sorry. He didn't look as if he could afford to lose, and he didn't keep on."

"What young man do you mean? I don't see him."

"He's tall and well set up, with a pointed brown beard and rather gleaming eyes. No; he's gone," she added, stealing a glance to where he had been standing. "Ah, there he is now, coming round the table! He's coming this way. Don't look. He'll know I've been speaking of him. Come away. There's papa. Let us go to him."

But it was too late. The unknown young man and the duke were already shaking hands with the cordiality of long standing friendship. Paula tried to slip out of her embarrassment by gliding round them and taking her place beside her father. He was talking to a knot of people she did not know, but she was near enough to him to be under his protection, while not so far from the duke as to escape hearing some of the remarks between him and the stranger.

Through the hum of movement and conversation about her she caught a sympathetic baritone quality of voice. From the English precision of his enunciation and the American plaintiveness of his inflections she guessed he was one of those fellow countrymen of her own who have lived or studied abroad. The duke catechised him freely, and he replied with the sort of detail one gives only to one's friends.

He had been working in Rome and would have remained till after Easter only that he had a couple of commissions for portraits in Paris. Oh, yes, commissions did come in, but very slowly. Perhaps it would be different some day. Yes, his mother was quite accustomed to her blindness now, but so feeble that they might lose her at any minute. Marah was well and, as usual, working hard. He was staying only a day or two at Monte Carlo just to break the journey from Rome. He hoped to have something in the next Salon, though he had nothing ready yet. Perhaps if Lady Alice were passing through Paris she would look in and give him the benefit of her advice.

Then came the question Paula was afraid of. Would the duke tell him who was the tall young lady in a blue dress and black hat who had spoken to him on turning away from the table? Of the reply she caught only the end of the sentence—"and you must know her."

She felt herself flushing with embarrassment, but as the duke approached she knew the only dignified thing to do was to turn and greet him pleasantly.

"Miss Trafford," he said, with the awkward air he always had at such moments, "I want you to know a very old friend of ours, Mr. Roger Winship."

"Mr. Winship's face," she laughed, "is perfectly familiar to me. I've been watching him from the other side of the roulette table for nearly half an hour."

"And you saw the ill will of the gods against me," he returned easily. "But I had the gratification of knowing that I couldn't lose unless you won. That was something."

"Haven't we met before?" she asked, with a hurried change of topic.

"No; never."

The quick decisiveness of tone and the curious gleam of his eyes in speaking the brief words were details she remembered afterward.

"And yet," she persisted, "your name is very well known to me. I've heard it often."

"That isn't impossible," he admitted, with a forced smile, "though you must have been very young."

"I know I've heard of a Roger Winship," she continued, as if searching in her memory. "It must have been my father"—

"Probably," he interrupted, "but it was so long ago"—

"That it was your father's name and not yours that I've heard mentioned. Were you going to say that?"

"It was a long time ago," he repeated, the forced smile gone. "I don't suppose that either you or I"—

He hesitated, and Paula saw that it would be best to let the subject drop. The duke broke in with a remark or two, and after a few further words Winship bade them good evening and passed on.

"What am I to do with all this money?" Paula asked when she and Wiltshire were alone again.

"You might give it in charity," he suggested.

"No; I wouldn't do that. I couldn't give in charity money to which I felt some one else had a prior claim. And," she pursued, with some hesitation, "I suppose I was right in fancying that he is poor."

"Oh, yes; he's poor enough. He's a portrait painter and still has his way to make. Alice got to know him and his sister when she took it into her head to study art in Paris. She brings them over every now and then to stay with us at Edenbridge, or at least she did till the poor old lady grew too blind. I like this young fellow. He's full of ideas, and we've had some jolly talks together."

"I've heard your sister spoken of as a great authority on art. Does she think this Mr. Winship"—

"She says she doesn't think—she knows. In ten years' time, she believes, he will have such a place as Sargent holds today."

"Then what shall I do with the money?" Paula said again.

"What can you do but give it away or spend it?"

"I can keep it," she returned thoughtfully. "I may find a way of getting him to take it back."

CHAPTER II.

"WHAT connection have I with the name of Roger Winship?"

"Oh, that dreadful man!" Mrs. Trafford cried, with a little gasp. "I haven't heard of him for years."

"Do you mean old Roger Winship?" George Trafford asked, yawning as he slipped down lazily in his armchair and stretched his legs before the fire.

"I mean any Roger Winship," Paula replied. "I've heard the name tonight, and I seem to have known it before."

"How on earth did it happen?" came from Mrs. Trafford.

"There was a young man at the Casino, rather an interesting looking man, a friend of the duke's. The duke spoke to him and then introduced him to me. I'd noticed him before that."

"I'm surprised at the duke. It's very queer the sort of people who seem to know one another nowadays."

Mrs. Trafford spoke with as much severity as a beaming content would permit. Handsome, dimpling and energetic, she was spending her middle age in the serene satisfaction of seeing all her dreams fulfilled.

The daughter of a New England coal merchant, her modest fortune had been the foundation on which the colossal coal trust had been built up. It was to her credit to have married a poor man certain that a great industrial empire awaited him. She had married for love against the wishes of her family, but her love had been based on admiration. Her husband and she had passed through good years and evil years, had lived sparingly, had watched and planned and combined and made their business march with the march of the country. She had seen him rise with the swiftness and sureness of a Bonaparte to the highest financial position, first in Vermont, then in New England, then in America, then in the world. Before he was sixty or she was fifty Trafford was a name to go with Rothschild. It was a name that meant not only the power of money, but the power of power, the success of those who threw in their destinies with it and the ruin of those who opposed it.

During the years in which the great trust was being organized and maintained the Traffords had lived in an atmosphere of battle. There were suits in the law courts, appeals to supreme courts, state legislatures to be managed, congress to be appeased, foreign trade marts to be invaded and small competitors to be crushed out at home. It had been exciting and often dramatic, but as middle age drew on and most of the ends had been gained it was pleasant to settle down and enjoy the hardly won laurels in peace. George Trafford, whose late father, Andrew Trafford, had shared the family elevation, was equal now to taking his uncle's place in everything but the supreme command. In the exercise of this office Paul Trafford himself was never idle, hurrying now to one great capital, now to another, with but brief intervals to spend with his wife and daughter at home.

Home now meant Paris. The dust of conflict being still thick in New York, it was natural that Mrs. Trafford at least should prefer a place of abode where she could breathe more freely. It was not less natural that the enticements of fashion and fine weather as well as the needs of Mrs. Trafford's health should draw them in winter to the Riviera. The coming of the George Traffords from America as well as the possibility of Paula's engagement to the Duke of Wiltshire—a possibility which was only awaiting her final word to become a certainty—offered a reason for assembling something like a family party.

At the present minute they were spending the last desultory half hour of the evening in Mrs. Trafford's sitting room before parting for the night. Mr. Trafford had already gone to his apartment, and Mrs. George, beating back a yawn with the gloves she had just pulled off, was preparing to take her husband off to theirs. Paula, dressed as she came from the Casino, sat by a window from which she had pulled the curtain back. Under the starlight the sea gleamed duskily, reflecting here and there the lamps of the yachts anchored in the tiny bay. Lights, too, ran in a long, slanting line down the sea wall to the Condamine, while more lights still punctured the dark mass of the town of Monaco, looming high and ancient against the sky.

"He is," Paula interrupted, "or at least he hinted as much. He seemed to speak as if his family had some connection with us."

"Did he say that?" Mrs. Trafford asked, with a gleam of her old readiness for conflict.

"Not exactly," Paula explained. "He only wouldn't talk of it when I said I seemed to know his name. Who is he?"

"Old Roger Winship," George Trafford went on in his comfortable, lazy tone, "was one of the men who twenty years ago had the folly, the hardihood and the ill luck to oppose your father."

"And what then?"

"Then," Trafford laughed—"then he was ruined."

"Oh!"

"That is," Mrs. Trafford added in explanation, "he would have been ruined if he had lived. As it was"—

"His son was ruined," Paula finished, seeing her mother hesitate.

"No; his widow, poor thing!" Mrs. Trafford corrected pityingly.

"No; by herself," George Trafford replied promptly.

He pulled himself up in his chair and spoke with emphasis. You could see that it was one of the subjects that kindled him into interest by the way in which his eyes awoke from their blue benignity to dart out a ray like steel. It was then that you realized in him the presence of the new type—the essentially modern and chiefly American type—the son of the hugely wealthy, self made man, the son to whom has passed the blood of a peasant with the power of a prince and a command of means far in excess of anything he knows how to use.

As Trafford dragged his heavy figure into an upright posture in his chair, his large jaw set, his head thrown back and his keen eyes flashing, there was the implication that he could do what Paul Trafford himself had done if there were need to begin the work again. But his was another duty, the duty of the second generation to keep what had been won. It was a task consistent with a large handed, easy mode of life, with leisure for a certain sort of simple cultivation, with praiseworthy philanthropic undertakings and with interest in everything that made for the general public good. The least competent judge of character could read in George Trafford's rather ponderous, clean shaven face the presence of the loyal, honest citizen who would have straightforward, sensible views on every subject. A good man was the universal opinion in New York regarding George Trafford, a safe man, a man to be found in the forefront of any movement to help on the commonweal, but a man who in all matters of money was of Paul Trafford's own stock and blood.

"She ruined herself," he repeated with greater energy. "She, too, was possessed of the insane conviction that she could fight your father and beat him. She wasn't the only woman who ever tried it, but no other kept at it so doggedly and desperately that there was no choice at last but to club her down."

"Of course," Mrs. Trafford interposed, "she worked for sympathy on the fact that she was a woman, and she got it—there's no denying that. It was one of the injustices which were done your father and which he is always so ready to forgive."

"I didn't know," Paula said, with a more decided tremor in the voice, "that papa fought with—women."

"There are no women in business," Mrs. George Trafford observed in her clear, cold way; "there are only competitors."

Prisoner's Dock From Instinct.

The relation of stories in which a judge figured recalled an occasion a good many years ago when Justice MacMahon held the Assize Court in the old court house on Adelaide street, Toronto. The room was so arranged that when the clerk of the court called the name of each juryman selected to take his place in the jury box, he had to walk the length of the room from behind the rail, back of which spectators sat, to reach his own enclosure. In doing so he passed the prisoner's dock.

On this occasion the clerk called out the name of a juror, and the latter left his seat, but apparently did not know where to sit.

"Get into the box," called out one of the constables after him. The juror walked half the length of the room till he reached the prisoner's dock, when he stopped, opened the gate and walked in and seated himself. There was a laugh at the expense of the juryman, but Judge MacMahon whispered to one of the officials to scrutinize the identity of the man. It was soon discovered that he was an old hand in court, having been three times convicted of offences. He followed his natural instinct in hustling into the box when spoken to sharply.

BASIL KING,

Copyright, 1909, by Harper & Brothers.

"I haven't been crying," she said hurriedly. "I've been playing, and I've won a lot of money. I don't quite know what to do with it."

"So no!" he laughed. "That's what you do when your father's back is turned!"

"I shan't do it again," she said in some confusion as she moved out of the ring immediately around the table. "You see, it was this way: I played against that tall young man over there. Don't look now, because he'll notice it. That is, whatever he did on one side of the table I did on the other, and he always lost, and I always won. I'm so sorry. He didn't look as if he could afford to lose, and he didn't keep on."

"What young man do you mean? I don't see him."

"He's tall and well set up, with a pointed brown beard and rather gleaming eyes. No; he's gone," she added, stealing a glance to where he had been standing. "Ah, there he is now, coming round the table! He's coming this way. Don't look. He'll know I've been speaking of him. Come away. There's papa. Let us go to him."

But it was too late. The unknown young man and the duke were already shaking hands with the cordiality of long standing friendship. Paula tried to slip out of her embarrassment by gliding round them and taking her place beside her father. He was talking to a knot of people she did not know, but she was near enough to him to be under his protection, while not so far from the duke as to escape hearing some of the remarks between him and the stranger.

Through the hum of movement and conversation about her she caught a sympathetic baritone quality of voice. From the English precision of his enunciation and the American plaintiveness of his inflections she guessed he was one of those fellow countrymen of her own who have lived or studied abroad. The duke catechised him freely, and he replied with the sort of detail one gives only to one's friends.

He had been working in Rome and would have remained till after Easter only that he had a couple of commissions for portraits in Paris. Oh, yes, commissions did come in, but very slowly. Perhaps it would be different some day. Yes, his mother was quite accustomed to her blindness now, but so feeble that they might lose her at any minute. Marah was well and, as usual, working hard. He was staying only a day or two at Monte Carlo just to break the journey from Rome. He hoped to have something in the next Salon, though he had nothing ready yet. Perhaps if Lady Alice were passing through Paris she would look in and give him the benefit of her advice.

Then came the question Paula was afraid of. Would the duke tell him who was the tall young lady in a blue dress and black hat who had spoken to him on turning away from the table? Of the reply she caught only the end of the sentence—"and you must know her."

She felt herself flushing with embarrassment, but as the duke approached she knew the only dignified thing to do was to turn and greet him pleasantly.

"Miss Trafford," he said, with the awkward air he always had at such moments, "I want you to know a very old friend of ours, Mr. Roger Winship."

"Mr. Winship's face," she laughed, "is perfectly familiar to me. I've been watching him from the other side of the roulette table for nearly half an hour."

"And you saw the ill will of the gods against me," he returned easily. "But I had the gratification of knowing that I couldn't lose unless you won. That was something."

"Haven't we met before?" she asked, with a hurried change of topic.

"No; never."

The quick decisiveness of tone and the curious gleam of his eyes in speaking the brief words were details she remembered afterward.

"And yet," she persisted, "your name is very well known to me. I've heard it often."

"That isn't impossible," he admitted, with a forced smile, "though you must have been very young."

"I know I've heard of a Roger Winship," she continued, as if searching in her memory. "It must have been my father"—

"Probably," he interrupted, "but it was so long ago"—

"That it was your father's name and not yours that I've heard mentioned. Were you going to say that?"

"It was a long time ago," he repeated, the forced smile gone. "I don't suppose that either you or I"—

He hesitated, and Paula saw that it would be best to let the subject drop. The duke broke in with a remark or two, and after a few further words Winship bade them good evening and passed on.

"What am I to do with all this money?" Paula asked when she and Wiltshire were alone again.

"You might give it in charity," he suggested.

"No; I wouldn't do that. I couldn't give in charity money to which I felt some one else had a prior claim. And," she pursued, with some hesitation, "I suppose I was right in fancying that he is poor."

"Oh, yes; he's poor enough. He's a portrait painter and still has his way to make. Alice got to know him and his sister when she took it into her head to study art in Paris. She brings them over every now and then to stay with us at Edenbridge, or at least she did till the poor old lady grew too blind. I like this young fellow. He's full of ideas, and we've had some jolly talks together."

"I've heard your sister spoken of as a great authority on Art. Does she think this Mr. Winship"—

"She says she doesn't think—she knows. In ten years' time, she believes, he will have such a place as Sargent holds today."

"Then what shall I do with the money?" Paula said again.

"What can you do but give it away or spend it?"

"I can keep it," she returned thoughtfully. "I may find a way of getting him to take it back."

CHAPTER II.

"WHAT connection have I with the name of Roger Winship?"

"Oh, that dreadful man!" Mrs. Trafford cried, with a little gasp. "I haven't heard of him for years."

"Do you mean old Roger Winship?" George Trafford asked, yawning as he slipped down lazily in his armchair and stretched his legs before the fire.

"I mean any Roger Winship," Paula replied. "I've heard the name tonight, and I seem to have known it before."

"How on earth did it happen?" came from Mrs. Trafford.

"There was a young man at the Casino, rather an interesting looking man, a friend of the duke's. The duke spoke to him and then introduced him to me. I'd noticed him before that."

"I'm surprised at the duke. It's very queer the sort of people who seem to know one another nowadays."

Mrs. Trafford spoke with as much severity as a beaming content would permit. Handsome, dimpling and energetic, she was spending her middle age in the serene satisfaction of seeing all her dreams fulfilled.

The daughter of a New England coal merchant, her modest fortune had been the foundation on which the colossal coal trust had been built up. It was to her credit to have married a poor man certain that a great industrial empire awaited him. She had married for love against the wishes of her family, but her love had been based on admiration. Her husband and she had passed through good years and evil years, had lived sparingly, had watched and planned and combined and made their business march with the march of the country. She had seen him rise with the swiftness and sureness of a Bonaparte to the highest financial position, first in Vermont, then in New England, then in America, then in the world. Before he was sixty or she was fifty Trafford was a name to go with Rothschild. It was a name that meant not only the power of money, but the power of power, the success of those who threw in their destinies with it and the ruin of those who opposed it.

During the years in which the great trust was being organized and maintained the Traffords had lived in an atmosphere of battle. There were suits in the law courts, appeals to supreme courts, state legislatures to be managed, congress to be appeased, foreign trade marts to be invaded and small competitors to be crushed out at home. It had been exciting and often dramatic, but as middle age drew on and most of the ends had been gained it was pleasant to settle down and enjoy the hardly won laurels in peace. George Trafford, whose late father, Andrew Trafford, had shared the family elevation, was equal now to taking his uncle's place in everything but the supreme command. In the exercise of this office Paul Trafford himself was never idle, hurrying now to one great capital, now to another, with but brief intervals to spend with his wife and daughter at home.

Home now meant Paris. The dust of conflict being still thick in New York, it was natural that Mrs. Trafford at least should prefer a place of abode where she could breathe more freely. It was not less natural that the enticements of fashion and fine weather as well as the needs of Mrs. Trafford's health should draw them in winter to the Riviera. The coming of the George Traffords from America as well as the possibility of Paula's engagement to the Duke of Wiltshire—a possibility which was only awaiting her final word to become a certainty—offered a reason for assembling something like a family party.

At the present minute they were spending the last desultory half hour of the evening in Mrs. Trafford's sitting room before parting for the night. Mr. Trafford had already gone to his apartment, and Mrs. George, beating back a yawn with the gloves she had just pulled off, was preparing to take her husband off to theirs. Paula, dressed as she came from the Casino, sat by a window from which she had pulled the curtain back. Under the starlight the sea gleamed duskily, reflecting here and there the lamps of the yachts anchored in the tiny bay. Lights, too, ran in a long, slanting line down the sea wall to the Condamine, while more lights still punctured the dark mass of the town of Monaco, looming high and ancient against the sky.

"He is," Paula interrupted, "or at least he hinted as much. He seemed to speak as if his family had had some connection with us."

"Did he say that?" Mrs. Trafford asked, with a gleam of her old readiness for conflict.

"Not exactly," Paula explained. "He only wouldn't talk of it when I said I seemed to know his name. Who is he?"

"Old Roger Winship," George Trafford went on in his comfortable, lazy tone, "was one of the men who twenty years ago had the folly, the hardihood and the ill luck to oppose your father."

"And what then?"

"Then," Trafford laughed—"then he was ruined."

"Oh!"

"That is," Mrs. Trafford added in explanation, "he would have been ruined if he had lived. As it was"—

"His son was ruined," Paula finished, seeing her mother hesitate.

"No; his widow, poor thing!" Mrs. Trafford corrected pityingly.

He pulled himself up in his chair and spoke with emphasis. You could see that it was one of the subjects that kindled him into interest by the way in which his eyes awoke from their blue benignity to dart out a ray like steel. It was then that you realised in him the presence of the new type—the essentially modern and chiefly American type—the son of the hugely wealthy, self made man, the son to whom has passed the blood of a peasant with the power of a prince and a command of means far in excess of anything he knows how to use.

As Trafford dragged his heavy figure into an upright posture in his chair, his large jaw set, his head thrown back and his keen eyes flashing, there was the implication that he could do what Paul Trafford himself had done if there were need to begin the work again. But his was another duty, the duty of the second generation to keep what had been won. It was a task consistent with a large handed, easy mode of life, with leisure for a certain sort of simple cultivation, with praiseworthy philanthropic undertakings and with interest in everything that made for the general public good. The least competent judge of character could read in George Trafford's rather ponderous, clean shaven face the presence of the loyal, honest citizen who would have straightforward, sensible views on every subject. A good man was the universal opinion in New York regarding George Trafford, a safe man, a man to be found in the forefront of any movement to help on the commonweal, but a man who in all matters of money was of Paul Trafford's own stock and blood.

"She ruined herself," he repeated with greater energy. "She, too, was possessed of the insane conviction that she could fight your father and beat him. She wasn't the only woman who ever tried it, but no other kept at it so doggedly and desperately that there was no choice at last but to club her down."

Paula.

"Of course," Mrs. Trafford interposed, "she worked for sympathy on the fact that she was a woman, and she got it—there's no denying that. It was one of the injustices which were done your father and which he is always so ready to forgive."

"I didn't know," Paula said, with a more decided tremor in the voice, "that papa fought with—women."

"There are no women in business," Mrs. George Trafford observed in her clear, cold way; "there are only competitors."

Prisoner's Dock From Instinct.

The relation of stories in which a judge figured recalled an occasion a good many years ago when Justice MacMahon held the Assize Court in the old court house on Adelaide street, Toronto. The room was so arranged that when the clerk of the court called the name of each juryman selected to take his place in the jury box, he had to walk the length of the room from behind the rail, back of which spectators sat, to reach his own enclosure. In doing so he passed the prisoner's dock.

On this occasion the clerk called out the name of a juror, and the latter left his seat, but apparently did not know where to sit.

"Get into the box," called out one of the constables after him. The juror walked half the length of the room till he reached the prisoner's dock, when he stopped, opened the gate and walked in and seated himself. There was a laugh at the expense of the juryman, but Judge MacMahon whispered to one of the officials to scrutinize the identity of the man. It was soon discovered that he was an old hand in court, having been three times convicted of offences. He followed his natural instinct in hustling into the box when spoken to sharply.

CONTRADICTORY EVIDENCE IN STABBING CHARGE

Witness for Defence Stated That Italian Did Not Leave the House With Him—Prisoner Was Committed for Trial.

Ferro Bruno, the Italian who it was charged, stabbed Robert McIlwain last Friday night on Bethune street, was this morning committed for trial by Magistrate Dumble. The prisoner was allowed to withdraw his previous election for a trial by jury.

Mr. G. N. Gordon conducted the case for the defence, and County Crown Attorney Wood prosecuted.

Robert McIlwain and the young man who was in his company on the above-mentioned night, were called by the prosecution, and both witnesses told practically the same story. In accounting for their presence in front of the Butcher home, both stated that they had left George street and gone to the corner of Aylmer and Simcoe streets for the purpose of meeting a friend. Not seeing him, they proceeded west on Simcoe street, and turned north on Bethune street, with the intention of leaving a bottle of whiskey, which neither cared to take home, with Butcher. It was after they had made their presence known, by knocking at the door, that Butcher, followed by the Italian, rushed out of the house. The witness, McIlwain, stated that both attacked him. His friend came to his assistance and pulled Butcher away, but the Italian pushed him into the laneway and inflicted two wounds on his right wrist and one on his back, with a weapon which he did not see. The Italian then ran away and he, with his friend, went to Dr. Leach's, where his injuries were attended to.

Dr. Leach was called and he stated that the wounds received by McIlwain were three in number, and each was about three-quarters of an inch in length, and from one-eighth to one-quarter of an inch in depth.

Roland Butcher, next called, told a different story of the affair. He said that on the first knock at the door he told the two men outside to "beat it while their shoes were good." They did not go away, and when he opened the door and went out the two were standing about eight feet away. The Italian did not go out with him. On asking them for an explanation he was struck in the right eye by McIlwain. Shortly afterwards, when he returned to the house to have his eye treated, the Italian was gone.

BLACKLISTED MAN FINED; ANOTHER NAME ADDED TO LIST

At the police court this morning Thomas Henry, a blacklisted man, pleaded guilty to having been found under the influence of liquor yesterday.

Asked from whom he procured the liquor, the defendant stated that he purchased a 50 cent bottle of liquor at a store the other side of the Crown Hotel. A lady had served him. It was the first time that he had procured liquor since being listed.

The Magistrate imposed a fine of $10.00 with $2.60 costs.

Abraham Crouter charged Hugh Gibbs with assault, and in the witness box stated that Gibbs came home last night in a state of intoxication. He abused his wife, and as he (Crouter) was about to leave the house, he was assaulted by Gibbs. He defended himself, but it was then was that some action be taken for the protection of the defendant's wife and himself. Crouter is a boarder at Gibbs' house.

Gibbs was fined $2.00 and an order made to have him blacklisted.

IRISH MEMORIES

By James N. Johnston

Land of rare beauties, old land of Tyrconnel,
Through all the years gone, fond memories stay;
Where once ruled the brave Sweeney, the valiant O'Donnell—
Dear land of my childhood, I see you to-day.

Salt waters still lave the shores of Lough Swilly;
Tides ebb and flow in great Sheep Haven Bay,
Green vales and dark uplands, heath-clad and hilly,
You stand now before me, I see you to-day.

On the strand of Tramore I've watched the waves speeding;
O'er the bent-sprinkled sand hills did joyously stray;
Above their deep burrows the rabbits were feeding;
Is Tolly Hill green in the winter to-day?

When north winds were fierce and billows were soaring,
O'er Horn Head's sharp crags was a wonderus display—
McSweeney's gun booming, far heard was its roaring;
Now rare is its thunder, low booms it to-day.

The lea and the daisies, the sweet hawthorn hedges
With violet and primrose to brighten the way;
Some close by the roadside, some up the steep ledges—
In past years they blossomed, I see them to-day.

The mist in the morning up Muckish was creeping;
The mill on the Cloon partly hid by the spray;
Upon the swift mill-wheel white waters were leaping;
I watched them with wonder and see them to-day.

The spry Irish boys and the girls at the dances
The fairs and the frolics, lives blithesome and gay,
The weddings and convoys, life's changes and chances—
Old joys and old sorrows are with me to-day.

Again by the turf fire I hear the wheels whirring—
The spinner's light lilt, or the singers' sweet lay;
Thoughts of my neighbors my heart deep are stirring—
Lost forms and lost faces are with me to-day.

NO RABIES EAST OF TORONTO

Report of Dr. Rutherford Veterinary-General of the Dominion

Ottawa, March 16.—Dr. Rutherford, Dominion Veterinary-General, stated to-day that reports which had been appearing in the press as to mad dogs having bitten people in several districts of Ontario east of Toronto are not borne out by the facts elicited by the official investigation. In none of the cases mentioned has it been found that the dogs were suffering from rabies, and so far as it is now known there has been no outbreak of the disease east of Toronto.

E. L. Aviot, of Verner, Ont., was killed at Cobalt by touching a power wire.

JUDGMENT ON MONDAY

Defendants in Disorderly House Charge Allowed Out on Their Own Recognazince

Judgment will be given, in the charge against Roland Butcher and his wife, that of being the keepers of a disorderly house, on Monday, and in the meantime the defendants will be allowed their liberty, on their own recognizance. A large number of witnesses, the majority being Italians, gave evidence this morning.

Mr. G. N. Gordon conducted the case in the interests of the defendants.

Not Yet Busy

So far this spring there has not been a very brisk demand for building permits at the city clerk's office. The building season is now close at hand, and there should soon be a large number of permits going out.

Household Notes

Some people put the meringue on a pie or pudding while it is still hot. This causes the egg to liquify and quite spoils the dish.

Water that has stood for a little while in the sun is best for watering house plants. Fresh cold water will retard their growth.

Never grate lemon rind without first scrubbing well with a clean vegetable brush. The dirt that comes off will show the reason.

Fish cakes made from the smoked Finnan haddie, slightly freshened, are delicious. They should be mixed with mashed potato, the same as cod-fish.

Peas and beans should never be swimming in water. They should be cooked with as little liquid as possible to retain the flavor of the vegetables.

A MASTERPIECE OF THE STAGE

"Ben Hur" Now at the Princess Theatre Toronto, a Magnificient Production

Tuesday's Globe says:—

As a rule, romantic characters, when transferred from the imaginative realm of literature to the living atmosphere of the stage with its many limitations, lose much of their charm and the dramatization of the scenes in which they are cast is invariably fraught with disappointments. General Lew Wallace's story of Ben-Hur is one of the few exceptions to this rule, and Klaw and Erlanger's production of it last night at the Princess Theatre, before a record house, manifested clearly enough the permanently satisfying qualities of that gigantic drama, dedicating so splendidly the well-known religious theme, which has formed the background for a beautifully romantic play, to be secure the dramatist has so carefully preserved the religious element of the story, at the same time, with the aid of the most skillful setting, portraying with vivid reality the ancient Jewish and Roman characters, that Ben-Hur loses none of its fascination, even after a continuous presentation throughout the last decade. Seven years ago this play received just as enthusiastic a reception in Toronto as it did last night. The production is pre-eminently spectacular, the famous scene of the chariot race arousing the audience to a high furore of excitement. The beautiful scenes in the grove of Daphne and about the temple of Appolo, as well as the exquisite loveliness of the gondola scene, in which Iras and Ben-Hur are participants, were features that appealed most strongly and evoked much applause. The principal roles have been most admirably fitted to the qualifications of the various actors. Richard Buhler's magnificent physique and handsome bearing particularly adapting him for the part of Ben-Hur. Miss Eleanor Moretti as Iras depicted the bewitching "daughter of Egypt" in most artistic manner, and her powerful acting in the last act, when she appeals to Ben-Hur in behalf of Messala, drew forth a merited round of applause. Mitchel Harris as Messala and Miss Alice Haynes as Esther were strong characters and contributed very materially to the success of the different scenes in which they were placed. The musical portion of the production is also worthy of comment, the ensembles in the last act being most impressive and showing careful stage training. Throughout, the stagings are excellent and the numerous changes in the six acts are accomplished quickly and with marvellous smoothness.

Bigger Demand for Them This Year than Ever Local Florists Say

Everything is tinged shamrock today. No coat lapel is complete without the embellishment of Ireland's national trifold.

Local florists inform the Review that the demand this 17th is more excessive than in former years, and cut plants for sprigs and bouquets are finding a very rapid sale.

Some plants in boxes are also being sold.

TIMELY SUBJECT OF ADDRESS

Burnham, M.A., has kindly consented to take his place and will give an address on "The Average Man's View of Religion." A large attendance is expected.

Mr. Keith will give his lecture on Holy Thursday, and Judge Huycke will lecture on the "Holy Grail" on the evening of Good Friday.

ATTEMPT TO RAISE STEAMER KATHLEEN

Lindsay, March 16.—An attempt will be made by a score of workmen at daybreak to-morrow to raise the hull and machinery of the steamer Kathleen, which was burned at Sturgeon Point last fall.

Messrs. Elliott and Moynes will raise the hull with the assistance of two tugs and tow the charred remains to Lindsay, where the machinery will be removed and possibly a new boat erected.

In regard to the building of the new boat for service on the local waters, Mr. Elliott did not know definitely what he would do, but did not think that he would build the boat for passenger service on the Kawartha Lakes. The expense is too high and it is rather late to consider the passenger service now."

Power Being Wasted

To the Editor of the Review.

Dear Sir,—What's the matter with the city's representatives and the C.G.E., and why is it that the people are not allowed to know what is going on? From what has been said the city has been blocking a chance to get big works here all because of wanting to drive a hard bargain for higher price power. It is not part of the municipality's business to 'go into power selling.

The present dam is provided for and the surplus power which is now going over the dam at a loss to the city at $20,000 a year, could be made to pay for itself in cash with immense works for the city in addition.

I approve of the Review's stand in the city's interest.

Yours truly,
CITIZEN.

DEVELOPMENTS ARE EXPECTED IN NEAR FUTURE

Lindsay, March 16.—It looks very much as if there would be something doing on the C.P.R. grain route in this district at an early date. The survey which, it is understood, is the final one, is nearly completed.

The switch which it was proposed to run along the west bank of the river to Flavelle's mill, will, it seems, be contracted, and will run in a southeasterly direction to Ridout street. A gentleman residing near that thoroughfare, who was about to undertake building operations on his property, has been asked by the C.P.R. authorities not to carry out his plans.

It is expected that there will be some developments in connection with this important undertaking in a short while.

TOPOGRAPHICAL SURVEY OF THE SCUGOG RIVER

Lindsay, March 14.—The topographical survey of the river Scugog from Lindsay to its mouth at Sturgeon Lake, and the waters of Sturgeon Lake, which has been in progress since last spring, by the engineering department of the Trent Valley canal, is so far progressed that a week of favorable weather will complete the survey. The work has been under the direction of Engineer Davey, who has also charge of the lock and dam at Lindsay, and the field work superintended by R. Stewart, assisted by a very capable staff. This survey will give a complete chart of these waters, showing the depth, shoals and important features, and will be invaluable to navigation.

The survey was temporarily suspended on Friday, owing to snow blindness effecting several of the party, but will be resumed at once in order that it may be completed before the ice goes out.

ANNUAL MEETING MIDLAND LEAGUE ON GOOD FRIDAY

The annual meeting of the Midland Football League will be held at the Y.M.C.A. on Good Friday. The teams in the league will be largely the same as those of last year.

Lakefield wishes Warsaw to join forces with it, but the latter club have not yet decided to do so, and it is probable that the teams will be represented individually.

TENNIS GOING TO BE POPULAR

Clubs are Already Looking Up Players for this Season

Judging from the activity already in evidence, tennis is going to be much to the fore in Peterborough this summer. Five or six clubs will enter the Peterborough Lawn Tennis Association and there is going to be keen rivalry. Those connected with the different clubs are already looking up players and "signing" them in much the same fashion as the baseball and hockey magnates. At the present time it looks as if the following clubs will be in the field this season:—Golf and Country Club, Y.M.C.A., Lawn Bowling and Tennis Club, West Ends, St. John's and Nicholls Oval.

Scotch and Irish Will Clash at Curling Rink To Night

There will be a big time at the curling rink to-night, when the Irish and Scotch will meet. The Hibernians are undertaking a big task in attempting to down the Scots at their native game, but with the aid of their patron saint, and this being St. Patrick's Day, they hope to come out on top. The Scots are warned not to wear kilts, and any Irishman who appears in the hat his dear old father wore will be ruled out of the game.

CURLING

There is going to be a religious mix-up at the curling rink one of these days. The Presbyterians have issued a sweeping challenge to meet any number of rinks any old time. The defi will likely be taken up.

A match was played last night between rinks skipped by "Aaron" and "Creation." Although creation originally came first it had to take second place last night for the "Aaronites" won in a romp, the score being 24—5.

T. Brightman defeated W. D. Campbell last night, 14—10, in an interesting game. It was played three men aside, the rinks being:

BOWLING

In the Garrison Sergeants' Bowling League last night Sergt. Guerin's team won two from Sergt. Biggs', and Staff Sergt. Cottrell took three straights from Staff Sergt Sharp. The scores were:—

Biggs	348	311	334
Cottrell	352	307	315
Sharp	340	345	306

Friday night the teams scheduled to play are: Roberts vs Guerin and Mitchell vs Sharp. It is requested that the first two teams be on hand promptly at 7.30.

Canary as Memento.

A great yachtsman and equestrian, the Earl of Dudley, Governor-General of Australia, has been on a visit to Ceylon. His lordship, who was on Lord Roberts' staff during the South African War, has had several narrow escapes from drowning. He has ridden his own horse to victory at the Leopardstown races, toured round the world, and studied the outposts of Empire at close quarters. Lord and Lady Dudley are both extremely fond of animals and pets, and they have a canary which came into their possession in a decidedly curious fashion. Several years ago Lord and Lady Dudley spent an evening with a party of friends at a certain London variety theatre. One of the performances was that given by some Japanese jugglers, in one of whose tricks a pretty canary was employed. The canary appeared to be in a reckless mood this particular evening, and, escaping from its masters, fluttered away to alight on Lady Dudley's lap. Lord Dudley, unable to resist the appeal, offered to buy it, but the manager of the theatre gallantly requested her ladyship to accept the bird as a memento of the evening. Lord Dudley ingeniously constructed a temporary cage out of a program, and the canary was borne off in triumph to its new home.

Heart Palpitation Trembling Weakness

"Only those who have gone through months of nervousness with its fears, weakness, and almost helplessness, can realize the blessing of sound health." Thus opened the letter from Mrs. Helen Pierson, of Cape May: "I was all my life a very heavy coffee-drinker, and when my health began to fail, I made it stronger and stronger, because it braced me up. I didn't realize that this stimulation was wearing out my nerves. But at last a nervous breakdown occurred. Then I was able to see how foolish I had been—doing unnecessary things instead of resting. My heart fluttered dreadfully with the least exertion. I was bloodless, and more tired in the morning than when I went to bed. A friend whom Ferrozone had cured of anaemia recommended me to use Ferrozone, and from the first it did me good. As my blood grew stronger, the heart fluttering ceased, and this took from me the fear that I would suddenly die. I kept on gaining, and continued to use Ferrozone, two tablets with every meal. I am to-day sound, well, healthy, and happy—Ferrozone did it all."

A Tory Ruse

How General Washington Kept Information From Reaching the Enemy.

By VIRGINIA DARROW.

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

At Dobbs Ferry, some thirty miles north of New York city, is a house which during the Revolutionary war was occupied by General Washington for his headquarters. It is a square frame house standing in the center of perhaps half an acre of ground, and in a line to the west separating the premises from the road is a monument with an inscription stating the fact that Washington worked there. Indeed, in that house he planned the Yorktown campaign, which closed the struggle for American independence.

One morning a girl of twenty stood in one of the rooms on the ground floor of this building—they were all occupied for offices by members of Washington's staff—while a young man in the uniform of a captain sat at the desk writing. When he had finished he handed her a slip of paper saying:

"There is the pass, Janice. Remember, I am responsible that he who uses it is a patriot and will give no information to the British concerning what he has seen here. General Washington has no time to attend to such matters himself and delegates the issue of all passes to me. I say this to you because I know you to belong to a Tory family, and I understand that your sympathies are with the red coats."

"I shall send a letter by him," replied the girl, "to a friend of mine in New York. He will not know what the letter contains."

"Sweetheart," said the young man impulsively, "I would not give this permit to any other living person than you."

The captain was sitting in one of the front rooms of the house overlooking the Hudson river and the heights beyond. But he did not see the river or a sloop that was lazily drifting down with the tide or the heights beyond. He was thinking that he had committed an unpardonable error in yielding to the persuasions of one he loved and risking possibly the very cause of American independence. Presently he sprang up and went into the office of the commander in chief Washington, who was studying a map of that part of Virginia bordering on the Atlantic, looked up as the young man entered.

"General," said the aid, "I am fearful of having committed an error."

"What is it, captain?" asked the general anxiously, seeing that Captain Stewart appeared to have something of importance on his mind.

"Janice Arbuckle has asked me for a pass for a friend of hers to go through the lines to New York. I have given it to her."

"Do you know who this friend of hers is?"

"I confess I do not, general."

Washington made no reply for a few moments. He appeared to be thinking.

"The Arbuckles are arrant Tories. It has occured to me only today that their hospitality to us may be to cover some deep laid scheme to benefit our enemies. Go after this man and assure yourself that he may be safely trusted to go through."

"I will, general."

Captain Stewart hurriedly left the office of his command, and, going to a stable near by, a horse was led out to him. The captain mounted and galloped down the main road leading to New York. He had reached a point not far north of Spuyten Duyvil creek, the northern boundry of Manhattan Island, when he overtook a citizen trudging along slowly. Stewart accosted him, asking him whither he was going.

"To New York," the man replied.

"Have you a permit to go through the Continental lines?" asked the captain.

"That I have," replied the pedestrian. "I have the pass of General Washington himself."

"Let me see it."

The man showed the pass Stewart had written and given to Janice Arbuckle but a short time before.

"This is indeed his excellency's pass," said Stewart, but I am instructed to see that no one passes our lines with any communication upon his person. I shall have to search you."

The man turned pale. "I have with me," he said, "only a letter from Mistress Janice Arbuckle to a friend in New York.—You would not examine a lady's epistle, would you?"

Stewart felt a twinge of shame at distrusting the girl he loved. Had it not been for the change in the man's countenance on being asked for papers he might not have pursued the matter further. As it was and remembering his commander's instructions, he called for the letter.

The man hesitated. "As a man," he said, "I protest against being forced to show a letter committed to my care by a lady. Perchance you who make this demand may not belong among those chivalrous people who are above examining a lady's correspondence."

Had it not been for the influence Washington exerted even when not present the taunt would have prevented the young man, who was chivalrous to a fault, from detaining the letter of a lady, and that lady the woman he loved.

"Come back with me," he said to the man, "and after referring the matter to the general in chief you may go on with it for all me. I am not personally interested in the correspondence of women."

The man looked about him, as if weighing the chances of a refusal. Then he said, with evident reluctance—indeed, there was a melancholy in his reply that did not appear in his words:

"I suppose I shall have to accompany you, sir, though it will delay me in my journey, and I hoped to be in the city before dark."

Captain Stewart marched the man before him, keeping a watch upon him the while. On passing through a thicket that lined the road on either side the prisoner—for he was nothing else—being for a moment screened from Stewart, threw the letter into some bushes. The captain caught sight of it just before it fell and, riding to it, dismounted, found it and put it in his pocket.

All doubt that something was wrong had now vanished. Coming to some redettes, Stewart called to them to take charge of the prisoner and bring him to Washington's headquarters, while he rode on. In a short while he was in the general's private office.

"There, general," he said, throwing down the letter. "I fear it contains something of moment destined for our enemies."

Washington looked at the tiny missive, read the address—"To Mistress Sarah Scudder, on the Bowling Green, City of New York"—written in a woman's hand, and all the instincts of a gentleman rose up within him against opening it. But after an account of what had occurred after Stewart overtook its bearer he broke the seal without further ado. The letter contained a summary of the disposition being made for the coming Yorktown campaign and information that such campaign was soon to be inaugurated.

Composed as was the commander's nature, a slight tinge of pallor came over his face. It was some time before he spoke.

"Captain," he said presently, "bring Janice Arbuckle to me."

Stewart went out and Janice returned with him just as the bearer of the letter was marched into the general's office.

"Mistress Arbuckle," said the general, "from whom did you get the information contained in this letter?"

"I decline to tell your excellency."

"Who is this man?" pointing to the prisoner.

"I decline to tell your excellency."

"I will tell who I am," said the man. "It shall not be said that I screened myself behind a woman's skirts. I am Lieutenant Birkenhead, of his majesty's —th foot, and am alone responsible for this attempt."

"He is not responsible for it," said Janice calmly. "He did not know what the letter contained. I wrote the general commanding to send some trusted person here since I desired to return a letter to New York and there was no conveyance."

"Enough!" said the general in chief. "The lady's word saves you, sir, from the halter."

The case of Major Andre was doubtless fresh in Washington's mind, and he was not disposed to enter upon another such case.

"Mistress Arbuckle," continued the general, "I must ask your father to give his word that you will keep your room till I give you permission to leave it. You, sir," to the prisoner, "will be confined under careful watch in a military prison until the independence of the colonies is acknowledged by your sovereign. Captain Stewart, will you see that what I have ordered is carried out?"

Captain Stewart took the two to his office, where he handed Janice Arbuckle a chair and bade her wait his return. Then he dispatched the prisoner to the guardhouse, from which he was next day removed to more permanent quarters. Returning to Janice, he stood for a moment looking at her fixedly.

"Janice," he said presently, "tell me one thing—how did you become acquainted with this information you endeavored to impart to"—

"The officers of our lawful king," she interrupted. "I will tell you. I was in this house not long ago sitting in a room separated from another by a thin door. I overheard the general dictating a dispatch covering the whole matter."

Stewart was silent for a moment. He was very much moved and was breathing heavily.

"I am surprised," he said at last, "that you should have told me a"—

"I told you nothing, except that the bearer of my letter did not know its contents. He did not."

"If you should give your word not to attempt further to communicate this matter to our enemies, would you consider it your duty to break it for your king?"

"Yes, I would."

"Then I shall take the responsibility of confining you under guard," he said, "and without the general's order. He has enough to attend to without attempting to muzzle a woman."

The next day Washington set out for Virginia. Stewart went with him, but before departing he directed that Janice Arbuckle be confined in her room at her father's house, with a guard at the door and under the window. The situation for her remained unchanged till the surrender of Cornwallis, when Captain Stewart returned to Dobbs Ferry and himself set her free.

As she stepped out of her prison chamber the captain asked her to be his wife.

In reply she made a "face" at him. Nevertheless a few months later she married him, Washington gracing the ceremony with his presence.

Gladstone's Magnetism.

The magnetism with which Mr. Gladstone always seemed to invest his words is illustrated by the following curious little story. At Hawarden the conversation once turned to walnuts, and Mr. Gladstone, in a pause, said, in thrilling tones, "I have not eaten a walnut since I was a boy of sixteen"; and then added, in a cadence of melancholy dignity, "nor, indeed, a nut of any kind." "The auditor who told me the story," says Mr. Benson, "said that the remark was received like an oracle, and that he had for the moment the impression that he had been the recipient of a singular and momentous confidence, such was the magnetic force of the speaker. The effect, I used to think, was augmented by the forcible burr with which the letter "r" was pronounced, which gave a curious richness to the whole intonation."

A Well-Guarded Bank.

The Bank of England is considered to have one of the most nearly impregnable vaults of any bank in the world. It is sixty-six feet below the level of the street. Above it is twenty feet of concrete, holding seven feet of water, and below the same concrete barrier and depth of water. In this manner tunneling becomes impossible, while with the soldier guard posted every night the conservative Briton has reason to believe in the security of his "Old Lady of Threadneedle Street."

Insurance Companies Lose About $125,000.00 by the Wreck at Spanish River

Double Liability for About Twenty-five Persons

A loss of somewhere in the neighbourhood of $125,000 is what the Accident Insurance Companies estimate the wreck at Spanish River bridge means to them.

They figure that about 25 of those who met death carried Accident Insurance, and the average insurance, according to the tables, is $5,000. In case of death in a railway disaster there is a double liability, making the figure $6,000, or $5,000 to be more conservative.

Their loss may total more than that, for the commercial travellers, a number of whom were killed, usually carry very heavy insurance. In addition, some of the companies make the policies payable on the death of the wife while travelling, though the policy is taken out in the husband's name. In such cases they pay the husband the same amount as they would have paid the wife were the husband killed.

We issue the BEST Accident and Sickness policy offered to the public.

What Thos. McDonald Says of Dodd's Kidney Pills

He Had Lame Back, Kidney Disease and Heart Fluttering, and One Box Cured Him.

Shubenacadie, Hants Co., N.S., Mar. 16.—Special.—"I suffered from Lame Back, Kidney Disease and Heart Flutterings, caused by cold and a strain, for three years. I was looking over some papers and saw Dodd's Kidney Pills advertised and I bought one box which completely cured me. Dodd's Kidney Pills are wonderful."

That is the simple, straightforward statement of Mr. Thomas McDonald, a well-known resident of this place. It shows how quickly Dodd's Kidney Pills cure Kidney Disease when taken in its earliest stages. Lame back is one of the first symptoms of sick Kidneys. Heart Fluttering is another symptom. It is caused by blood, from which the sick Kidneys have failed to strain the impurities, increasing the work of the heart. Dodd's Kidney Pills make the sick Kidneys well, the lame back disappears, the blood is purified, the heart is relieved and the flutterings stop.

If the case is of long standing, it may take longer to cure it, but Dodd's Kidney Pills never fail to do it.

LINCOLN'S KIND HEART.

How the Great War President Befriended a Boy.

In 1840 R. R. Randall, who later in life became a prominent man in Nebraska, began learning the printing business in the Springfield (Ill.) Journal office. Arrived in town, he went directly to the office, taking his trunk, a very small affair, with him. The "log cabin" enthusiasm was at its height, and the day he arrived the Whigs of Chicago came in, bringing their luggage, and men and luggage "put up" at the Journal office. When their great convention adjourned the Chicago delegation departed, carrying with them by mistake the little trunk of the new apprentice boy.

When the youngster discovered his loss (it was his first misfortune), far from home and friends, lonesome and alone, he sat himself on the sidewalk and bewailed his lot.

A benevolent looking gentleman came along when his grief was at its height. Placing his hand on Dick's head, he said:

"What is the matter, my son?"

"Matter enough," said the boy. "I've lost my trunk."

"How did you lose it?" the kind hearted stranger again queried.

"I put it in the front office, and them Chicago fellows must a-took it."

"Well," continued the tall gentleman, "don't cry. I'll see if I can get it back for you."

Taking the name of the boy and a description of the trunk, the man departed. Within ten days the missing property was returned, and Dick Randall's heart was made happy.

The stranger was Abraham Lincoln.

Le Singe.

Le singe (the monkey) is a popular game among young girls who enjoy a hearty laugh upon one of the opposite sex. In fact, it is really a practical joke. The monkey is the boy selected to leave the room. When he is called back again perfect silence reigns among the whole company. Puzzled by this serious attitude, he naturally asks, "What is the matter?" They all repeat in chorus, "What is the matter?" The monkey probably will say, "I don't understand," which is chorused after him, and every remark he makes or question he asks is thus repeated until he sees the joke. Of course he accepts the guying good naturedly.

A Real Toy Telephone.

Obtain two empty cocoa tins, take the lids off and bore a hole through the bottom of each tin. Now take a piece of thick string long enough to reach across the room and put one end through each hole and knot it. If one holds one tin to the ear and some one whispers into the other tin from as far away as the string goes he can be heard quite clearly, like a real telephone.

Leatherback Turtle.

The largest turtle is the leatherback, which has been known to weigh 1,000 pounds. These sea creatures live to a great age. They cannot be kept alive in captivity, a fact that was proved some time ago, when one of them was received at the New York aquarium. This animal weighed 806 pounds and lived only twenty-two days, which was a record.

Old Man Rain.

Old Man Rain
At the window pane
Knocks and fumbles and raps again,
His long nailed fingers slip and strain.
Old Man Rain at the window pane
Knocks all night, but knocks in vain—
Old Man Rain.

Old Man Rain
With tattered train
Reels and shambles along the lane.
His old gray whiskers drip and drain,
Old Man Rain, with tattered train,
Reels and staggers like one insane—
Old Man Rain.

Old Man Rain
Is back again,
With old Miss Wind, at the window pane,
Dancing there with her tattered train.
Her old shawl flaps as she whirls again
In the wildmaze mad-midnight between—
Old Miss Wind and Old Man Rain.

FRENCH ONTARIO'S LEADER.

Hon. N. A. Belcourt Is Head of Provincial Congress.

Hon. Napoleon Antoine Belcourt, ex-member for Ottawa in the Commons, ex-Speaker of the House and now a member of His Majesty's Privy Council and of the Canadian Senate, won his degree of Master of Laws from Laval in 1883, cum summa dignitate. That laudatory annotation on his university degree may well be applied to the past twenty years of his life in Ottawa as a leader of the local Bar, as a representative of his fellow-citizens in the Commons and in the Senate, as a sort of general impresario of Liberalism in the capital, and as a leader in a large variety of movements of public importance. Last month he was elected president of the French-Canadian Congress of Ontario, organized by some two hundred thousand French-Canadians of the province, with a view to the encouragement of education and the establishment of bi-lingual schools in the French-speaking districts of the province, the maintenance of an adequate representation of the French-Canadian electors in the Senate, the encouragement of temperance among the modern coureurs de bois in the lumber districts of the north, and, in general, the betterment of conditions and the maintenance of the radical representation and rights of the French-Canadian population of Ontario.

As president of such an organization, no better man could have been chosen than Mr. Belcourt. Descended from the early French settlers at Three Rivers, Senator Belcourt represents the culture and the finesse of the race whence he sprang. At the same time he is a loyal and large-minded Imperialist, as witness his suggestion at the Board of Trade banquet in Ottawa recently that Parliament should ask Earl Grey to transmit to His Majesty King Edward an invitation from his loyal subjects in Canada to visit the Dominion, coupled with the suggestion that Edward the Peacemaker might crown his work by bringing about an alliance for the peace of the world between France, the old mother country of Canada, and Great Britain and the United States, the dominating powers of the old and new worlds.

Senator Belcourt is a native of Toronto, where he was born 49 years ago. He was educated in St. Joseph's Seminary, Three Rivers, in arts, and at Laval University in law. Admitted to the Ontario Bar at the age of 24, he has achieved a leadership among the Bar of eastern Ontario. Since 1891 he has been a member of the law faculty of Ottawa University, which gave him the honorary degree of LL.D. in 1895. In 1896 he resigned his position as crown attorney for Carleton County to contest Ottawa for the Commons, redeeming the seat which had been steadily Conservative since 1878. He was re-elected at the general elections of 1900 and 1904, his majority in the latter case being over one thousand. Mr. Belcourt succeeded Hon. Mr. Brodeur as Speaker of the Commons when the former became Minister of Marine, and he discharged the duties of the office with dignity and ability. He was founder and first president of the Club Nationale of Ottawa, retaining that office for ten years consecutively. Among the score of other offices which he has held may be mentioned the chairmanship of the public accounts committee of the Commons, the vice-presidency of the Ontario Liberal Association, and the presidency of the Ottawa Hunt Club.

ALFONSO, KING OF INDIA.

Curious Claims of European Kings to Long Lost Dominions.

It is a curious fact that the monarch of the greatest and most important nation in the world has almost the shortest and least-impressive title of any.

Most of the crowned heads of Europe revel in a multiplicity of styles and dignities, but, even from mere peerages, the ruler of the mightiest empire in the world has ever seen has to be content with the simple formula, "Edward VII., by the Grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British Dominions beyond the seas, King, Defender of the Faith, Emperor of India."

Even in these titles the reference to the Britains overseas was added only on the present King's accession, and the style of Emperor of India was conferred on the British Sovereign late in Queen Victoria's reign. Queen Victoria was crowned simply "of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Queen, Defender of the Faith," though on some of the early coinage of her reign—the florin, for instance—she is styled "By the Grace of God of all the Britains, Queen, Defender of the Faith"—a fine dignified, and comprehensive style.

Besides his regal appellation, King Edward has, of course, many lesser titles, but even these are not nearly so numerous as in the case of most foreign potentates.

The full list of these dignities is, Duke of Cornwall (in the Peerage of England, creation 1337), Duke of Rothesay, Duke of Saxony, Prince of Coburg and Gotha (the dukedom he resigned in 1863), Prince of Saxe-Coburg Saalfield, Earl of Carrick, Baron of Renfrew, Lord of the Isles, Prince of Wales, Earl of Chester, Duke of Lancaster, and Earl of Dublin. All of these titles, except the last two, which date from 1841 and 1849 respectively, are of long standing, and, it is interesting to note, embrace dignities in each division of the United Kingdom.

But, long as the list appears, it is by no means as long as that of many an ordinary peer of the realm, the Duke of Argyll, for one, easily surpassing it with twenty-seven separate titles.

When one turns to other monarchs, the list appears very trivial, the German Emperor, for instance, enjoying the luxury of seventy-five subordinate titles, the King of Spain forty-two, the Emperor of Austria sixty-one, the Sultan of Turkey eighty-two.

Of sovereigns who claim British territories, the worst offender is the young King of Spain. He is, amongst other things, "King of Gibraltar," "King of the East Indies," "King of Oceania," "King of the West Indies" and "King of India," the last title being also owned by the King of Portugal; whilst of titles formerly borne by the monarchs of Britain, the King of Spain is also "King of Castille," "King of Arragon," and "King of Navarre."

A Story of the "Koh-i-noor."

Sir John Lawrence (afterwards Lord Lawrence), according to the accepted belief, saved India for the British Crown in the Sepoy rebellion. Yet he came near to losing another precious jewel of the British crown, the famous Koh-i-noor itself. Among the state jewels of the Sikh Court was the famous "Mountain of Light," which, after passing from the Mogul to the Persian, and thence to the Afghan, from whom it was wrested by Renjit Singh, was now to be presented to Queen Victoria. The diamond was placed in the charge of Sir Henry (Lawrence), who, deeming his brother the stronger and more practical guardian, entrusted it to Sir John, who pocketed the little box and straightway forgot it. Some weeks later came an official letter from Lord Dalhousie ordering that the diamond be sent at once to Her Maesty. The president received the message during a meeting of the board, and Sir John advised him to send it off promptly. "Why, you've got it," said the senior member. Sir John's clear intellect took in the full horror of the situation, and he feared he was a ruined man, for the gem had never been seen by him since the day it had been given into his keeping. Yet, without a sign of perturbation, he casually replied: "Oh, yes, of course; I forgot all about it," and calmly proceeded to discuss the business before the meeting with all his usual alertness and without any sign of preoccupation. At the conclusion of business he hurried in search of his servant, who chanced to remember taking a small box from his master's discarded clothes. He explained where he had put the worthless box containing the bit of glass, and the Koh-i-noor was safe.

GHOST MYSTERY IN CAVAN BEING TALKED ABOUT ALL OVER THE DOMINION

Toronto Sunday World.

A profound sensation has been created in the northern section of the Township of Cavan, about seventy-five miles from Toronto, by the appearance on three different occasions of an apparition at the home of William Johnston, an aged farmer and sojourner of the district.

The ghostly figure appeared each time in the stable and was seen by five members of Johnston's family, three of whom saw it on different nights. All the persons to whom it appeared are full grown and are able to describe in detail the aspect of the spectre.

On each occasion the unearthly visitant appeared in different physical form, though erect like a man; the first time with a smiling face, about middle aged, the next time without a head, and the third time with long whiskers and long moustache, heavily tinged with grey.

GHOST SPOKE.

On the last occasion the ghost talked with the Johnston boys, who were only a few feet away, but its words were merely mutterings and only three words were heard distinctly. The first one was "Crawford," the next one "and," and the third word "and." The rising inflection in the voice when the word "and" was spoken just as the figure was fading from view made the auditors practically certain that the spectre had used the conjunction and was proceeding to say something more more when it vanished. They were sure it had not repeated the word "and."

None of the members of the Johnston family ever saw a spirit before and they affirm that they never believed there was such a thing as a ghost until the present.

DEATH OF RELATIVE.

A remarkable circumstance in connection with the appearance of the spectre, was the death of Thomas Crawford, a relative of the Johnstons, at the Counties Poor House in Cobourg on the day the figure made its appearance. In fact a comparison of rates reveals that the mysterious visitor appeared to Hannah Pigott of the Johnston household about the time the breath was leaving the earthly frame of Thomas Crawford in Cobourg.

Crawford was the husband of William Johnston's sister, Ann, who died ten years ago last month. He owned a house and a quarter of an acre of land at Port Hope, but for a number of years lived in the House of Refuge in Cobourg.

It is worthy of note that Crawford was a firm believer in ghosts and had often declared that he had received visits from them. The physical appearance of Thomas Crawford, who was over 70 years of age, was very dissimilar from that of any of the ghostly visitors, but in the absence of any other reasonable hypothesis the Johnstons are associating the spectre with their dead relative. They feel sure that he had longed to consult with them regarding the disposal of his house, and passing away before any of them reached his bedside, his spirit had returned to carry out the mission which the hand of death had stayed.

His last illness was but of two days' duration, and although William Johnston had been summoned by long distance telephone, when it was found that the illness was likely to be fatal, the old man died before the arrival of his relative. His remains were interred in Welcome cemetery, near Port Hope, on February 23rd, the day following his death.

MISS PIGOTT'S STORY.

To the newspapermen's inquiries Miss Pigott said that that was the place an apparition had appeared and that she would not mind telling all about what she had seen.

Hannah is a short, plump girl, distinctly Irish in facial appearance and speech. She has large, inquiring eyes, and talks with entire self-possession and confidence. After general remarks concerning the state in which the family had been thrown by what had taken place, she described what had appeared before her.

"I was in the cow stable milking at about nine o'clock," she continued, "when I heard the cow moan, and, looking up, I saw something white on the calf pen, which is just off the cow stable. I was not frightened then, because I thought it was only my imagination, and I went on milking.

"Pretty soon I looked up again and saw it quite plain, and held up the lantern to get a better view, when it disappeared. While I was wondering whether I could be brave enough to go into the calf pen with the lantern and see what was there, the figure appeared right near the boards which divide the calf pen from the cow stable.

A SMILING FACE.

"It was like a person with a lady's face, but I know it was a man because it had short, black, curly hair. It was looking right at me and smiling, as if it wanted to say something nice to me. It had on what seemed like a long, white gown low-cut about the shoulders and its neck was bare down to the top of the gown. It was only a few feet away from me and I saw it as plainly as I see you now.

"I was so badly scared that I ran out of the stable as fast as I could. When I got to the house I told them what I had seen, but they would not believe me.

"After a while the boys went down to the stable to look, but they did not see anything that night. The next night at about the same time the boys were in the stable and the ghost appeared again, and the third night they saw it again. I did not go near the barn after seeing the spirit the first time."

CLOCK STOPPED.

Miss Pigott then talked about the circumstances of Thomas Crawford's death, and imparted the startling information that the clock in the house had stopped on the night of his death which was also the date of the ghost's first appearance. They had tried several times to start the clock, but without success until after he was buried, when it was started and has since run without stopping. This fact was confirmed by Fred Johnston.

As Hannah Pigott was finishing her story Fred Johnston returned from the station. He consented to take the newspapermen out to the barn and show them the general lay of the building and also to relate his experience with the apparition.

SCEPTICAL AT FIRST.

Fred is twenty years old and a strapping youth with a bright, intelligent face. "We did not believe Hannah," he commenced, "when she rushed into the house that night and cried that she had seen a man dressed in white in the stable. I told her that it was all a scheme of her own to get rid of the milking but she seemed so worked up, that we decided to go out and look. Albert went with me and we looked all through the cow stable and the calf pen but saw nothing of any ghost. After completing the chores we went back to the house.

APPEARS AGAIN.

The next night Hannah refused to go near the stable so Albert went out to milk the cows. While he was milking I attended to the horses. A passage way leads from the horse stable to the cow stable along the western wall and immediately behind the cows is the calf pen.

As I was coming through the passage with a fork of hay I caught sight of a figure dressed in white standing some distance back from the opening into the calf pen and just behind the low partition which subdivides the pen.

"It seemed quite tall but had no head. I stopped still and called to Charley, who was in the horse stable, 'Come here I want to show you something.' Albert who was milking also saw the figure. While we were looking at it, the figure disappeared.

A GLOOMY VIGIL.

"The next night I milked the cows with the lantern near me, and while I milked I looked into the pen several times but saw nothing. When I had finished we decided to stay in the barn a while to see whether anything would happen, so Bill, (Fred's oldest brother) and Charley and I sat down in the horse stable and waited.

GHOST'S THIRD APPEARANCE.

"We went back into the horse stable and waited a few minutes longer and then we all went together, taking the lantern with us. Albert having by this time joined us. I was in the lead with my brothers right behind me and as I reached the end of the passage the thing appeared standing just within the opening to the calf pen. We all saw it and all stopped still, except Bill, who ran back through the horse stable and out of the barn door in fright.

SPOKE TO THE SPIRIT.

"Bill's wife told me to speak to it when it appeared again, so I decided to do so. I said, 'Hello,' just as if I was talking to any other person. 'What brought you here?' The spirit muttered something in reply which we could not understand. Then I said, 'What do you want here?' The figure commenced talking at once, never taking its eyes off us all the time.

"The only words I understood were 'Crawford,' 'land' and finally 'and.' We saw its lips moving and also saw its teeth. When it commenced talking it reached out one hand and rested it on the top board of the pen opening. The back of the hand was towards us. It looked like a human hand. I noticed the finger nails.

"When the spectre moved its arm I noticed the white folds about the arm move also. The sleeve seemed to be very big."

SPIRIT OF UNCLE.

Questioned regarding his candid opinion of the apparition Fred Johnston said he believed it was the spirit of his uncle, Tom Crawford, which had come back to tell them what to do with the property. His only reason for thinking that, was the words spoken by the ghost. He had not seen his uncle for a number of years and remembered his appearance quite distinctly. The ghost did not look like him at all.

Courtier, Soldier, and Huntsman.

A courtier to the finger-tips, a lover of horses, a soldier, a Freemason, and a friend of the King, Lord Suffield, who recently entered upon his eighty-first year, has occupied so many posts of honor in and about Court that their mere enumeration would be tedious. He has always been known as a thoroughly sound horseman, and it was of him that, very many years ago, Whyte-Melville wrote:

A rider unequalled, a sportsman complete,
A rum 'un to follow, a bad 'un to beat.

Another comment on Lord Suffield's riding was made by Lord Ribblesdale, who said that he had the rare art of "galloping like steam between the fences, and yet jumping places almost from a stand."

Melba Couldn't Sleep.

Bendigo, Australia, has decided to silence all the public clocks between the hours of midnight and six a.m. Madame Melba could not get a wink of sleep there recently, and threatened not to visit the place again if there were no amendment.

Catarrhal Deafness

Successfully Treated By

Catarrhozone

Deafness is not so common as blindness, yet thousands are more or less afflicted by it, and their comfort seriously interfered with.

Catarrhal deafness manifests itself but slowly, yet it must be acknowledged that the great majority of those who become totally deaf might have averted this unfortunate condition if they had treated the catarrhal inflammation at its beginning.

The only remedy that can be safely employed for all forms of catarrhal deafness is Catarrhozone. You simply charge the air you breathe with this healing, soothing agent, and by forcing it gently through the ears destroy the germ life which keeps up the inflammation, and at the same time by the soothing healing action it heals the inflamed surfaces of the middle ear.

CATARRHOZONE, to those who are just a little deaf, and are growing increasingly deaf, is an agent capable of affording the utmost satisfaction, and its use is attended without danger, and as the treatment can be carried on at home no person threatened with the affliction of deafness should postpone one moment in beginning its use.

From every part of the Dominion glowing accounts of the beneficial action it exerts upon catarrhal conditions of the middle ear have been sent in, and you will be resorting to the only method of cure, and the simplest method too, if you try Catarrhozone. Dealers everywhere sell it, 25c, 50c, and $1.00. By mail from The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N. Y., and Kingston, Ont.

ADVICE TO LIBERALS

Allan Stndholme Tells the Ontario Opposition What It Should Do.

Toronto, March 18.—"What the Opposition should do," declared Allan Studholme (East Hamilton) in the course of his speech, moving the second reading of his bill for an eight-hour working day, and a 20 cents an hour minimum wage, in the Legislature yesterday afternoon, "is to get 25 years ahead of the Government. It should get out in front, like Billy Maclean at Ottawa.

"The trouble with the present Opposition is that it is caustic, critical and reactionary. Stop fault finding. Let the Government jog along and lead out in front."

When Mr. Studholme arose at 12.40 he asked whether, in view of the hour, the Government would not be willing to adjourn for lunch.

The Premier assured him that he was willing to go straight on "till we drop, and perhaps the honorable member will drop too."

Mr. Studholme, who continued speaking till two o'clock, complained of his bill being left till the dying hour of the session.

Its object was above the more commercial side, and looked to the welfare of the people, the biggest asset of the province.

"The trouble with conditions at the present day," he continued, "is that everybody is after the almighty dollar."

The idea of shipping everything on to the Dominion was done in the hope of escaping a vote on the matter.

"Members are said to be busy circulating round robins. If they were as busy working to earn 20 cents an hour to get a $2 bill, they would appreciate this bill better."

Something should be done, he said to take the people back to the land. Under the present conditions we were making criminals of our boys. They were placed in the hands of unmerciful employers and got no schooling.

He had a hard rap for the farmers, who, he declared, sat and smoked while God sent the rain and sunshine, while the laboring man had to work to earn every dollar.

A. E. Fripp (West Ottawa) declared that members of the House should take a stand one way or another on the question. If they went on as they were going the result would be, as in England, the creation of a third party, which he considered would be an undesirable consummation.

T. R. Shillington (Temiskaming) said that from his experience as a large employer of mining labor in northern Ontario, he knew that when a man worked eight hours underground you had the best out of him. If he had as wide experience in other lines of industry he might be as radical as the mover of the bill. He thought there should be more information, however, on how the bill would affect the manufacturer.

Sir James stated there was one clause of the bill which he would never under any circumstances consent to. "It is," he said, "that clause that tells the poor, the cripple and the man over 60 that he shall starve, that he may not take under 20 cents an hour."

The recent deputation of the Dominion Trades and Labor Council had not asked for the changes suggested by this bill, and he did not think they would. They asked for an eight hour day for miners and men on city street railways.

A commissioner appointed by the Dominion Government was gathering information. Why should they not avail themselves of these results. When they were obtained, the Government would make up their minds without delay, and would not hesitate to take this matter up. They would not do this because they had been laggard or because they were afraid.

The Premier closed by moving the six months' hoist.

Hon. A. G. MacKay thought the matter was quite within the field of provincial legislation. He moved an amendment to the amendment providing for the appointment of a provincial labor commission, apart from anything the Dominion was doing. This was lost on a division of 47 to 19. The amendment was declared carried on the same division.

By section 40 of the Statute Law Amendments Act, the Mining Act was changed to prohibit protests against mining claims except by leave of the commissioner. Hon. Frank Cochrane stated that it had been found that protests were made merely in order to be bought off. There had been several cases in the Porcupine district.

On the suggestion of Hon. A. G. MacKay, it was decided to allow an appeal from the commissioner to the courts for the benefit of the man with a really good claim.

The Premier announced the withdrawal of the clause, changing the apportionment to the university from succession duties. The board of governors had intimated their wish to consult the Government on the matter, and no harm would be done by allowing it to stand twelve months. The federated colleges were given the same power to expropriate as the university.

Before adjournment the Premier made a statement regarding the sessional indemnity. When the Government was ready, they would take the responsibility and increase the indemnity, and they would not wait till the last week of the session to do it. He was not prepared to say whether it was too small or too large.

The House concluded its business about six o'clock, and adjourned.

CANNOT AFFORD IT

The United States Dare Not Provoke Tariff Contest With Canada.

Washington, D.C., March 18. Conflicting advices from the Tariff Commission, which is substantially the Tariff Board of the Treasury Department, and the Department of State over the Canadian tariff leaves President Taft in the worst dilemma, politically and diplomatically, that has confronted a Republican Administration in many a year. From the outset there has been jealousy between the Secretary of State and the Tariff Board in the settlement of tariff disputes with other countries, and in the present crisis, which is in itself bad enough, this jealousy has resulted in diametrically opposite recommendations to the President.

When the Tariff Commission, consisting of Chairman Emery of the Tariff Board; Mr. Pepper, trade expert for the Bureau of Trade Relations of the State Department, and Consul-General Foster at Ottawa, concluded their negotiations with the Canadian officials they had reached the conclusion that no concessions could be obtained from Canada. Knowing the desperate policy of a trade war with a country with which we have so large and so necessary a trade, Prof. Emery and Mr. Pepper returned to Washington convinced that the only course open to this country was to yield and grant our minimum tariff to Canadian shipments.

This report was approved by the Tariff Board, of which Prof. Emery is chairman, and in the conference of the members of the board with President Taft last Saturday they recommended that the minimum rates be proclaimed by the President before April 1, when otherwise our maximum will automatically go into effect against Canada. They pointed out to the President that from an economic point of view this country could not afford a tariff war. Many of our imports from Canada, said the tariff men, constitute our sole supply of the article involved, and a trade war would accordingly result in the immediate crippling of whole industries.

More important still, at this juncture, was the political argument presented to the President. It was pointed out that the border cities, besides depending on Canadian trade as a source of supply for crude products, have large proportions of their population absolutely dependent on the international trade that passes through them for their livelihood. This annual exchange between the two countries amounts to something like $250,000,000.

The Democrats are already planning for the campaign this summer a heavy assault on the tariff record of the Republican party, and in many states it is recognized that this attack will not be met with success. Should this attack be given the further point of the complete stifling of trade with a neighboring and naturally friendly country, the return of a Democratic House—already not a remote possibility—would be almost made certain.

HUNDREDTH BIRTHDAY

Dunnville Woman Attains Century Mark and Celebration Marks the Occasion.

Dunnville, March 18.—Mrs. Margaret Kenney celebrated her 100th birthday yesterday. She was born in Ireland, but has lived in Dunnville for 67 years.

In honor of the occasion, high mass of thanksgiving was sung at St. Michael's Church by Rev. Father Donovan, at which representatives from all classes in the community were present.

In the afternoon the business men of the town, headed by the silver cornet band, marched to the old lady's home, where an address was read to her, and a purse of gold presented.

Among telegrams received was one from Hon. Charles Murphy, Secretary of State, and one from F. R. Lalor, M.P. for Haldimand.

Mrs. Kenney is a remarkable old lady. She threads a needle without glasses, dresses without help, is active and is in excellent health.

Virtue Rewarded.

Ottawa, March 18.—As a result of the investigation into the McMillan diamond robbery of last summer by the police commissioners, Chief Detective Dicks was yesterday reduced to the rank of sergeant, while Sergt E. Jolint was promoted to the rank of detective. Detective Thomas Ryan succeeds Dicks as chief of detectives.

GREATEST SUCCESS YET GIVEN BY THE T.A.S. AMATEURS

Was the Presentation of "Shaun Rhue" to an Audience That Was Thoroughly Pleased by the Performance—Entertaining Special Numbers—A Highly Creditable Production of Joe Murphy's Play

A play most acceptable to the season in theme and atmosphere and one that was capitally presented by the clever amateurs of the dramatic section of St. Peter's T.A.S. was the drama made famous by the late Jos. Murphy, "Shaun Rhue," which was the society's attraction for the annual 17th of March entertainment. It was given at the Grand last night before an audience that must have been most encouraging to the performers. It is an accepted fact in professional circles that a big audience is the easiest one to play to, and the same truth, needless to say, applies with equal force to amateur efforts. And the audience was as enthusiastic as it was large, so it will be seen that the production was a mutually happy one from both the standpoint of those taking part and of the immense gathering that witnessed the performance. The applause was hearty and sincere for both the characterizations in the play, and the entertaining work of the soloists. During the evening several beautiful bouquets were tossed on the stage for the young ladies of the cast.

A feature of the production was the tasteful and effective manner in which it was dressed, all the stage pictures being correct and descriptive. The settings in Act III. were especially good, and the realistic background in all the scenes gave the piece exactly the atmosphere that the story and action of the play demands. Generally speaking, the presentation of "Shaun Rhue" was an emphatic success from every standpoint, and although comparisons are odious, so the rule reads, it would probably not be at all in bad taste to express the opinion that the offering of the year easily surpassed the previous efforts, commendable as they were, of the versatile amateurs of the T. A.S. dramatic section.

The scene is County Cork, Ireland. The time of the play is 1860.

Peter Callaghan, a former neighbor of the Donovans, who has been living for the past few years in England, learns of the good fortune of Larry, and Kate, and hastens to Ireland, purposing to secure a large share at least of the legacy by marrying his son, Bryan, an unscrupulous fellow, to the daughter of this old neighbor. He enlists the sympathy of the unsuspecting farmer by loaning him three hundred pounds without security. Kate Donovan, who is the promised wife of Gerald Kavanaugh, an ambitious young Irish farmer, refuses to entertain the wishes of the designing Callaghans, and is strongly supported by her brother, Larry, who, after a heated argument with his father, he drives from home.

Larry determines to leave Ireland, but the night previous to his intended departure he learns through a friend that the grasping Callaghans are simply trying to rob his father. He determines to remain and if possible thwart the schemers. Disguising himself as a noted ruffian, Shaun Rhue by name, he agrees at the bidding of the Callaghans to impersonate Larry Donovan for a period of time sufficient to deceive an English attorney, William Summerfield, who has been commissioned to wind up the estate of the deceased.

The denouement of the play is attended with great satisfaction to the Donovans and their friends, and consternation of the scheming Callaghans.

CHARACTERS OF THE PLAY.

In the cast of characters given the names of those taking part are not mentioned in the order of any special prominence in the play:—

Patrick Kavanaugh, friend of the Donovans—Mr. W. J. O'Brien.

Gerald Kavanaugh, Patrick's son—Mr. W. F. Cahill.

THE NEWS AS TOLD IN DESPATCHES

Task for London Minister.

London, Ont., March 18.—Rev. A. J. Vining, pastor of Talbot street Baptist Church here, has been invited by the Baptist Union of Great Britain, to travel all through Europe to familiarise himself with conditions in different countries and then found a great Baptist University, to be the training ground for students all over the world.

Mr. Vining will give his decision to his congregation on March 27. He recently refused a call to a Hamilton church at a greatly increased salary. For some years he was superintendent of Canadian Baptist Missions in the northwest, and later in charge of the Baptist mission work in old London.

Protection of Seal Herds.

Washington, D.C., March 18.—The reference of a bill prohibiting the killing of seal on and adjacent to the Pribylof Islands, in the Pacific, precipitated a heated debate in the Senate yesterday, during which Senator Post vigorously objected to the matter going to the committee on conservation of national resources.

Mr. Root said that negotiations with Great Britain were in progress at present, which rendered it most important that the foreign affairs committee should continue to exercise its supervision. He said that necessarily Canada must be consulted, as must also Japan and Russia and other countries.

Parted by Death Only One Hour.

Belleville, Ont., March 18.—The death occurred here yesterday morning one hour apart of two prominent citizens, brother and sister, in the person of John R. Brower and his sister Miss Jane Brower. Mr. Brower was for years treasurer of the Township of Sydney. He was the best-known cheese exporter in the district.

Captured Escaped Murderer.

New York, March 18.—After a struggle in a street car on Ninth avenue yesterday, Alexander Devoe, murderer and escaped convict, was captured by a detective. Devoe escaped from Sing Sing prison on March 9.

Smallpox at Head of Lakes.

Fort William, March 18.—The Board of Health, in view of five cases of smallpox in Port Arthur, has decided in order to protect public health that theatres and other places of amusement should be closed.

Ferry Boat In Strike.

Buffalo, N.Y., March 18.—The ferry boat Niagara, plying between Buffalo and Canada, is tied up at her dock to-day, as the result of a strike on the part of the crew, following the discharge of the boat's master, Wm McMurray, by the Ferry Company.

To Follow West Point.

Kingston, March 18.—Col. Bridges, chief of the General Staff of Military of Australia, and a graduate of the R.M.C. here 30 years ago, has been in the city securing information regarding equipment and curriculum of the Canadian military school. The colonel left yesterday for Halifax. He was Australia's military representative at the Imperial Conference last summer, when it was decided to organize a royal military college in the Commonwealth. Lord Kitchener and the War Office selected Col. Bridges to visit West Point, N.Y., and Kingston for information.

The three-year term of the American college and the restriction of the school to the preparation of army officers will be followed, allowing no students for civil pursuits whatever.

Lord Kitchener, now in Australia and New Zealand, has on his personal staff, Capt. Kirkpatrick, graduate of the R.M.C., son of the late Sir George Kirkpatrick, who won his commission in the Royal Engineers.

Nearly Triple Drowning.

Ottawa, March 18.—Miss Walters and Mrs. Oxley, both daughters of John Walters, farmer of Eardley, had a narrow escape from drowning while crossing on the ice between Marith and Aylmer. The sleigh coming to a large crack in the ice, the horse became balky. The driver applied the whip, when the horse plunged furiously and the ice gave way. The driver managed to get out and was successful in rescuing the two ladies.

Drunken Man on Rails.

London, Ont., March 18.—Wednesday night about ten o'clock as a Pere Marquette train from St. Thomas was entering the city, the engineer noticed a man lying across the rails. The engine could not be stopped until it was within about a foot of the man's prostrate form.

He was found to be helplessly intoxicated. He gives his name as Arthur Strauss, and says he comes from Toronto.

Peasant's Terrible Revenge.

Munich, March 18.—Investigation into the deaths of the Argentine Consul Geiger and four friends, who were killed in an automobile accident, appears to show that the car in which they were riding after nightfall, crashed into a tree which had been deliberately felled to lay across the road. A peasant, whose child was killed by an auto, is suspected.

More Regulars for Halifax.

Halifax, N.S., March 18.—It is announced that the strength of the Royal Canadian Regiment in barracks here is to be increased to 700 on April 1, by drafts from Fredericton and London, Ont.

IRISH HAD BIG TIME

St. Patrick's Day Was Widely Celebrated in Canada —Many Parades.

Montreal, March 18.—St. Patrick's Day was celebrated here with accustomed eclat, it being the first time since the days of Mayor McShane that Montreal's chief magistrate walked in the procession. Mayor Guerin was very much in evidence, wearing his regalia of office.

The sermon was preached at St. Patrick's Church, by Father Walsh of Dublin. The Archbishop of Montreal also spoke.

"Let us unite," he said, "to make the coming eucharistic congress one worthy of the event.

"In September next, I see before me in this vast church, the Irish Catholic people of Montreal, surrounded by Irish archbishops and bishops from Ireland, England and the United States. I see here in this sanctuary the cardinal legate representing his holiness. Prepare, then, my people, for this great event. Let us outdo London and Cologne.

"In the presence of our honored mayor, I thank the City Council for their efforts to make this event great and glorious."

Ottawa.

Ottawa, March 18.—Everywhere the green emblem was prominent yesterday. In the morning high mass was celebrated in St. Patrick's Church, which was crowded to its utmost capacity. There was no procession, that annual function being observed last Sunday.

At St. John.

St. John, N.B., March 18.—Six Irish societies with bands, marched to the cathedral, where a sermon was preached by Rev. Father Meahen. In the evening dinners and amateur theatrical performances were given in observance of the day.

At Kingston.

Kingston, March 18.—At St. Mary's Cathedral Rev. Father McLaughlin, an eloquent preacher of Ogdensburg, N.Y., pointed out the glories and virtues of St. Patrick to a great audience. The Irish societies had paraded to the cathedral to celebrate the event. At night a performance of "The Shaughraun" was given.

REYNOLDS IS A HERO

Brave Conductor Given Two Medals at Big Gathering in Toronto—Much Enthusiasm.

Toronto, March 18.—For the first time in the history of Canada the very seldom bestowed "Albert Medal of the First Class," was pinned to the breast of a Canadian citizen when, last night at Massey Hall, Lieutenant-Governor Gibson, after a felicitious speech of congratulation, presented this badge of bravery to Conductor Thos. Reynolds of North Bay, hero of the recent railway wreck at Spanish River.

The ceremony was specially included in the regular annual celebration of St. Patrick's Day, conducted by the Ancient Order of Hibernians. Massey Hall was packed to the doors with enthusiastic Irishmen.

The presentation came in the middle of a musical and literary program of very entertaining quality. And the real speaker of the occasion was Hon Charles Murphy, P.C., M.P., who hurried from his duties at Ottawa as Secretary of State of Canada, to make the introductory speech in praise of Mr. Reynolds.

At the conclusion of his remarks he introduced Hon. J. M. Gibson, who explained the history of "The Albert Medal of the First-Class," and then read a congratulatory letter from Lord Crewe, who, in acting for the King, also added his own meed of praise for Conductor Reynolds. After the genuine huzzas which were coincident with his honor's pinning the Albert Medal to the Irish-Canadian's breast, the Lieutenant-Governor turned to the audience and called for three cheers and a tiger from them for the hero of the evening, which were given with right good will. Conductor Reynolds was too overcome to reply in words.

At this juncture, when the people thought the honors were all over, the Secretary of States arose and announced that the Royal Canadian Humane Association had requested him to make a public presentation to Mr. Reynolds of their medal at the annual concert of the Hibernian Society in Massey Hall, in recognition of Reynold's "most remarkable heroism in life-saving at the Spanish River railway accident.

President Hernon, on behalf of the society then presented Mr. Reynolds with a silver tea set, "as a mark of their appreciation of the heroism of a fellow-countryman."

Harsh Immigration Methods.

Windsor, Ont., March 18.—Mrs. Fowler, who came from Stratford to Detroit a year ago and was later deserted by her husband, was deported from Detroit by the United States immigration officer, who gave her a ferry ticket and practically dumped her upon Windsor.

Mayor Hanna demanded that the United States Immigration Department pay her fare to her former home. This was refused. He then took the matter up with Ottawa, and is instructed to take the matter up again with the Detroit officials.

SHOULD PAY, TOO

Bill in House of Commons to Make Civil Servants Salaries Attachable.

Ottawa, March 18.—When the House met last night, Hon. Mr. Fielding introduced the insurance bill, which was given a first reading.

In view of the fact that the House has already dealt with this bill, consideration will largely be confined to the amendments which have been made by the Upper Chamber.

Mr. Beauparlant introduced a bill which aims at making the salary of civil servants attachable. He argued that men earning large salaries in the service should be made pay their debts if corporation laborers earning a dollar a day were compelled to do so.

Major Currie introduced a bill to amend the Railway Act. He said that the bill compelling trains to slow down at crossings was such a nuisance that it should be amended. The bill provided that the trains need not slow down unless the railway commission issues an order to that effect.

Unrevised official returns compiled by the customs department show that for the ten months preceding Feb. 1, 1910, Canada exported to the United States goods to the value of $94,643,543. During the same time Canada imported from the United States goods to the value of $179,733,510.

Of this amount $94,497,084 worth came in under the general tariff, and $84,880,786 worth was on the free list.

The Banking and Commerce Committee of the Commons finally passed yesterday morning F. D. Monk's bill in respect to co-operative credit societies, with the addition of two important amendments, providing that every society organized shall establish and maintain a guarantee fund securing deposits made with it, and also providing that every society shall pay into the fund at least ten per cent. of the profits until such fund shall equal the maximum amount held in deposit.

The bills incorporating the Weyburn Security Bank and the Sovereign Trust Co. of Vancouver were reported.

TELEGRAPHIC BRIEFS.

John Maloy, a separate school caretaker at Ottawa, dropped dead yesterday.

Contracts for the Australian Dreadnoughts are being placed on the Clyde; they are to be 28-knot speed.

Birse, a Toronto cabinet-maker, who was stopped by immigration officers at Buffalo, while on his way to take a job at Rochester, was yesterday deported.

Because of the big sleet storm last November in Eastern Ontario, which made breaks in the tree limbs, the maple syrup crop in that section is seriously affected.

Mme. Donalda, the Canadian prima donna, is now in New York, on her way from Europe, to sing at the dedication of the Ottawa Hospital, and in other Canadian cities.

The Belgian Government has submitted the draft of a bill providing for reprisals against France if a tariff measure now pending in the French Parliament is enacted into law.

M. R. Gooderham of Toronto has purchased the property of the late Capt. Porte on the Lake Shore road, half a mile east of Oakville. The property, which fronts on the lake, has an area of about 12 acres. The purchase price is $14,000.

Confesses to Arson.

Woodstock, March 18.—The mystery surrounding the robbery of the Bain fire brigade quarters was cleared up yesterday afternoon when Police Chief Thompson arrested Louis Chatterson, a young man employed in a local insurance office.

Chatterson signed a full confession a short time after. In it he says that he rung in the fire alarm, started a fire in a vacant house and then, while both the city and Bain fire departments were busy, he went through the Bain quarters and stole $28 in money. Chatterson says he had been gambling.

He was a former member of the Bain department, and his home is in London. He will come up in court in the morning.

Dismissed Staff Starts Paper.

St. John, N.B., March 18.—The St. John Evening Star was purchased by The Evening Times, a rival newspaper, and the members of The Star's staff were informed that, beginning this week, their services would not be required, the purchasers declining to publish only one evening paper, under the name of The Times-Star.

The staff of The Star, however, is continuing the publication of a newspaper at another office, under the name of The New Star. Litigation is probable.

This Dog Had Rabies.

Oakville, March 18.—Dr. Amyot, the provincial analyst, has reported to Mayor Hillmer that the dog which passed through Oakville the other day, and was finally shot at the Goodeham farm, was in the worst stage of rabies. The Board of Health has ordered that the dogs which were bitten shall be destroyed. The tag found on the mad dog was issued on Aug. 31, 1909, by the Township of York, to F. Foreman, Southport road, Swansea.

Telephone Trade

BUSINESS houses solicit telephone trade. They realize its importance. It is the consumer's most convenient way of reaching the shop or the store.

When the larder runs low, when the fuel gives out, when an article of furniture is needed—the Bell telephone is a ready help to the housewife. It reaches the sources of supply.

Telephone trade is not confined to consumers and retailers in one locality. The Local and Long Distance Bell Telephone reaches all localities and brings together widely separated merchants and customers.

FRIDAY, MARCH 18, 1910.

LET THE PEOPLE KNOW

We understand that the City Council has received from the Canadian General Electric Company an offer for all the power that will be available at the waterworks dam after sufficient has been reserved for the purposes of the Water Commissioners. The Council should immediately make public the exact terms of the company's proposal. The people of Peterborough should have an opportunity of considering the proposal at the same time that the council are considering it. It is not necessary for the aldermen to make up their minds whether the offer should be accepted or not before making it public.

We do not question the good intentions of the City Council. We believe the aldermen desire to make the best possible arrangement in the interest of the city, but no harm can be done by letting the people know what is going on.

BIG TRADE FIGURES

The Toronto Globe thinks the Canadian Government should act cautiously in the matter of trade relations with the United States because the total trade of Canada (with all British and foreign countries, including the United States, during eleven months of the present fiscal year has amounted to $610,577,961, of which $332,391,469 represented the value of imports and $278,186,312 the value of exports, and the Globe fears that these big figures would be reduced if our commercial relations with the United States were disarranged by a tariff war. No doubt it is pleasant for the Globe to look at these big figures, but would it not be better to see a great increase in home trade figures? It will be noted that in eleven months the trade balance against Canada in dealing with the outside world was been $54,205,357. If we take our trade with the United States alone the balance against us is much greater. If fifty-four million dollars of the money that goes out of the country to purchase foreign goods for Canadian consumption could be kept in circulation in Canada, the foreign trade figures might not look so big, but the annual sales of merchants in manufacturing cities and towns throughout Canada would be much greater.

IN CHARGE OF MR. PUGSLEY

It seems quite appropriate that the scheme of American promoters to grab the St. Lawrence water power should be taken charge of in the House of Commons by Hon. Mr. Pugsley, the member of the Government who paid five thousand dollars for a sawdust wharf that only cost seven hundred dollars, and who is responsible for many dredging contracts, which seem chiefly designed as a means of transferring the money of the Canadian people to the pockets of Liberal contractors. A man who will waste the money of the people will not hesitate to waste the natural resources of the country or hand them over to foreigners. But Mr. Pugsley could do nothing without the support of the other Liberal members of the House. Indeed, the bill was introduced by Mr. Pardee, the chief whip for the Liberal party, but Hon. Mr. Pugsley took charge of it, and was assisted by other members of the Government in trying to force it through the House without allowing the Opposition to see the plans for the big project which it is intended to further.

This project is a matter of as much importance to the country as the threatened tariff war. A tariff war will only be temporary. The tariff may be changed with a change of Government, but if we once allow American capitalists to dam the St. Lawrence for the purpose of constructing great power works on the United States side of the river we cannot get back what we give away.

THE POWER QUESTION

In the discussion regarding the disposal of the power that will be available at the waterworks dam after sufficient has been reserved for the purposes of the Water Commissioners, several suggestions have been offered. One not yet made public is that the city should have an estimate made of the value of the undeveloped power privilege, and then offer to lease it for a term of years to some large user of power at a rental that would yield to the city a moderate rate of interest on the value of the privilege, the manufacturing concern thus leasing the undeveloped power to develop it at its own expense.

It would amount to much the same thing if a large manufacturing concern would guarantee that, on condition of development being undertaken by the Water Commissioners, it would buy all the surplus power at a price that would cover the annual interest on the debentures issued to pay the cost of construction, meet the expenses of operation and yield a moderate interest on the value of the power privilege, but in either case there should be a guarantee that the power would be fully used for manufacturing purposes by the company taking it, and that a large number of workingmen would be employed.

As the dam has been constructed by the Water Commissioners, there is much to be said in favor of the power plant being constructed and operated under their direction, but it is important that the surplus power should be used as a means of encouraging manufacturing development in this city, and it is, therefore, essential that the price asked for it shall be low.

A MOTION FALSIFIED

At a meeting of the Lumsden investigation committee on the 22nd of February, Mr. Haughton Lennox, one of the Conservative members moved "that the committee recommend that their proceedings and the evidence taken by them be printed and reported to the House from day to day," and the minutes of the meeting prepared by the clerk show that the motion was agreed to.

On that same day the report of the meeting signed by Mr. Geoffrion, the chairman, was presented, but the motion of Mr. Lennox had been altered and read:—"Your committee recommend that their proceedings and any evidence taken be printed from day to day and that Rule 72 be suspended in reference thereto."

The words, "and reported to the House," had been omitted. Why were they omitted? Mr. Borden charges that the motion was purposely garbled in order to prevent the Conservative members of the committee from explaining to the House why they retired from the committee, as according to the rules of the House it is out of order to discuss the proceedings of a committee before they are reported to the House. There seems to be no doubt that the falsification of the motion was deliberate and the purpose of it is evident, because up to the time the Conservatives left the committee the proceedings were regularly reported to the House, but since they left no report has been made and consequently Parliament cannot discuss the proceedings. Such methods are a disgrace to the Liberal party.

EDITORIAL NOTES

For ways that are dark and tricks that are vain the Liberals at Ottawa are peculiar.

Yesterday was the one hundredth anniversary of the birthday of Mrs. Margaret Kenney, an Irish lady who lives in Dunnville, Ont., enjoying health and prosperity. Evidently the 17th of March is a lucky birthday and Canada is a healthy country for Irish people.

The wonderful growth of protection sentiment in the United Kingdom is indicated by the fact that the Association of Chambers of Commerce of the United Kingdom have adopted by a vote of 51 chambers to 12 chambers, resolutions in favor of tariff reform in the interests of British trade, increased employment and colonial preference.

Chief Food Inspector Dr. McCarry has been investigating cold storage in Montreal. He reports that in one cold storage house two thousand sheep have been kept cool for two years. The owners of the sheep declare that they are still in good condition and fit for human consumption, but the general public would like to have some more unprejudiced opinion. A careful scientific examination should be made to ascertain the exact condition of meat that has been stored so long.

Why is it that the Ottawa Government so frequently desire to conceal the facts regarding measures which they wish to force through the House? The Montreal Star, referring to the recent fight over the St. Lawrence Power Transmission Bill, says: "It has yet to be explained why, if the proposals are fair and equable, it was considered desirable to resort to devious, hole-and-corner methods to prevent a discussion of the merits of the question on the floor of the House. Neither has it yet been made clear why there is such earnest desire for haste."

Five hundred Dutch farmers from Holland reached Winnipeg recently on their way to Alberta, where they intend to settle on irrigated land. It is said that they are only the forerunners of a big influx of farmers from Holland. This class of people would make good settlers for Northern Ontario. There would be room in the great clay belt for many thousands of them. The good qualities of the Dutch and their remarkable achievements in their very small country put them in a different class from most of the foreign immigrants.

It will be remembered that in the last days of Liberal rule in Ontario the Hon. Government gave away Niagara power privileges that should have remained under control of the Government. Is it not significant that the Liberals at Ottawa are now trying to give away the St. Lawrence water power? Does this indicate that the period of Liberal rule at Ottawa is drawing quickly to a close? The Ross Government arrangements were much less objectionable in one respect. They provided for works being constructed on the Canadian side of Niagara, while the big scheme which Liberals at Ottawa are furthering provides for power works on the American side of the St. Lawrence.

The Giant's Strength

...By...
BASIL KING,
Author of "Let Not Man Put Asunder," "The Steps of Honor," Etc.

Copyright, 1908, by Harper & Brothers.

"Your father never fights with any one," George Trafford cried forcibly. "It is others who fight with him. They won't let him alone. His success is what they can't pardon, and the less so when they compare it with their own failure. There's never been a man who has tried harder than your father to do good to others, and there's never been one who has had more harm done to him."

In his tone there was a mingling of pride and indignation. Mrs. Trafford raised her lace handkerchief to her eyes. Even Mrs. George Trafford, who had only a connection by affinity with the great financier, threw up her head with admiration when the trumpet was blown in his praise.

Paula herself felt a strange oppression about the heart. Like the rest of the Traffords, she had set up the man who had made them what they were as a kind of demigod. She had done more than the rest of them, for into the worship they all accorded him she had infused a self devotion of which she alone was capable. As the youngest of the family it was she who had known him least as a man of business and most as a man of the world. In all her recollection of him he had never been anything but the great personage whose goings and comings were as important as those of kings. During his later years, when the immensity of his affairs obliged him to travel much, she was his frequent companion. She helped him in collecting rare old books and works of art and filled some of the gaps in his early education; but she never saw him otherwise than as the financial potentate who had taught statesmen to look to him for advice and bishops for benefactions and who could buy anything that was good enough.

To be the daughter of such a man had given her a kind of royalty—the royalty of money. Wherever they went they were treated with a spontaneous awe scarcely less deferential than if they had sprung from the line of Charlemagne. Governments and aristocracies did them honor, and sovereigns received them on a footing curiously like that of equality. As for republics and democracies, they had hailed Paul Trafford at first as the type they could produce at its very best—the man who out of small beginnings could rise to vastness of power and then dispense his means not merely in sumptuous living, but in founding hospitals, building churches, endowing seats of learning and leaving a name that time could only consecrate. It was not strange that Paula, living in the radiation of so strong a character, should give him more than filial affection. For this very reason certain suggestions made tonight seemed to her like a desecration. To fight with a woman! To club her down! There are no women in business, only competitors! What did it mean? For a few minutes she kept silence, pondering her cousin's words. She looked straight before her, trouble clouding in her Celtic eyes and the little furrow of perplexity deepening between the brows.

"Did Mrs. Winship"— she began, with some hesitation.

"For mercy's sake, Paula," Mrs. Trafford exclaimed hastily, "don't get those Winships on the brain! I thought they were dead and buried long ago, and, dear knows, they've given us trouble enough."

"Let her go on, Aunt Julia," George Trafford reasoned calmly. "Since the subject has come up she'd better know it just as it is."

"I was going to ask," Paula said, with dignity, "if Mrs. Winship thought that papa had done her wrong?"

"Most people think you do them wrong if you do things better than they can," Trafford answered quickly. "There's no kind of business, from the stage to the church, in which the strong worker isn't held as an enemy by the feeble and the indifferent. That's inseparable from human nature, and your father has had to face it. The hostility he has encountered has been in proportion to his success, so naturally it's been colossal."

"And I've never known him to utter a harsh word," Mrs. Trafford observed quaveringly. "As each new attack has arisen he has faced about to crush it. When that's been done he has given it no more thought—if it hasn't been to help those he has beaten. Where he has seen people with ability he has often taken them into his own employment, and there are plenty of wealthy men today who can tell you that their fortunes were made when your father singled them out as clever opponents. Your father has the most wonderful way of converting enemies into friends. It's a sort of art of his. I've never heard of it anywhere else—unless it was in Mary, queen of Scots."

"Couldn't he have done that with the Winships?" Paula asked, returning to the personal point.

"In business," Trafford explained, swinging himself round so as to lean over the arm of his chair and speaking for Paula's benefit, "business men when they can't get best will turn themselves about so as to put up with second best. They will even accept third best and fourth best rather than go with no advantage whatever. But every now and then you meet some one with whom it must be all or nothing. They'll fight you to the bitter end and die before they yield. In fact, they're people with the fighting rather than the business instinct, and when you meet them they leave you no choice but to crush them out of your way."

"Were the Winships like that?"

"Yes, they were. They were like that, only worse. You could no more beat modern methods into old Roger Winship's mind than you could into a mountain of brass. Because he was the largest owner of coal lands in New Hampshire he looked upon himself as a sort of ruler by divine right. For nearly thirty years he had operated the Devlin mines"—

"But they're ours!" Paula exclaimed.

"Now, yes," Trafford assented, with a short laugh. "But when your father first cast his eyes on them the Devlin Coal company was practically old Roger Winship. He worked the mines and sold the coal in a humdrum, provincial, old fashioned way and made a handsome income. Then came your father with new ideas, big ideas, and victory behind him all along the line."

"But papa didn't want to take the Devlin mines from Mr. Winthrop?"

"No, not at all. He was only developing the plan with which he had begun—that he should control the entire output and sale of coal in the sphere under his immediate influence. As you know, that sphere expanded as he went on, like a growing empire. At first, when he was a young man, he thought of coal production only within the state of Vermont. Didn't he, aunt?"

"He spoke only of that," Mrs. Trafford corrected. "His thoughts from the beginning were as vast as his business afterward came to be."

"At any rate," George Trafford continued, "he began with Vermont, quietly and, as we should think nowadays, very modestly. And yet so complete was his system and so thorough his organization in every detail that in a few years there was not a bushel of coal mined or sold from Canada to the Massachusetts line that wasn't under his direct control. In five years' time there was practically not a merchant in Vermont who could sell a ton of coal if he hadn't bought it from your father."

"But the Devlin mines are in New Hampshire," Paula argued, eager to know about the Winships.

"We're coming to that," Trafford went on enthusiastically. "It wasn't natural that a business such as his had come to be should stop within the limits of a state. It spilled over on every side—into New York, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, the middle states everywhere. It crossed the whole country. The farther the net went out the easier it seemed to throw it farther still. His system was so perfect that the thing seemed to go of itself. In reality his method was simple. It lay in three main points—first, to get control of the means of transportation by rebates from the great railway and steamship lines—rebates allowed to him and refused to others; then to sweep out competition by annexing rival companies and lastly to keep up prices by limiting the supply. If an independent company refused to yield to his demands, then he laid siege to it—siege as regular, as thorough, as patient and as systematic as that of a fortress. He invested it, so to speak, by sea and land. He cut off its means of transportation by prohibitive rates and its customers by low prices. If there was litigation he was almost invariably victorious. In the end the rebellious company did one of two things—it capitulated and came in or it went bankrupt and Uncle Paul bought it."

Trafford threw back his great head with a sense of exultation in so much industrial triumph.

"You ought to say, George," young Mrs. Trafford suggested, "that your uncle never struck until he had made the most generous proposals."

"That's true, Laura," her husband agreed. "Paula should understand that, and the Winships make an excellent illustration. The Devlin company," he pursued in a tone of narrative, "had already been pretty hard hit by us before your father began to give it open attention. Of course he'd known for years what he was going to do with it, but he's never one to act before the time. When he was ready—that is to say, when he had secured his rebates on all its railways, when he held its customers in the hollow of his hand, when by his agents whom he kept in its employ he knew its business better than it did itself—he made his offer. It was a good one or it wouldn't have come from him. As nearly as I can remember, it was this: It was to hand over to the Vermont Mining company—that was your father, of course—for the period of twenty years, the mines, the plant and all its own time. He was to put in $20,000 and his rebates—that is to say, it was to have the same transportation advantages as ourselves. It was to limit its output to a given quantity, and in return Uncle Paul was to guarantee a profit of $30,000 a year. Any profit over fifty thousand was to go to him."

"Most generous, I call it," young Mrs. Trafford commented.

"And yet the old man refused it," Trafford said, with a short laugh.

"Why?" Paula asked, trying to keep up with her cousin's explanations.

"Why?" he echoed. "Because those whom the gods wish to destroy they first make mad. Old Roger Winship thought he could pit himself against the man whose financial conquests were by this time the talk of two worlds. You see, for forty years the Winships had done a steady, respectable business in the played out, live and let live way that used to be the standard. They had no notion of progress or energy or real competition. Your father had begun to eat the heart out of their trade before they ever heard of him. By the time they began to wake up they were as good as ruined already. Your father knew it, but they didn't. When they took in the fact they threatened him with all the rigor of the law."

"Only," Mrs. Trafford added, "they went beyond the limits of propriety. They said your father was no better than a common thief—well, no, I won't say it. He himself is the last to bear malice and an example to us all."

"At any rate," George Trafford pursued, "your father stepped in just then with his offer. He was always for peace and fair dealing, and he knew the psychological moment had come. He knew, too, just how it would be taken and laid out his plan of action for five or six years ahead if the Devlin hadn't been a sort of family company, with all the shares in a few hands. It would probably have come in after the first storm of threats had blown over. A body of shareholders are generally ready in the long run to eat humble pie if their dividends are assured them. But, you see, the Devlin was practically Roger Winship, a proud, stubborn, high tempered old fellow by a bygone school. As hereditary coal king of New Hampshire he felt himself a match for any mushroom Trafford, and so he set to work."

"Very cleverly, it must be admitted," Mrs. Trafford observed. "Your father always says that he went straight for the weak point of the whole system."

"Yes—the rebates," Trafford went on. "Uncle knew that if the question of rebates was ever seriously raised in law he couldn't hold out beyond a certain point."

"Do you mean that papa knew he was making use of an illegal privilege?" Paula asked.

Trafford was not expecting a question of so much acumen and replied somewhat slowly:

MINISTER AND ZAM-BUK

Cured Him of a Bad Sore Which Defied All Other Remedies for Two Years

Rev. Charles E. Stafford, of Bridgeburg, Ont., says:—"I had been much troubled for over two years with a sore on my left cheek. I tried all kinds of salves and lotions, but nothing I procured seemed to have the least bit of effect towards healing the sore. Hearing of Zam-Buk, I decided to give it a trial, and see if it would bring about a cure, as so many other things had failed. I purchased a supply, and commenced with the treatment. After several applications, to my great joy, Zam-Buk has effected what for two years I tried in vain to bring about—a complete cure."

Case after case could be quoted, in which, as in the above instance, Zam-Buk has worked cures when everything else tried had failed. There is a reason for this. Away back in the days of Roman gladiators, secret balms were used for the healing of cuts and injuries sustained in the arena and in battle. Then came a period during which external balms were neglected, followed by a period in which all the salves and embrocations had as their base animal fats and oils. Zam-Buk marks a new epoch. It is absolutely devoid of all animal fats, all mineral coloring matters, and is composed entirely of rich medicinal herbal extracts.

Skin diseases, such as eczema, ringworm, salt rheum, and prairie itch, are speedily overcome by it. For piles it is fine!—easing the pain and inflammation and hastening a cure. It also cures burns, scalds, cuts, ulcers, children's sores and eruptions, blood-poisoning, scratches, old wounds, varicose ulcers, etc. All druggists and stores sell at 50c a box, or post free, for price, from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto.

Prisoner's Dock From Instinct.

The relation of stories in which a judge figured recalled an occasion a good many years ago when Justice MacMahon held the Assize Court in the old court house on Adelaide street, Toronto. The room was so arranged that when the clerk of the court called the name of each juryman selected to take his place in the jury box, he had to walk the length of the room from behind the rail, back of which spectators sat, to reach his own enclosure. In doing so he passed the prisoner's dock.

On this occasion the clerk called out the name of a juror, and the latter left his seat, but apparently did not know where to sit.

"Get into the box," called out one of the constables after him. The juror walked half the length of the room till he reached the prisoner's dock, when he stopped, opened the gate and walked in and seated himself. There was a laugh at the expense of the juryman, but Judge MacMahon whispered to one of the officials to scrutinize the identity of the man. It was soon discovered that he was an old hand in court, having been three times convicted of offences. He followed his natural instinct in hustling into the box when spoken to sharply.

SUDDEN DEATH

St. Catharines, March 13.—Edward McBride, who performed the duties of outside tyler at the fifty-first annual convention of the Grand Orange Lodge of Ontario west, which adjourned Friday morning, dropped dead tonight.

The deceased had been in excellent health, although on two occasions during the winter had experienced fainting spells. He spent the day with Mrs McBride, who survives him. After the evening meal he devoted an hour to reading. He then went to the window and stood looking out for some time. Suddenly he fell backwards to the floor, and died before his wife could summon aid.

Deceased was about fifty-five years of age and had been an enthusiastic Orangeman for over forty years.

THE SPRING OPENINGS

Beautiful Display in the Stores of Peterborough Being Admired by Hundreds.

The spring opening of the stores of Peterborough was inaugurated yesterday, and the largest crowd that ever turned out for an event of the kind in this city filled the stores in the afternoon to buy and to admire. The merchants have made it known that they will be pleased to see the people at their stores, whether they buy or not, and it is expected that the crowd to-morrow will be a record breaker, as hundreds of people will be in from the country to see what is newest in fashion's realm. It is generally conceded that the display of spring goods this year is the finest ever seen in Peterborough, and the merchants are being congratulated on all sides for the enterprise they are showing. The windows have been attractively decorated, and the ladies linger before them admiring the beautiful costumes, hats, and other goods that delight the feminine heart. The drygoods and millinery stores have all assumed a holiday appearance, and will continue so for the rest of the week.

ALL HOPE IS ABANDONED

Of Adjusting the Tariff Differences Between Canada and the United States

Special to the Review.

Washington, D.C., March 18.—There is a reason now to believe that the State Department officials have practically abandoned hope of any adjustment of the tariff differences between the United States and Canada, and believe that it is altogether probable that the maximum rates of the Payne-Aldrich Act will go into operation against that country automatically two weeks from yesterday.

AN EFFECTIVE DEMONSTRATION OF PRACTICAL VALUE OF DOMESTIC SCIENCE COURSE

The luncheon prepared by the Domestic Science classes of the Collegiate Institute, to which the members of the Board of Education and a few of their friends were invited, proved a most interesting affair, and afforded the trustees and the other guests an opportunity to judge of the nature of the work being done in this department of school activity.

Nothing elaborate was attempted by the students, but a simple and practical illustration was given of the work taken up in their regular course of study.

That the effort of the Collegiate girls was a success may be inferred from the following opinions of three of the guests:—

Principal Walker, of the Peterborough Normal School, says:—

The luncheon provided by the Household Science Class of I. C. Form of the Collegiate Institute on Tuesday last was in every way creditable to the young ladies and to their instructor, Miss Steinhoff. A menu was prepared which gave evidence of skill in the culinary art, and it was served in a manner which called forth words of high praise and appreciation from those guests who were privileged to partake of it.

The Board of Education is to be congratulated on the success which has thus far attended this new department in their schools, and good results must inevitably follow that education which trains both hand and mind, and which will do so much to raise household duties from drudgery to the dignity of a science.

Dr. A. W. McPherson expresses himself as follows:—

The luncheon given by the Form I.—A. girls of the Collegiate Institute on Wednesday last was voted a decided success by all who were so fortunate as to be present.

It was a fine seven-course banquet, served in excellent taste, and at an estimated cost of between 15 and 20 cents a plate.

One cannot overestimate the value of such a training for the girls. It is the most practical subject in their course.

During the last four or five years considerable attention has been given to the successful side of diet work in the large hospitals, and in the medical colleges, as well as in the schools for this special work.

The School Board are to be congratulated upon keeping to the front in this regard.

Add P. C. I. Luncheon—

The Rev. Father McColl had the following to say of the luncheon:

"I found the class room for conducting the lessons well equipped and the teacher, Miss Steinhoff, impressed me as a person well qualified for the great work to be accomplished. The table was tastefully arranged, and the different courses of the luncheon were exceptionally well cooked and consequently most palatable. As the cooking and all the work connected with the meal was done by the pupils, I had ample proof from personal observation of their proficiency. It is very creditable for girls so young to be able to cook so well, and I congratulate the Board of Education upon the good and practical training they are furnishing the future women of the city."

BUGLE BAND PUT THE WONDERS AWAY EASILY

Losers Started off Well and Scored Seven Runs, in First Time at Bat, But Were Left Behind in the Second

No. 8 Company failed to show up far their game with the Bugle Band nine last night at the Armories, but after much hesitation on the part of the buglers the challenge of Halpin's Wonders was accepted. Considerable pressure was brought to bear upon one Sam Sharpe, and he consented to handle the game from a sheltered position behind the catcher, and the show started. The end of the ninth saw a 37-19 score hung up against the Wonders, and the only explanation of the defeat is that the losers were weak, and particularly so in the first four innings, at the initial bag and on the firing line. "Babe Adams" Halpin endeavored to shoot them under as best he could, but his eye was all to the bad. On numerous occasions he mistook the arc lamps for the batter, and had there been any other than "Silver" Downey on the receiving end, it would have been a shame. He retired at the end of the fourth in favor of "Slim" Gibbs, and went to the second cushion, where he astonished himself and the rest of the team by stabbing a couple of easy ones which fell into his hands. The Wonders played a ringer at first base, and while there was some objection at the start of the contest on the part of the Bugle Band, the needlessness of this was quite apparent, as the game advanced. He meant well enough, but there is nothing in the rule book about catching with the teeth, or playing high-sky when the ball is thrown to catch a runner. Outside of these few weak spots the team performed fairly well.

For the winners Bill Sharpe was at the heaving position, and in all but the first innings, when he was clouted for seven runs, did good work, and received fine support—at times—from his team mates. It is not likely that the two aggregations will meet again.

The teams were:

Bugle Band—Sharpe, p.; Butcher, c.; Weatherston, 1b; East, ss; Weart, 2b; Drysdale, ss; McWilliams, 3b; Mills, rf; Fitzgerald, lf.

Halpin's Wonders—Halpin, p; Downey, c; Ringer, 1b; Metheral, ss; Gibbs, 2b; Mahoney, ss; Poole, 3b; Longland, rf; Moore, lf.

Score by innings:—

Bugle Band	556821424—37
Wonders	724102012—19

Umpire—Sam Sharpe.

IRISH BEAT THE SCOTCH AND TORIES TRIMMED GRITS

Curlers Catch the "We Won't Go Home Till Morning" Fever and Have Two Contests in One Night—One-Sided Scores Were a Feature.

A new record was established at the curling rink last night. It was a sort of "we won't go home till morning" thing, it being well on in the new day before the last game was over. The Scotch vs. Irish contest was the scheduled event for the night, and it took place between eight and eleven o'clock. Each nationality was represented by five rinks and sixteen ends were played. The competition was featured by an unusually large number of one-sided scores, but as they were pretty evenly divided between the two sides, the result was close enough in the totals. The Irish won by five shots, the scores being: Irish, 74; Scotch, 69.

When the contest was over refreshments were served in the dining hall of the rink. While partaking of the meal the question arose as to when the Grits and Tories should have a game. "Let's go out and settle it now" said an enthusiastic Tory. "I'm game," said another, and the Grits chimed in that they were not going to take a bluff, and it was decided to have the matter out then and there. Three Tory and three Grit rinks took the ice a few minutes after eleven o'clock and played two ends. The Tories were up on two rinks and won out by a total of thirteen shots. The totals were: Tories, 24; Grits, 21.

The game was called at the end of the tenth end on account of daylight.

Coleman Bros. did the catering for the evening.

The skips and scores were as follows:—

WRESTLING

During the wrestling match at the Grand Theatre Thursday, Conkle, the eastern wrestler, who enjoys a reputation for rough-house tactics, certainly confirmed all that has been said about him. No more disgusting exhibition of indecency in the name of sport could be imagined than for one wrestler to spit deliberately in another's face while the latter was on the defensive, but that is what occurred and was permitted to go as part of "the game." The sooner those responsible for conduct of the wrestling bouts here realise that Winnipeg does not want and will not tolerate such rowdyism and disgusting tactics in connection with sport the better it will be for the sport they are endeavoring to promote, but are in effect killing. A man may even be rough, but still be sufficiently decent to retain some respect and not offend the sensibilities of the spectators.—Winnipeg Free Press.

THE RING

San Francisco, March 17.—The Earl of Rosebery, former premier of Great Britain, will head a party of British noblemen who will come here to see the Jeffries-Johnson fight, according to announcement made yesterday.

The party, it is said, have already arranged for a special train to carry them from New York to San Francisco as well as for ringside reservations.

After the fight the party will make an eastern trip, stopping at the principal cities en route.

LANGFORD WON IN THE EIGHTH

Los Angeles, Cal., March 17.—Sam Langford, of Boston, to-day did away with Jim Flynn, the Pueblo fireman, in the last half of the thirteenth round of a fight that was scheduled to go 45 rounds. The knockout was not a clean one. The uppercut which Langford delivered with his left hand merely accelerated Flynn's fall, after he had missed a right swing at Langford's jaw and lost his balance. Flynn fell prone on the mat with his arms extended and disfigured his jaw. Referee Eyton counted the fireman out before Flynn's seconds were able to realize what had happened.

Flynn's chances of winning were dimmed in the first round when Langford breaking away from the fistic clinch delivered a right swing to the fireman's left cheek. The blow opened a gash and started the blood flowing. With his face cut and swollen, bleeding from the nose and mouth and apparently weakened in body and spirit by the terrific blows of the colored fighter Flynn fought through six more rounds and came up for the eighth. In the first seven rounds Flynn had prevented the colored fighter from setting himself for a knockout by closing in whenever he found his arms free, and butting his head up against his opponent's chin. He could not do that in the eighth.

When that round was half over Langford leaped backward from a clinch and started his right to Flynn's jaw. Flynn launched a swing with his right, but it failed to find the mark and his body followed through. Langford's left hand shot to Flynn's jaw, but it was more from his own momentum than Langford's blow that Flynn went down and out.

TRIED HARD TO BRING THE CONVENTION HERE

Special to the Review.

Toronto, March 17.—A very strong bid for holding the next convention of the Grand Lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen of Ontario in Peterborough was made in the annual session held here to-day by Mr. J. J. Turner, D.D.G.M., of that great industrial city. In very eloquent terms he described the beauty and activity, extent and comfort of the hotel accommodation of his city and assured the delegates of a most enthusiastic and cordial welcome from not only members of the Order, but from all citizens. He told of the local attractions, the industrial establishments, the excellent railway facilities, the splendid citizenship and Peterborough's popularity as a convention city and its prominence as a fraternal city. No sooner had Mr. Turner made a strong claim for his city than centres like London and Ingersoll set up their claims. So by way of compromise Toronto was again chosen for 1911 meeting, but another year if an advocate appears at Grand Lodge that big fraternal gathering may go to Peterborough.

PRINCE RUPERT A MINING CENTRE

There are few recorded instances of a railroad grade ever cutting a mineral vein of any value. So far the main line of the G.T.P. is no exception, but the district which it traverses is every day looming up into greater and greater importance. The coast formation has never proved very prolific of mineral wealth, but 100 miles from Prince Rupert the line enters a new field. A belt of mineralized rock, starting at the Portland Canal, running through the headwaters of the Nass, crosses the Skeena river about the Kitselas Canyon and extends into the interior through the hills at Hazelton and the Babines and Hudson Bay mountains. The extent of the zone is unknown. Prospectors have only touched it in spots, but these spots have shown wealth incalculable The immense area of this ore body can only be appreciated by one who has travelled over it. The future of the Portland Canal is an assured thing now. The same is known to exist on the Nass, while late last fall discoveries were made in the vicinity of the Kitselas Canyon which, when developed and explored farther, will no doubt show very considerable ore body. These discoveries were made too late in the season to prove much more than that ore of good quality existed in the district, covering considerable area. Silver, lead and copper are the chief minerals found; but all ores in the district carry gold values, roughly speaking, of from $1 to $40. Some even go much higher than this.

At Hazelton, 180 miles from Prince Rupert, and on the line of the G.T.P. railway, the existence of a magnificent ore has been demonstrated by the strike on the Silver Cup, a property on Nine-Mile mountain. Ninety-six inches of solid steel galena ore is surely sufficient assurance that Nine-Mile at least will be productive of much wealth. Work on the Dibble group, owned by James Cronin, of Spokane, has progressed most favorably all winter. A tunnel of 325 feet has revealed a cross vein, which had itself attained three feet across. This tunnel was being run to tap the main vein, which was expected to be reached at 400 feet. The Law property has also surpassed early expectations.

On Hudson Bay mountain, which lies just across the Bulkley valley from the Babine range, prospects have been struck and developed to the shipping point. The Lakeview group, overlooking the railroad and only six miles distant from it, shows grey copper and free gold. This likewise is a silver-lead property. Five tons of galena ore were shipped from the Coronado group, which gave smelter returns of $100 per ton in gold, silver and lead. This was five years ago. With the shipping facilities the railroad will give, it is estimated by conservative mining men that much of this ore can be landed at the smelter at Prince Rupert for a cost of $4 per ton, approximately. It only requires the completion of the railroad to throw open a mining country of immense possibilities.—Prince Rupert Optimist.

No S. A. Band at Port Hope

The Port Hope Times says:—

The prospects for a local Salvation Army band in the near future, are just at present rather dim, owing to the fact that our instructor, Mr. Fred Jagran, is leaving Port Hope.

Two instruments have already been purchased and will be held as Salvation Army property and ready for use when a suitable instructor can be secured.

The $25 profit to the corps from the recent Staff Band meetings not needed now for the local band, will be used to supplement a small portion of the salary due the officers stationed in town.

To Punish for Undervaluation.

Montreal, Que., March 18.—The dry-goods trade of Montreal, through the Board of Trade, hopes to bring to the notice of the Government shortly its views respecting the treatment meted out to persons found guilty of defrauding the customs by undervaluation or other unfair means.

The trade takes the view that a firm found guilty should be fittingly punished. It is claimed that there are cases on record where merchants have been allowed off with a fine, even up to the third offence. Undervaluation is a great hardship to the honest dealer, and they feel keenly on the subject.

Several cases are said to have occurred recently whereby offenders were allowed off lightly by the Department.

Our Oldest Freemason.

Dr. Kingdon, of Heavitree, Exeter, England, who has recently reached his ninety-seventh year, is said to be the oldest Freemason in the world. Dr. Kingdon was initiated into the Edinburgh Lodge, Canongate, Kilwinning, No. 2, in the year the late Queen came to the throne, so that he has both long membership and ripe age to his record.

Insurance Companies Lose About $125,000.00 by the Wreck at Spanish River

Double Liability for About Twenty-five Persons

A loss of somewhere in the neighbourhood of $125,000 is what the Accident Insurance Companies estimate the wreck at Spanish River bridge means to them.

They figure that about 25 of those who met death carried Accident Insurance, and the average insurance, according to the tables, is $5,000. In case of death in a railway disaster there is a double liability, making the figure $6,000, or $5,000 to be more conservative.

Their loss may total more than that, for the commercial travellers, a number of whom were killed, usually carry very heavy insurance. In addition, some of the companies make the policies payable on the death of the wife while travelling, though the policy is taken out in the husband's name. In such cases they pay the husband the same amount as they would have paid the wife were the husband killed.

We issue the BEST Accident and Sickness policy offered to the public.

APSLEY

Special to the Review.

Apsley, March 17.—We are having some very fine weather just now.

Mr. Jared Dingman, of Lasswade, sold a horse a few days ago to Mr. Thos. Talbot. The price paid was $100.

"Cheap John," of Bancroft, dealer in dry goods, and notions, intends putting in a branch store at Apsley in the near future.

Despite the bad roads the young people of the vicinity seem to round up occasionally and shuffle to the tunes almost until the wee small hours.

Mr. Harry E. Grieves, of Gurvis, Sask., who came out here a couple of months ago, started for his home in the west on Wednesday, March 16th.

Another one of our young men in the person of Mr. Archie Downing, started a few days ago for the Black Hills, Muskoka. Mr. Downing will be greatly missed around Apsley by his circle of young friends.

From the "Old Sod"

Mrs. Isaac Richardson, of 541 Homewood avenue, is in receipt of a box of real shamrocks from her brother in Ireland, Mr. Robert Bigger, of Dublin, an old British navy veteran. Mrs. Richardson appreciates the gift all the more because of to-day being her birthday;—

"There's a dear little plant that grows in our isle,
'Twas St. Patrick himself shure that set it."

HANDICAPPED

This is the Case With Many Peterborough People

Too many Peterborough citizens are handicapped with a bad back. The unceasing pain causes constant misery, making work a burden and stooping or lifting an impossibility. The back aches at night, preventing refreshing rest, and in the morning is stiff and lame. Plasters and liniments may give relief, but cannot reach the cause. To eliminate the pains and aches you must cure the kidneys.

Booth's Kidney Pills cure sick kidneys and cure them permanently. Can you doubt Peterborough evidence?

W. Worsington, of 121 Brock street, Peterborough, Ont., says:—"I had suffered with rheumatism for over three years. I found little or no relief in any of the remedies I tried. I became so stiff and sore that I could scarcely turn in bed, and had to lay off from my work. The urine was highly colored and filled with a heavy sand-like sediment which plainly told the disordered state of the kidneys. I tried Booth's Kidney Pills through an advertisement at Wm. Madill's drug store, and was surprised to see how quickly the urine cleared. The kidneys were soon active and the uric acid went from my system. The rheumatism gradually became less severe and finally left me. I am better than in years previous and could not hesitate to recommend Booth's Kidney Pills."

GREATEST SUCCCESS YET GIVEN

Larry Donovan, Shaun Rhue, a Ruffian—Mr. George Lynch.

Mr. T. J. Dineen as Morris Donovan, Larry father, realized the full demands of the part and gave a strikingly human and forceful restrained interpretation of the part. The skill and carefulness with which he handled the characterization of a troubled old man would have done credit to a professional. Mr. W. J. O'Brien played the part of Patrick Kavanaugh, the schoolmaster, in a way that won much laughter and applause. Of course by reason of his profession he was right in his element and recited off Latin sayings with the facility of a professor of dead languages. He was a decided hit with the audience and flourished the cane in a manner that can only be acquired by actual experience. Mr. W. F. Cahill made an excellent young lover, and also played the part in a manner that can only be acquired by actual experience. Mr. Jas. O'Brien was the scheming Peter Callaghan to life and both in make-up and acting did full justice to an exacting part. His work was admirably intelligent and consistent. Mr. John King as Bryan Callaghan, gave one of the cleanest cut delineations of the evening. His style and delivery were excellent and his portrayal of the part was accurate and convincing. In the part of Waddy, Mr. John Gorham was most fortunately cast, and was seen to greater advantage as the double dealing lawyer than he has been in any roles he has ably essayed on previous occasions. The part was a difficult one, but Mr. Gorham took it in an exceptionally capable way. Mr. Egbert Kelly as "Tim," the office boy, provided a generous share of the comedy and really gave a splendid drawing of the shrinking terrorized lad in the employ of Waddy. His triumphant antics at the conclusion of the second act afforded one of the funniest moments of the play. Mr. Claude Brady was highly acceptable as William Bumberfield, the conventionally smooth land agent. His acting was interesting and he looked the part to perfection. Mr. Sam. Houlihan was unable to attend rehearsals by reason of his residence in Lindsay, and therefore was not cast for a part other than one to serve him an opportunity to do his clever dancing specialty, which he performed to the immense delight of the audience, and there was no getting away from an encore. Sam. responded with a stylish shuffle to the tune of the melodious "O'Reilly."

Miss Margaret Derocher was equally acceptable and artistic in both the light and emotional parts of the role of Dora Donovan, and found immediate favor with the audience. Her acting throughout was even and satisfying. Miss Lavina Hallihan repeated the triumphs of her former appearances in T.A.S. entertainments and took the role of Dora Kavanaugh in a natural and very charming manner. Miss Hallihan acted with confidence and marked ability. Last, but not least by a long way, comes Mr. George Lynch, who assumed the part of Larry Donovan and Shaun Rhue. As the Irish gossoon he is in a division by himself and his characterization of Larry Donovan was was one of the best things of the evening. He was also very clever and amusing as Shaun Rhue, the ruffian, who proved that he was in no way a ruffian after all, but a true hearted Larry in disguise, but the "divil's own imp" at that.

SPECIAL NUMBERS.

Two duets "I'm Looking for a Sweet heart," and "Just Because," were sung with excellent effect by Miss Hallihan and Mr. Lynch and Miss Hallihan also sang in beautiful voice and with fine expression "The Call of the Wild," "St. Patrick's Day" and "His Sorrow Thy Young Days Shaded."

Mr. John King sang splendiddly "The Harp That Once Through Tara's Halls" and was enthusiastically recalled.

Mr. Lynch gave an appealing rendition of "A Handful of Earth," at the opening of the second act.

An appropriate finale to the play was "Dear Ireland," which was sung in a captivating manner by Master Joe Clancy, the refrain being taken up by the whole company. Irish flags were conspicuously displayed in the lumber and the applause was hearty when the green emblem and the Union Jack, both in one large flagg, was lowered from above the stagers.

Mr. George Lynch must be given great credit for his able stage management and for his painstaking direction of the rehearsals and Mr. Sam Houlihan is to be complimented for the taste and ability he showed as the makeup artist.

Miss Maggie Doherty made a very efficient musical directress and the Opera House orchestra provided music suitable to the spirit of the occasion.

The company wish to thank stage manager Teddy Crowe and property man Jack Brady and their assistants for the splendid service given in the arrangement of the scenes and in attention to the details of the stage generally.

After the performance those who took part in the play had an enjoyable supper at Hooper's.

Eucharistic Congress.

Montreal, March 18.—Yesterday the civic reception committee came out with a statement that while it had discussed the question of voting funds to the coming Eucharistic Congress, there had never been any mention made of the sum to be given.

A special committee composed of three Roman Catholics and one Protestant, will wait on the Roman Catholic archbishop and ask him what form of entertainment he would like to have the city tender the ecclesiastical visitors. It is likely to include a banquet, a reception on the mountain top and another at the City Hall, and, in addition to this, the city will likely undertake to pay to have various streets decorated.

The Protestant Ministerial Association have formally protested against the rumored grant of $50,000.

Royal Household Flour

The best for Bread and the best for Pastry

"The Little Brother of The Rich"

NOW, this is not a talk about money.

It isn't a contrast between the rich and the poor, for in some things we are all equally rich and there are no poor brothers.

The poorest woman in the land can have just as good bread as the richest. The children who walk can have just as delicious pies and cakes and "goodies" as the children who ride in carriages.

All the money in the world cannot buy better flour than "ROYAL HOUSEHOLD", for there isn't any better.

And the woman who does her own baking can have just as good bread as is served to the Royal Household of England, and that is made from ROYAL HOUSEHOLD FLOUR sent to England from Canada.

And then, a barrel of "ROYAL HOUSEHOLD" produces many more loaves than a barrel of ordinary flour. The bread is better—sweeter, nicer to eat—and more wholesome—has more health and strength in it.

Also, it makes more delicious pies, cakes, biscuits and doughnuts. Children, whose mothers use "ROYAL HOUSEHOLD" at home, can have just as good baked things as the Princes and Princesses of England.

When it comes to "ROYAL HOUSEHOLD" there are no rich or no poor. All can afford to buy the finest flour in the world, OGILVIE'S "ROYAL HOUSEHOLD".

For though "ROYAL HOUSEHOLD" costs more per barrel than ordinary flour it contains so much more nourishment and makes so much more bread of superior quality it is in reality the most economical of all flours.

Burglar's Outfit Found at Point Where he Left Track and Took to Swamp

Norwood, March 17.—Chief Bennett has in his possession part of a burglar's outfit, which was found by Thomas Parks of Belmont, near the distance semaphore at the west end a couple of weeks ago. The outfit was wrapped in a woolen sock enclosed in an old mitt, and contained a two-ounce bottle of nitro-glycerine, two coils of blasting fuse, thirteen dynamite caps and an automatic revolver fully loaded. The outfit was found at the point where Robert Henderson, the McPherson murderer, left the track to take to the swamp on the day he was captured.

CHOIR LOSES TWO MEMBERS

Presentations to Miss Pearson and Miss Kirk at George St. Church

Two members of George street choir who are leaving the city in the near future were remembered in a tangible way last night. At the conclusion of choir practice presentations were made to Miss Carrie Reesor, who has been soloist for the past three years, and to Miss Ida Kirk, who has been a valued member of the choir. Miss Reesor, who is leaving for her home at Markham in the near future, was given a silvermounted manicure set, and Miss Kirk, who is leaving for Winnipeg shortly, was presented with a silver pudding dish. An address expressing the regret of the choir at the departure of Miss Reesor, was read by Miss Mainie Armstrong and an address of a similar nature to Miss Kirk was read by Miss Allison. The presentation to Miss Kirk was made by Mr. Cole and Miss Reesor's gift was presented by Mr. Miles.

Misses Reesor and Kirk expressed deep appreciation for the kind remembrances.

Short speeches were made by Mr. McCann, choirmaster, and Mr. S. R. Armstrong, chairman of the Musical Committee, in which reference was made to the efficient services of the two ladies who were leaving and the regret felt because they were leaving.

ST. ANDREW'S IRISH AT HOME BIG SUCCESS

The Irish At Home given by the ladies of St. Andrew's church, was a very successful affair. Supper was served from 6 to 8 o'clock, and a very large number took advantage of the pleasant evening to commemorate the day recognized all over the world in memory of one of the earliest of missionaries in Britain.

The programme was not a lengthy one and the numbers were all appropriate to the occasion. Among those taking part were Mrs. P. Kerr and Miss E. Tully, in instrumental selection. Mr. R. J. Winch, assisted with great generosity in both delightful and profitable recitations, Mrs. T. D. MacGregor contributed two vocal selections, which were very highly appreciated, while the evening's entertainment was brought to a close by an instrumental selection by Miss Potter.

The minister of the church presided and took the opportunity to express his great delight in being able to state why he admired the people of the Emerald Isle. Among other things he referred to their reverence for things sacred, and for the truth, for which they had been always ready to sacrifice life, if necessary. He saw in the Irish people the great qualities for succeeding in every department of life, and instanced a number of cases where men had speedily risen to the highest places of honor and service in all the various lines of human activity. This led him to believe that if the causes for the prejudices and fears that had for centuries existed between political and religious authorities could be removed, that it was not possible to express what the people of Ireland would do for the the great good of the Empire.

Mr. Potter gave the following quotation:

THE IRISHMAN.

The savage loves his native shore,
Though rude the soil and chill the air;
Then well may Erin's sons adore
Their isle, which nature formed so fair.
What flood reflects a shore so sweet,
As Shannon sweet or pastoral Bann?
Or who a friend for foe can meet
So generous as an Irishman?

His hand is rash, his heart is warm,
But honesty is still his guide;
None more repents a deed of harm,
And none forgives with nobler pride.
He may be duped, but won't be dared—
More fit to practice than to plan;
He dearly earns his poor reward,
And spends it like an Irishman.

If strange or poor, for you he'll pay
And guide you where you safe may be;
If you're his guest, while e'er you stay
His cottage holds a jubilee.
His inmost soul he will unlock,
And if he may your secrets scan,
Your confidence he scorns to mock,
For faithful is an Irishman.

By honor bound in woe or weal,
Whate'er she bids he dares to do;
Try him with bribes—they won't prevail;
Prove him in fire—you'll find him true.
He seeks not safety, let his post
Be where it ought—in danger's van;
And if the field of fame be lost,
It won't be by an Irishman!

—James Orr.

PETERBOROUGH MAN BEREAVED

Ottawa Journal.—One of the oldest residents of Nepean township passed away on Monday, March 7th, in the person of Mrs. William Gorman. Deceased, who was 75 years of age, was a native of Ireland, and came to Ottawa when but a child with her parents. In 1854 she married William Gorman, who predeceased her by some years. Eight children survive her, Messrs. Hugh, at home; Thomas, of Peterborough; James, a city recorder at Grand Forks, Minn.; Mrs. McCoy, of Carrington, N.D.; Mrs. Lamb, Olympia, Wash.; Mrs. Murphy, of Osas, Sask.; Mrs. Tierney, of Ottawa, and Miss Alice Gorman, residing at home. Fifteen grandchildren also survive. The funeral was largely attended, the remains being interred at Fallowfield cemetery.

A FORTUNE FOR AN IDEA

One million dollars—more money than any man can save in a lifetime working for salary or wages—awaits the inventor who can give to the world an appliance, no matter how simple, which will consume smelter smoke. Smoke consumers are used with success in many of the large cities of our country, but the smoke in such cases issues from ordinary heating plants burning coal or wood. Smelter smoke contains fumes and gases from the roasting ores and thus far the human mind has failed to find an influence that will combat the poisonous effect of the smoke which fills the atmosphere in the vicinity of every smelter.

This million dollar reward for the successful inventor is no fairy tale or pipe dream. The big smelting companies of the United States have spent many times that amount fighting damage claims or settling with damaged and disgruntled neighbors. A year ago the Guggenheim interests, which practically control the smelting trust, publicly offered $500,000 for a successful smoke consumer and the offer was duplicated, though unofficially, by the Amalgamated Copper Company, which runs some of the largest smelting plants in the world.

As an illustration of what a costly proposition this smoke business is, the Amalgamated Copper Company, or the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, which is a subsidiary concern, is still in the throes of a deadly struggle with a portion of the population of Montana over the question of smoke damage. True, the company drew first blood through a recent court decision, but the people have asked for a re-hearing of the case and in the event it is refused they threaten to appeal to the United States Supreme Court.

Recently an eight million dollar smelter was closed by the people of Utah on the grounds of smoke damage and the smelter owners everywhere await with anxiety the final outcome of the great Montana suit which will probably be accepted as a precedent.—From "A Million for a Smoke Eater," in April Technical World Magazine.

WORK ON CANAL STARTED AGAIN AT HASTINGS

Hastings, March 17.—The engineering staff of this section of the canal, who have been up to Harwood during the winter, making a survey of Rice Lake, returned to town on Monday, having completed their work as far as this end of the lake is concerned.

The dredge crew for the small dredge came down from Peterborough on Monday and commenced fitting her up for work. It commenced to look almost like spring being at hand when the smoke appeared coming out of the stack in the dredges, as though they were getting up steam again. The new tug will be ready for launching in a few days, when she will have the balance of her outfit on board, the engine being already installed.

The gravel teams are at work again during the cold snaps adding to the dump, but of course are not making the headway they did during the good sleighing.

At Brussels a court awarded a man $2,000 damages who was blinded in one eye by a hatpin worn by a woman.

AGENT IN GERMANY

Canada Will Send Representative Says Hon. Sydney Fisher in House.

Ottawa, March 19.—The most important event in a day spent in supply was Hon. Mr. Fisher's announcement that before long the recent trade agreement with Germany will be followed up by the establishment of a trade agent in Germany, probably in Hamburg.

It was J. E. Armstrong, who elicited this statement, when the Minister of Agriculture was putting through supplementary estimates, pertaining to the Trade and Commerce Department.

The Easter recess was fixed. The House adjourns on the 23rd and reassembles on the 30th. The motion put forward by the Government was that the House meet again on Easter Tuesday, but Sir Wilfrid Laurier acceded to the request for one extra day. Mr. Warburton of Prince Edward Island, and some western Conservative whose mouthpiece was Geo Taylor, protested that it meant so much longer time spent by western members, who remained in Ottawa, in absolute idleness.

W. F. Maclean asked if the Government would make any pronouncement before Easter on the tariff war.

Mr. Fielding replied that it would depend on the state of business at that particular time. At present, it would not be in the public interest to make any statements.

A project for a new cut-off canal to connect the St. Lawrence River with New York waters was alluded to by Mr. Pugsley. There is a vote for a survey of the deepening of the Richelieu canals, and the Minister of Public Works stated that it has been proposed to dig a canal from a point on the St. Lawrance opposite Montreal to the Richelieu River. This would save 100 miles and give a waterway from Montreal to New York rather shorter than the present rail routes.

"That would be a diversion of trade from other Canadian ports," opined E. A. Lancaster of Lincoln.

It appears that Mexico has dropped her subsidy of $25,000 to the Pacific steamship service between her ports and the British Columbia seaboard, and Canada has accordingly assumed and that amount extra. The Atlantic and Pacific Mexican subsidies are now costing Canada $125,000 a year. Report was made of a $35,000 subsidy for a St. John to Cuba line, given last November to the Wm. Thompson Co. of St. John.

It was a case of urgency, said the Government, when Hon. John Haggart complained that Parliament should have been consulted before entering upon the contract.

Major J. A. Currie asked if the West Indies would not help with some of the subsidies, and Mr. Fielding, in reply, talked hopefully of the work of the recent royal commission on trade between the West Indies and Canada.

While he was defending a vote of $235,000 for dredging in the current year in Thunder Bay, Hon. Mr. Pugsley made the statement that the G.T.P. has decided to erect at Port Arthur elevators to contain ten million bushels of grain. Ultimately these elevators will have a capacity of thirty million bushels.

At the Lumsden committee yesterday Mr. Lumsden, still under examination by R. C. Smith, K.C., pressed as to why he had not dismissed the engineers, Mr. Lumsden said the commission sided with them.

"And the Department of Justice and the lawyers agread with the commission?" suggested Mr. Smith.

"I do not think the Department of Justice did.

"To make a long story short, I have always regretted I did not resign in January, 1908, when the commission sided with the engineers, and before I made an amendment on the interpretation of classification."

REQUEST WILL BE CONSIDERED

Ottawa, March 19.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier was waited upon yesterday by a deputation named by the recent French-Canadian Congress of Ontario. The deputation, which was introduced by Senator Belcourt, presented the resolution adopted by the congress, which among other things called for representation of the French-Canadians of Ontario in the Senate and on the High Court bench.

Sir Wilfrid was asked to consider that although there are over 300,000 French-Canadians in Ontario there is no French-speaking judge on the High Court bench, and only one French-Canadian Senator. There should be at least one more French Senator and a representative of the race on the bench, it was argued.

The Premier said that there was much force in the arguments advanced, and the figures submitted. The matter would receive the serious consideration of the Government.

ELEVATOR WILL BE CONSTRUCTED

Rome, March 19.—An electric elevator, carrying ten persons, has been installed in the stairway leading to the cupola in St. Peter's. An appropriate Latin inscription, in which the elevator is termed "electricum anabathrum," is placed at the entrance. The lift will be solemnly blessed and inaugurated by Cardinal Rampolla next Saturday.

CONGRESS SAT THIRTY HOURS

Greatest Parliamentary Struggle in the History of Government at Washington.

Washington, March 19.—At twelve minutes before five o'clock last night the House of Representatives adjourned until noon to-day after thirty hours spent in one of the greatest Parliamentary struggles in its history. The result is a drawn battle. When the final roll call came, 164 Republicans voted to postpone further action on the Norris amendment, reorganizing the rules committee until to-day, and 150 Democrats and insurgent Republicans voted to continue. With the regular Republicans voted fourteen of the insurgents following of Norris of Nebraska, who left him and sided with the majority for a postponement. The result, they said, conveyed no significance and meant anything else than that they had deserted the insurgent cause.

The particular obstruction in the pathway of agreement between the regulars and the insurgents is the proposed elimination of the speaker. The regulars say the speaker having committed no wrong, should not be discredited. Some friends of the speaker contend that if the House overrules him to-day, he would "welcome" relief from the committee. The speaker himself is silent.

RUSSIAN GIRLS KILL THEMSELVES

New York, March 19.—A St. Petersburg cable says:

Something like an epidemic of suicide due to melancholia is accentuated here by the suicides of three girls of social status, one of them an heiress to $10,000,000.

The three met, and after one of them had played Chopin's funeral march, all drank poison and died. They left letters saying they were tired of life.

Fifteen other suicides, mostly girls, were reported during the day. The Russian law severely punishes attempted suicide, but a bill has been proposed by some members of the council of the empire, abolishing the penalties, on the ground that life is an individual's private property, and he should be allowed to dispose of it accordingly.

THE FREAK OF SUFFRAGETTES

London, March 19.—The freaks of the Suffragettes have hitherto caused more amusement than annoyance to the bulk of the Londoners, but more than a little indignation was excited yesterday when seven of them drove a hired fire engine at high speed through West-end streets at a busy hour. The women, wearing a parody on the firemen's uniform, managed the engine, which was decked with the Suffragette colors. The familiar note of the fire gong caused traffic to follow the custom of drawing aside to let the engine pass, and the cars of the police being equally deceived, the constables assisted in clearing the way until the fraud was discovered, and the career of the engine was stopped.

CHALLENGE FROM BERLIN TRIBUNE

Berlin, March 19.—For the first time in the history of the Reichstag a challenge to fight a duel has been issued from the tribune of the House. The challenger was Herr von Oldenberg, a prominent Conservative and former cavalry officer, who made himself notorious last January by advocating in the Reichstag the Kaiser's right to send a lieutenant and ten men to close the House.

Oldenberg denounced certain members who had attacked him as being devoid of anything approaching honor. He then went to the tribune in a white heat, and challenged four deputies, whom he named to fight him anywhere at any time.

COL. ROOSEVELT AT ABU HAMED

Abu Hamed, Soudan, March 19.—Col. Roosevelt and his party arrived here yesterday morning after a comfortable journey in a special car over the Soudan Government railway.

Most of the trip thus far from Khartoum, which was left at nine o'clock Thursday night, was made in the night, but the early hours of yesterday afforded a sight of considerable stretches of country. Col. Roosevelt expressed himself as astonished at the luxury of railway traveling through a desert and spoke of the railroad system as a monument to British enterprise in colonization which was able to conquer all difficulties.

NEW C.P.R. LINE ACROSS ROCKIES

Calgary, March 18.—It is reported that the C.P.R. has acquired the interests of the Alberta Central Railway, with the idea of getting an easier grade across the Rockies than the Kicking Horse Pass affords. It is said work on this new line will be commenced this spring. It will run eastward from the coast to Red Deer, and thence to Saskatoon.

TO TALK IT OVER

President Taft Asks for Conference With Hon. Mr. Fielding and Earl Grey to Discuss Tariff.

Albany, N.Y., March 19.—History both state and international, may be made here to-day and to-morrow, when Albany entertains the Governor-General of Canada and the President of the United States. The President comes on the invitation of personal friends and originally, it is believed his visit was intended to be purely social. Since he accepted the invitation several weeks ago, however, the Canadian tariff situation has become acute.

It was learned last night that Earl Grey accepted the request for the Albany University Club, to attend its dinner here to-night only after he was informed that the President desired to meet him here.

An announcement from Rochester that President Taft has invited Hon. W. S. Fielding, the Canadian Minister of Finance, to discuss the tariff dispute with him during his stay indicates the chief reason for the Governor-General's wish to be present at the same time.

President Taft first invited Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the Canadian Premier, to a conference, but the latter was unable to come. Henry M. Hoyt, counsellor of the State Department, and Charles M. Pepper, tariff expert of the Department of Commerce and Labor, will come on from Washington, to be present at the conference.

PRESIDENT TAFT,
Who Is Trying So Hard to Prevent a Tariff War.

Thus far, Canada has shown a disposition to stand pat that has all but put an end to any further negotiations. The President is making a last effort, however, to reach an agreement before allowing the maximum duties of the Payne-Aldrich law to go into effect against imports from Canada.

If the maximum rates are invoked, it will mean that imports from Canada will have to pay 25 per cent. more than imports from other countries, that have not been "unduly discriminatory" against the United States.

The dispute with Canada grows out of the fact that Canada negotiated a treaty with France whereby that country was given a reduction of from 2 1-2 to 5 per cent. over other countries. Through Great Britain' favored nation treaties, however, this preferential treatment given by Canada to France was automatically extended to thirteen other countries. This, in effect, left the United States as the principal country affected by the higher rates.

President Taft announced last night that a complete agreement had been reached with France on all tariff differences and that at Albany to-night he would sign a proclamation giving to France the 25 per cent. reduction of rates provided for in the Payne-Aldrich tariff law.

The President will be met on his arrival at 2.30 by Governor Hughes and Mayor McEwan and representatives of the University Club, and go with them under escort to the executive mansion. Earl Grey is not due here until two hours later, and, since Governor Hughes will be with the President at that time, the Governor-General will be welcomed on behalf of the state by Adjutant-General Henry, the governor's chief of staff, and a committee from the University Club, which will include Speaker Wadsworth of the Assembly. Local military companies will escort Earl Grey to the Hotel Ten Eyck.

Sunday morning the President will attend church with Governor Hughes, and in the afternoon the governor will give an informal luncheon at the executive mansion. Among the guests will be the President and Earl Grey, Hon. W. S. Fielding, President Nichols of Dartmouth College, Bishop Doane and Bishop Burke, the Episcopal and Catholic prelates, respectively of Albany, and former Governor David R. Francis of Missouri.

Brockville has adopted a by-law to build six bridges at a cost of $16,000.

Jos. Smith and John W. Wiley, two old citizens of St. Catharines, are dead.

BEST GETS FREEDOM

Death of Wife Looks Like Suicide—He Leaves His Job.

Windsor, March 19.—That Mrs. Arthus Best, the bride of a month, had threatened to do away with herself on several occasions is the statement of Martha Frankfurth, her cousin, who lives in Comber. She declares that Alice was disappointed in love at least four times.

"Alice said to me several times she had better be dead than alive," said Martha, yesterday afternoon. "The more I think of the situation, I am firmly convinced that Alice, in a fit of despondency, threw herself in the river. Her husband, Arthur, certainly did not treat her as a husband should."

Comber has turned against young Best, who arrived there early yesterday morning, after his release by the Detroit police, and was treated coolly on all sides. He has also lost his position as a tinsmith during his absence, the hardware store where he worked was sold and the new proprietor will not hire him. Comber does not think the young man guilty of serious crime, but censures him for posing as a bachelor. The mother of Alice Frankfurth is seriously ill. She is 60 years old, and the disappearance of her daughter, imparted to her yesterday, may result fatally. Elinore Frankfurth, a daughter, a school teacher near Essex, and her brothers in Detroit were notified, and are now at the bedside.

LATE TICKS FROM WIRES

Valentine and Martin's shoe factory at Waterloo was gutted by fire. Loss $30,000.

An agent of the American Bible Society was assaulted in Venezuela and his Bibles destroyed.

The Canadian Northern Railway will build a new city on the Fraser River, near New Westminster.

Five hundred houses were destroyed by fire in Yokohama, Japan, yesterday. Seven lives were lost.

Every train from the south arriving in Winnipeg is crowded with Americas landseekers and homesteaders.

Several more arrests have been made at Rainy River and vicinity in connection with the wolf bounty frauds.

Dr. James D. Hilfis, city health officer of Lafayette, Ind., while standing in a theatre had his left eye torn out by a hatpin yesterday.

The February bank statement shows an exceptional gain in commercial loans but a falling off in market loans both in Canada and abroad.

An attempt to recover the blue Hope diamond from the wreck of the French steamer La Seyne, which went down near Singapore last year, has ended in failure.

WILL DRAW LOTS TO FIGHT DUEL

St. Petersburg, March 19.—As an outcome of a scene in the Duma, when Vladimir Purishkovich, vice-president of the Union of True Russians, made coarse accusations against one of the girl members of the student's council of St. Petersburg University, the students' council has decided to challenge Purishovich to a duel and draw lots who shall fight him.

On account of the criticism of his failure to quiet the disorder in the Duma, M. Khomyakoff has resigned the presidency of the Duma.

HUGH KIPPEN GETS A MEDAL

Cornwall, Ont., March 19.—At the production of the drama, "Ireland As It Is," by local amateurs, under the auspices of the St. Patrick's Society of Cornwall, Thursday night, the Royal Humane Society's medal, awarded to Hugh Kippen, lacrosse player and pianist, Cornwall, was presented by Dr. Maloney, mayor, and Dr. Munroe, ex-mayor.

Last fall Kippen jumped in front of an express train and snatched from death Miss McIntosh, who had fallen from the platform across the rails in front of the train. Only Kippen's quickness and prompt action averted a double tragedy.

TWO PERISH IN FIRE AT COBALT

Cobalt, March 19.—Wm. Cope, aged 35, and his wife Edith, aged 28, were burned to death in their three-roomed shack about 11.30 o'clock Thursday night. It is surmised that Cope, who had been drinking, upset a lamp in the front room, and that, finding their exit cut off in that direction, Mrs. Cope attempted to drag her husband, who was in a drunken stupor, out by the kitchen door, only to be overcome by the flames.

Mrs. Cope came from Toronto, where her relatives still reside, while Cope hailed from Clarendon, Ont. He was a prospector. They were married about two years ago.

ABOUT MIXED MARRIAGES

Discussion at Grand Orange Lodge Convention at Ottawa.

Ottawa, March 19.—Mixed marriages and the alleged interference of Roman Catholic priests was the exceedingly interesting subject discussed by the 300 members of the Orange Grand Lodge of Ontario East, which was in session until two o'clock yesterday morning. There was a long discussion and some heated remarks regarding this.

A prominent member of the order said to the reporters:

"There have been several cases throughout the province where, when a Protestant is married to a Catholic priests have interfered, and in some instances as good as said that the couple were living in open adultery, because they had not been married according to the rites of the Roman Catholic Church. Protestant clergy do not interfere in any such way. Both the Orangemen of Ontario East and Ontario West agreed that this has got to stop. Lately, according to the press reports, a Canadian Roman Catholic Bishop went so far as to annul a marriage."

FIREBUGS CAUSE $200,000 DAMAGE

Huntingdon, Pa., March 19.—Incendiarism ran wild in this city early yesterday. At 1.30 o'clock fires were started almost simultaneously in every section of the town. The local fire department got help from Lewiston and Tyrone. Losses are estimated at $200,000.

Mrs. James Miller, a widow, whose residence was destroyed, died as she was being removed from her invalid bed.

Abe Reed and John Earl are being held on suspicion.

WINTER WHEAT IS EXCELLENT

Calgary, Alta., March 18.—Winter wheat is looking excellent and all are looking forward to a bumper crop. Spring wheat prospects could not be better, as there is already so much land sown or ready for sowing.

Such seems to express the opinion of farmers in this district. From all points come reports that preparations for seeding are being rushed. Incoming Americans are enthusiastic regarding the outlook for next crop.

Owing to building operations being carried on throughout the entire winter in Calgary, a brick famine is predicted for this summer.

MAGISTRATE AS PRECEDENT

Ottawa, March 18.—An interesting case in the local Polish colony was decided in the Police Court Thursday when a charge of opening a postal letter addressed to one of the Poles, against a woman of the same nationality was dismissed.

The defence made on that a letter, once it had been delivered by the postman, ceased to be a postal letter. In this opinion they quoted Magistrate Denison of Toronto. The Toronto magistrate wrote his opinion of the point and it was upheld by Mr. Askwith.

HALF A MILLION FOR A PAINTING

New York, March 19.—One-half million dollars, a record high price for a painting, was paid yesterday for the celebrated portrait of Franz Hals, the Dutch painter, and his family, painted by himself. The purchaser was Otto Kahn, the banker, who secured the portrait from the Duveen Brothers. J. P. Morgan bid between $350,000 and $400,000 for the picture.

Seeding In Saskatchewan.

Regina, Sask., March 19.—The Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Motherwell, stated yesterday that his department had received reports of seeding from such widely separated points as Swift Current, Battleford, Humboldt and Indian Head. The weather is beating all records for mildness.

COBALT LAKE WINS OUT

London, March 19.—The Privy Council has dismissed the appeal of the Florence Mining Co. against the Court of Appeal decision in the famous case of the Florence Mining Co. against the Cobalt Lake Mining Co. The latter, therefore, wins, and the jurisdiction of the Legislature in conferring a clear title to Cobalt Lake is upheld.

Favor Public Abbatoir.

Winnipeg, March 19.—A meeting of stock breeders and live stock shippers was held Thursday to discuss the meat trust in western Canada.

They will urge that a public abbatoir be inaugurated at once either in Winnipeg or St. Boniface, the Provincial Government having voted $150,000 towards the scheme.

ADVERTISE IN THE REVIEW.

IS COSTLY VENTURE

Estimates Exorbitant for Alberta's New Railway—Rutherford Surrenders.

Edmonton, Alta., March 19.—The Government yesterday made a final and complete surrender by granting the insurgents what they were preparing to demand—the adjournment of the House until the royal commission has completed their enquiry into the Great Waterways Railway deal.

When the Legislature adjourned, it stood adjourned until Thursday, May 26, when it will again be called upon to hear the report of the commission.

Premier Rutherford made the statement that no money would be paid to the railway company on their guarantee until the investigation was over. It was also promised by the Premier that no portion of the route, to a further extent than Battenburg, 23 miles from Edmonton, would be approved by the Government until the investigation finished.

Smith of Camrose demanded that something be done in order that the Government might have a check on all expenditures on the road. He made charges that exorbitant salaries were being paid to officials of the company. He understood Consulting Engineer Dr. Waddell was paid $25,000, while the chief engineer of the Grand Trunk Pacific only got $10,000. Also, the general manager was getting $50,000 a year.

Holding in his hand Waddell's estimate of the cost of the road, he quoted estimates of $12 an acre for right-of-way. This was exorbitant, for the country through which the road was passing, as most of the land was, Dominion Government land, and therefore would cost nothing. He quoted $1 a yard for loose rock and $2.40 for solid rock work. He compared this with the G.T.P. figures at Wolf Creek, a much harder country, which were only 15 cents for loose rock and $1.25 for solid rock.

INTERNATIONAL BANK SWINDLE

New York, March 19.—Charles M. Meeker and Albert Thompson, the former of Brooklyn, and the latter of South Orange, N.J., are under arrest here charged with a new international swindle. The police say Thompson deposited in the People's Bank of South Orange a draft for 107 pounds sterling, drawn to Meeker's order on The London Commercial Banking Co. The draft was good, it was found by cable inquiries, but it is alleged that after payment on it had been advanced, Meeker cable to London ordering payment stopped. The bank is therefore out the amount of the advance—approximately $535.

SETTLEMENT IS HOPED FOR AT PHILADELPHIA

Philadelphia, March 19.—Although Thursday's many conferences were apparently fruitless, all hope of an early settlement of the street car strike has not been abandoned. The principal hitch in bringing the Philadelphia Rapid Transit directors and the men together is over the question of reinstating all the strikers, including the 175 men who were dismissed before the strike was declared. If an agreement can be reached on this question, it is believed the union will instruct all its men to return and then appoint committees to take up grievances with the company.

TO WED DAUGHTER OF DEPOSED SULTAN

Vienna, March 18.—It is reported that the coming visit of King Peter of Servia to Constantinople is for the purpose of arranging a marriage between his younger son, the Crown Prince, and Princess Chadie, fourth daughter of the deposed Sultan Abdul Hamid. If such a marriage should be arranged it would be the first occasion in centuries of a Mohammedan princess marrying a non-Mohammedan.

Southern Frost Too Severe for Peary.

New York, March 19.—Commander Robert E. Peary has cut short his lecture tour in the south, due to the refusal of Governor Brown of Georgia to introduce him to an Atlanta audience, his reference to the commander in an interview as a "fakir," and the small crowd that attended the lecture.

Concluding Arguments.

Washington, D.C., March 19.—The concluding arguments in the corporation tax cases are being made to-day before the Supreme Court of the United States. As most of yesterday was consumed in an attack on the law, most of the time to-day will be devoted to a defence of it.

Fifty Fishermen Lost.

St. Petersburg, March 19.—Fifty fishermen who went adrift upon an ice floe which broke away from the shore near Peterhof on the south shore of the Gulf of Finland, are believed to have perished, as search for them has been futile.

CLAY WAS CLASSED AS ROCK

It is now admitted by the Liberals that clay was classed as rock all along the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. But they explain that it was hard clay that could be blasted. The explanation is not satisfactory. That the original intention was not to classify hard clay as solid rock is evident from the estimates of cost that were made by the Government engineers. The contracts did not say "hard clay," but "solid rock," and anyone can see how easily fraud may creep in when clay can be classified as rock.

If everything is right why is it that the Liberals are so anxious to prevent a thorough investigation? Even the restricted Lumsden investigation has forced them to admit that hard clay was commonly classified as rock. What would they have to admit if a really thorough investigation were held?

HOME TRADE AND FOREIGN TRADE

Liberal newspapers may boast of the fact that Canada's foreign trade for the last eleven months has amounted to over six hundred million dollars, but a great part of it was made up of importations of goods that could have been made just as well in Canadian factories or grown on Canadian farms. Foreign trade is not beneficial when it cripples home trade, for, as Adam Smith, the famous British political economist, said: "Though the returns of foreign trade should be as quick as those of the home trade, the capital employed in it will give but one-half the encouragement to the industry or productive labor of the country."

We imported from the United States over $180,000,000 worth of goods during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1909. A portion of this amount was for raw materials, and other things that we could not produce in Canada, but the greater part of the imports were unnecessary as they could have been produced equally well in Canada.

THE HOUSE OF LORDS

Lord Ourson's claim that the colonies desire the maintenance of the hereditary principle in the British Upper House has no foundation to rest upon. The people of the colonies are quite content to allow the British people to settle that question for themselves. Undoubtedly there are a large number of men of great ability in the British House of Lords who do good service to the United Kingdom and the Empire at large, but there are also some lords who do no honor to the House to which they belong by hereditary right. Whether the abolition of the hereditary system would drive the best men out of politics is doubtful. It is probable that many of these men would offer themselves for elections, and as they are held in high esteem by the people in general their chances of success would be good.

It has been suggested that the colonies should have representation in the House of Lords. Canada certainly does not want representation, and we do not think any of the other colonies do. Undoubtedly the colonies should be consulted regarding matters that concern the Empire as a whole, but the best plan of consultation is through correspondence and conferences between the Governments of the different self-governing countries of the Empire. This is the plan that is being followed there and more as the colonies develop, but we cannot expect to be fully consulted until we do our fair share in providing for the naval defence of the Empire.

A Discovery of Vast Importance

It Is Now Admitted That Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrh, Coughs, and Colds Can Only Be Quickly Cured By Mixing a New Medicine With the Air You Breathe.

Scientists acknowledge that medicated air treatment is the only treatment that will cure these diseases, and that stomach medicines are worse than useless.

Catarrhozone air treatment has been found to be the most effective way to cure all diseases of the throat, lungs, and nasal passages. Its action is so prompt that in less than an hour an ordinary cold is cured, and after a more thorough use of Catarrhozone, Bronchitis, Catarrh, and all diseases of the throat and lungs are completely cured.

Catarrhozone is a very simple and powerful method of treatment. You simply breathe it through the inhaler and it immediately passes over every air cell of the throat, lungs, and bronchial tubes, curing and healing as it goes.

Catarrhozone treatment affords little drops of healing for sore places in the lungs, throat, and nasal passages.

A GAME OF PRETEND AT OTTAWA

We all remember the golden age of childhood, when we used to play the game of pretend. How easy it was then to do away with obstacles. We had only to pretend they were not there. When we looked at the common clay with ordinary eyes it was rather too dark in color to be considered good flour, but we said, "Let us pretend that it is white and, lo, it was white. When water was mixed with it Mary said,

"This is dough,"

"Why it isn't dough; it's mud," said wee Annie, who did not know any better.

"It is dough, Annie," we cried. "We are pretending, you know."

How quickly the dear little girl grasped the meaning of the word "pretending" and joined in the game as enthusiastically as the others. And when the pies were baked could anything in after life be so delicious as the taste of them in our imagination when Mary said, "Let us pretend to eat them."

Was it Jack or Charlie who called us away from this feast by saying, "Let us pretend to be miners!"

Whoever it was who used these magic words we all became miners at once. What a hunt we made for spades and shovels, even wee Annie getting a tiny one, and how good it was of us to wait quietly while Fred ran to borrow a neighbor's spade. And then when we boys had made quite a deep hole, taking turns in digging, because the clay was very hard, Jack said to Annie.

"This looks like clay, Annie, but it is really rock because we are pretending. Take a little in your shovel and see if there is any gold in it."

But do you remember how we were interrupted at this moment by mother, who arriving unobserved upon the scene of action cried;

"You naughty, naughty children. Why, Mary, your dress was perfectly clean an hour ago, and now look at it! You are old enough to know better."

But wee Annie said with voice of rapture, her face glowing with pleasure, "Mother, we are pretending," and mother caught her in her arms, kissed her and forgot to be angry with the rest of us.

Those dear old days have gone forever for most of us, but the Liberal Government at Ottawa, the National Transcontinental Railway Construction Commission, the favored Liberals who are so fortunate as to be contractors, the Liberal members of the Lumsden Investigation Committee, the Liberal lawyers who have been engaged both to prosecute and defend the commissioners, and the editors of Liberal newspapers throughout the country are still playing the fascinating game.

This is the secret of the transformation of clay into rock all along the line of the Government section of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway.

As the Government agreed to pay the contractors about six times as much for rock excavation as for clay excavation the game is rather interesting.

Unfortunately for Canada the gold that goes into the pockets of the contractors is not as imaginary as the rocks are. It comes out of the Public Treasury, and the Canadian people would like to know how much of it eventually finds its way into the Liberal election campaign fund.

But when electors ask for explanations the Government offers them mud pie.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The Liberals have got so dirty making mud pies at Ottawa that the people will soon have to call them home, put them to bed and let them rest while their clothes are being washed.

"Do you approve of the offer the Canadian General Electric has made to the City Council?" said one citizen to another. "Why, what is the offer?" was the reply. Oh, I don't know," said the first citizen, "but I think it is time the people of this city did know what is going on."

When you find it hard to swallow a Liberal politician's explanation of why hard clay has been commonly classed as solid rock in paying Liberal contractors along the Government section of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, tell him that your appetite for mud pies is not quite so keen as it used to be.

A Grateful Mother

Tells of Her Daughter's Recovery.

A mother will always be worried and anxious if one of her daughters should be affected; that from any cause the natural functions of the body become retarded or suppressed. Any irregularity, especially in a growing girl, is apt to be the forerunner of a long chain of sickness, not unfrequently followed by pernicious anaemia or consumption.

"My daughter had just passed her sixteenth year when, owing to an exposure at an inopportune time, an important action of the system ceased" So writes Mrs. Thomas E. St. Nicholas, of Manchester South. "Stella was subject to violent nose bleed—was hysterical and borne down by fits of mental depression. She grew listless and debilitated, and her progress at school was prevented by frequent small ailments which kept her at home. After using Ferrozone six or seven weeks, some signs of improvement came, but not sufficient to show that she would grow natural again. It was fully three months after she had been using Ferrozone before my worry was over. After that her system became natural and regular. I cheerfully recommend Ferrozone for all troubles incident to girlhood and womanhood."

Ferrozone Builds Up Weak Girls

Ferrozone is a womanly tonic that supplies to the blood and nerves the qualities that are lacking when health is poor. No medicine is so nourishing—so full of life and vigor-making properties. Try one or two Ferrozone Tablets with your meals—watch the result. Fifty cents a box, six for $2.50, all dealers, or The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Canada.

TWO PHOTOS OF HIGH QUALITY

At the exhibit at Jamestown, O., under the auspices of the Jamestown Camera Club, only one hundred and fifty photographs were selected to be hung on exhibit out of between six and seven hundred, which were shown. Mr. N. A. Howard Moore, of Peterborough, sent four photos to the exhibit. Two of these were copies and were chosen for exhibit, which is a distinct tribute to the ability and taste of Mr. Moore as a photographer.

The pictures selected were "The Old Birch Tree," taken at Jackson Park, and "The Stream," a view on Mead's Creek, which empties into Little Lake opposite the cemetery. The picture is taken at a picturesque point in the stream near the old Cobourg railway bridge.

The Giant's Strength

...By...
BASIL KING,
Author of "Let Not Man Put Asunder," "The Steps of Honor," Etc.

Copyright, 1908, by Harper & Brothers.

"Nothing is illegal till it's proved so. He only made use of the rebates until it was shown that he couldn't. It was a matter of public benefit to have the question fought out and settled. So while the New Hampshire Central refused the Winships the same rates of transportation as they had given to the Vermont Mining company the Devlin took the matter into court. Of course your father stood behind the railroad, and the case was argued in the court of common pleas. The railroad lost, just as he thought it would, but see what a general he is! He had the whole campaign mapped out. The railroad appealed to the district court, your father in the meantime having the use of his rebates. The railroad lost again. Then it appealed to the supreme court of the state. Still the rebates went on, while at the same time your father was cutting off from the Devlin every ton of business. Before the case was heard at Concord old Roger Winship died from a stroke of apoplexy."

"Brought on," Mrs. Trafford explained, "purely by bad temper and his refusal to accept your father's offer. Now, tell her, George, of your uncle's magnanimity."

"It was just this," said Trafford—"just what you would have expected him to do. He went to Mrs. Winship personally and renewed the offer he had made two years before. In the meantime, please take notice, the Devlin's business had gone from bad to worse, and yet he actually renewed that offer as it stood."

Trafford leaned back, his thumbs thrust into the armholes of his evening waistcoat, and watched the effect of this information upon Paula. The girl could only gaze at him with the same troubled expression of inquiry, waiting for him to go on.

"But Mrs. Winship," he continued, "had as little mind for compromise as her husband. The railroad having already lost twice, she was persuaded it would lose again. Once there were no more rebates, she was sure the Devlin would do its old work again. Well, the railroad lost the third time and appealed to the supreme court of the United States. For the poor lady that was a staggerer, just as your father supposed it would be. Still she had the pluck—or the folly, whichever you choose to call it—to struggle on. The case went before the supreme court of the United States, and the railroad lost again. Mrs. Winship was victorious, but—and this is what your father had foreseen during the whole six years the fight had lasted—the Devlin Coal company was already in the hands of a receiver, and legal expenses had eaten up all the Winships' private means."

"We took over the Devlin mines the next year," Mrs. Trafford concluded. "The Winships had mismanaged them terribly. Once they were thoroughly worked, they became the most paying of all our properties."

There was a long silence, broken only when young Mrs. Trafford reminded her husband that it was time to say good night.

"Did any more of our money come like that?" Paula asked suddenly.

"Like what?" Trafford demanded.

"Like what, Paula?" came from Mrs. Trafford herself, with a suggestion of protest in her tone.

"Like that," the girl said confusedly—"like money we got from the Winships."

"We got nothing from the Winships," Trafford declared. "We haven't a dollar that we didn't get in business."

"Was it honorable business?"

The question slipped out unawares. Trafford strode toward her. He stood looking down at her, his hands in the pockets of his evening jacket, his feet planted apart and his eyes shooting out their steely rays.

"Look here, Paula," he said in a tone of rough kindliness, "you have for a father one of the greatest men God ever raised up—a man with a big mind, a big heart, a big nature; a man who out of nothing has created one of the first positions in the world; a man who has not only transformed the business of the country, but given new conceptions of business to the whole earth. Now, such a man as that is bound to have enemies, and he has them. All his life long he has been persecuted, vilified and traduced. He has gone from court to court and from one committee of investigation to another. What has been his crime? He has made money—he has made a lot of money. To people who've tried to make money and haven't made it that's crime enough to warrant any kind of hounding down. But take the people who haven't tried to make money; take the people whose ambitions are elsewhere and whose minds are impartial. Is there any one among them who isn't proud to take your father by the hand and accept what he has to give? There are charitable schemes all over the country that owe their chief support to your father. Is there a doubtful note on the part of any person or any corporation, civil or ecclesiastical, that has received his benefactions? None. Mind you, I'm quoting to you not the common standard of the world, but the standard of men devoted to the religious, moral or educational welfare of their fellows. The man who impeaches your father today must practically impeach all the religious, philanthropic and educational opinion in the United States. Don't you begin to do it."

He was looking down at her, smiling in kindly admonition. Young Mrs. Trafford came up and slipped her arm through his, smiling down at her too. The mother joined them, with an affectionate injunction to dismiss all foolish and fatiguing thoughts and go to bed.

The girl made no reply to any of them. She smiled rather wistfully in response to their good-night wishes and told them she would put out the lights. Then she sat still, alone and pondering, trying to sift and co-ordinate the mass of information she had just received.

"The Winship money," she half muttered to herself.

It was late when she rose to go away. On the table beside her lay the five gold pieces she had brought home an hour or two ago. "The Winship money," she half muttered to herself. "What father did to his father I seem to have done to him."

To be Continued.

THE CAVAN GHOST HAS VANISHED

The Johnson Family Much Annoyed by Stories That Have Been Published.

Fred Johnston and Charles Johnston, of Cavan township, were in Peterborough yesterday. They are much annoyed about the ghost story that has received such wide publication, and say that about three-fourths of the story that has been published in the newspapers is pure fiction. It is true, they say, that Miss Pigott did get frightened while milking, and that she ran to the house saying she had seen a white-clothed figure with a smiling face, but the Cavan boys declare that they did not say it was a ghost. It is true, also, that on two following occasions three of the Cavan boys saw a strange appearance in the same stable. On the first occasion it appeared like the figure of a man without a head, covered with something white. On the next occasion they saw what seemed to be a man, his face being unknown to them.

They spoke to him, asking what he wanted, and thought they heard a few disconnected words. Then the man disappeared. They say the light was dim, that they might easily have been deceived, and are not at all sure that there was anything supernatural about it. They think it might have been a joke put up by someone.

A Case of Non-Support

A case of non-support occupied the attention of Magistrate Dumble at the Police Court yesterday afternoon, but a compromise was affected between the defendant and his wife and no action was taken by the court.

At Brussels a court awarded a man $2,000 damages who was blinded in one eye by a hatpin worn by a woman.

DO YOU USE PILLS?

If In Doubt About the Right Pills to Use Read the Following Letter Carefully:

"I am one of those persons whose system requires aid," writes Mr. Young Gledhill, from Picton, "but it is so easily affected by reason of the great sensitiveness of the bowels that ordinary drastic pills inflict great injury to the delicate coating; and excite such persistent activity as to be with difficulty checked.

"I wish in the highest terms to express the great value of Dr. Hamilton's Pills in cases like mine, and I am sure also for elderly people and the very weak there is no pill like them.

"Speaking of my own experience with Dr. Hamilton's Pills, I can say they have proved the most stimulating pills for the liver I have found. I have proved their tonic action upon digestion, and the same results have been secured by friends upon whom I have urged their use. The manufacturers are to be congratulated upon possessing so valuable a prescription, and the public should know that so valuable a remedy has been placed at their command."

No other pill for constipation, the liver, kidney, or stomach trouble, compares with Dr. Hamilton's Pills; they are mild and sure always to restore health. Refuse substitutes. Sold by all dealers, 25c per box, or The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston Ont.

A Family Medicine

Fashions and Fads

The wide Gibson plait continues to give the broad shoulder effect in the shirtwaists of the tailor kind.

Large bows of filmy net and lace, wired into shape, are being worn as ornaments with the flat coiffure.

Puffings and tiny shirrings are to be used as trimmings on some of the spring gowns with filmy laces and gauzes.

Self-colored dots of various sizes will be seen on some of the handsome woolen dress fabrics of this spring.

Cuban heels, quite high, seem to predominate among shoes, and there are also many military heels, quite as high.

Shoes are a bit less pointed, and the new vamps are very short, the effect being to make the foot look rather shorter.

Colored correspondence stationery is once more in vogue. The delicate grays are dove and pearl shades are exquisite.

Loose weaves and heavy threads are characteristic notes of many of the popular materials for walking suits.

Many of the new Swiss muslins have most unusual figures in place of the dots to which we have been accustomed.

The vogue of Dutch silver now includes bullet-shaped buttons that are among the smartest trimmings on blouses.

A new and lustrous weave of cashmere that closely resembles crepe de chine is expected to be a leader in the summer styles.

Because most of the lingerie gowns will be collarless and with short sleeves, comfort will be characteristic of summer wear.

Linen crash for suits has never been cheaper than at present. It comes a yard wide, and is to be had in innumerable shades.

Marquisette will be as popular as ever this summer. It may be had plain as well as figured, and in all shades and colors.

It is predicted that the lingerie gown will be more popular than ever this summer. Also, that it will be more elaborate than in the past.

Patent leather slippers are always suitable to go with anything, and may be varied by different colored hose with different frocks.

The return of the blouse and separate skirt restore the sash and belt to favor, and they are found in attractive styles in leather and silk.

The predictions are for a white summer for children. However, colored sashes and colored hair ribbons will be worn with the little white dresses.

The yoke is seen on many of the new wash skirts. It fits snuggly over the hips, while the lower part is box-pleated and consequently quite full.

What Dodd's Kidney Pills Did for Hiram Brown.

Cured His Aches and Pains and Gave Him Restful Slumber—Known as the Old Folks Friend.

East Mapleton, Cumberland Co., N. S., March 18.—(Special).—Though well past the allotted span of life, Mr. Hiram Brown of this place is still one of the grandest sights in life, a hale and hearty old gentleman. And like many another Canadian veteran he gives Dodd's Kidney Pills the credit for his abundant health.

"I am seventy-five years of age," Mr. Brown said, in an interview, "and I want to say that Dodd's Kidney Pills cured me of Gravel and Kidney Trouble. I was troubled with Backache, Headache and Dizziness, Cramps in the Muscles and Stiffness of the Joints. My sleep was broken and at times my limbs would swell.

"But since taking Dodd's Kidney Pills all these troubles have gone. I consider Dodd's Kidney Pills a wonderful medicine."

The aged man or woman who has healthy Kidneys can afford to laugh at the ills of life. For healthy Kidneys keep the blood pure and ensure good restful sleep. Dodd's Kidney Pills always make healthy Kidneys. That is why they are known as the Old Folks' Best Friend.

NO DOGS TO BE SHIPPED IN

Railway Officials Taking Precautions to Prevent Spread of Rabies

The G.T.R. officials here have received notice that they are to receive no dogs shipped from points west of the eastern boundary o IYork, and Simcoe counties, and no dogs are to be received for shipment to points west of these districts, with the understanding that they may be brought back. This precaution is taken, owing to the fact of rabies being prevalent, in the western part of the province, and it is hoped by this precaution to prevent its further spread.

57TH BANDSMEN TAKE AWAY INSTRUMENTS FROM ARMORIES

Climax Reached in Altercation Between the Band and Regiment--Commanding Officer Ordered Removal of Instruments—Regiment May Be Bandless.

The climax of the disagreement between the 57th Band and the Regiment was reached to-day, when all the instruments were taken from the armories in accordance with an order to that effect by Lieut.-Col. Stevenson. As is generally known, the trouble commenced when the officers of the Regiment requested that all the instruments of the band be handed over as regimental property. The bandsmen, as a unit, objected to this on the ground that the money for the purchase of the instruments had been raised independent of the regiment. The officers were firm in their stand, however, with the result that the affair culminated in the commanding officer's order referred to above.

From all present indications Mr. Gliddon's musicians will be disbanded, as far as the regiment is concerned, and a new band organized, or else make the Bugle Band suffice. It is the intention of the present band to continue as a city band, unless an arrangement can be effected.

The special committee appointed by the band, and consisting of Adjutant Walker, Capt. Miles and Capt. Chaston, will confer with the band this evening regarding the matter.

YOUNG GIRLS ATTRACTED BY LURE OF MOVING PICTURE STAGE

Two well-dressed and respectable young girls, each fifteen years of age, found themselves in trouble at the police court this morning. They arrived in the city from Omemee last night on the nine o'clock train, after having walked to that station from Lindsay, where they reside, and belong to respectable families. Visions of a bright future with a moving picture show have appealed to the youthful travellers, and this, it is stated, accounts for their presence in this city, they having received word that a man would meet them at the C.P.R. station and take them to Montreal, where they would be given an engagement with a show. The young girls found sleeping accommodation behind the curling rink last night, and early this morning went to the Peterborough Quick Lunch in search of something to eat. There they met two young fellows and they claim that the the girls asked them for assistance. All four left the Quick Lunch and, not deeming it advisable to be seen on the streets at so early an hour, went to an old building on Simcoe street to await for a later hour to arrive, when they might return to the streets. P. C. Adams received a call between eight and nine o'clock, informing him of the state of affairs existing at the building, and he answered the call. All four were taken to the police station.

A sister of one of the girls was present, having come from her home in search of the runaways, and she stated that since their last adventure, when they went to Buffalo, there had been no trouble. She blamed the letters received by the girls from young men, as being the cause of their conduct.

The magistrate, after giving the two girls a lecture, interspersed with some kindly advice, consented to their being allowed to return to their homes, but ordered that they be detained till train time. The young men were discharged.

NEW DOG BY-LAW WAS SUBMITTED BY ALD. TURNER

It Received a Howling Reception—Two Clauses Not Favored by Two of the Committee, But the By-law Will be Laid Before the City Solicitor and Committee of Whole Council—Dr. McNulty Says Muzzling is an Extreme Measure.

A new dog by-law was submitted to the Legal Committee by Ald. Turner last night, and it was decided to place it before the city solicitor, but not however, before two of its clauses had been attacked by Ald. Buller. Ald. Turner's idea is to have the other by-laws, which are three in number, rescinded, and in their place have one which will meet all requirements, and particularly so at the present time.

Before the committee settled down to business, Dr. McNulty, who had been invited to be present to give his opinion of the dog scare, was heard.

Dr. McNulty said that he was opposed to the muzzling of dogs. It was an extreme measure. The epidemic of rabies in the west had not reached the east, and it was a question whether the epidemic was true rabies or not. All the cases sent to New York for treatment had recovered. He was of the opinion, however, that a certain class of dogs running at large should have a higher tax placed upon them, and others kept out of the city and tied up. Dr. McNulty considered that if these steps were taken the present trouble would abate.

THE NEW BY-LAW.

Ald. J. J. Turner submitted the following by-law for the council's consideration.

A by-law for restraining and regulating the running at large of animals in the city of Peterborough.

Whereas by section 492 of the Consolidated Municipal Act, 1903, the council of every city is authorized to pass by-laws for the restraining and running at large of any animals and it is desirable to pass a by-law for the purpose aforesaid in the City of Peterborough.

The Corporation of the City of Peterborough by the council thereof enact as follows:—

Clause 1—No person shall suffer or permit any animal to run at large or trespass upon the property of any other person or body corporate in the city of Peterborough.

Clause 2—Any person violating the provisions of this by-law shall, on conviction thereof, be subject to a fine not less than one dollar and not exceeding fifty dollars and costs, to be levied in case of default of payment by distress and sale of the offenders' goods, and in case of non-payment of the fine inflicted and there being no distress out of which such fine can be levied, the offender shall be liable to imprisonment with or without hard labor in the County jail in the County of Peterborough, for any period not exceeding twenty-one days.

Clause 3—This by-law shall not affect or diminish the right to impound animals running at large or trespassing under any by-law of the said corporation nor any other law in force giving a right to obtain compensation for any damage done by animals running at large and doing damage or trespassing on or to the property of any other person.

Clause 4—This by-law shall not apply to dogs accompanying the owners on the public streets when under control by use of leash for the proper control and restraint of any dog or bitch, provided such dog or bitch shall have and carry securely attached to a strap or collar about their neck a tag of the character hereinafter described.

Clause 5—Such tags shall be of the form and character decided upon from time to time, by the City Council or police committee thereof, and shall be issued by the City Clerk of the said city yearly on payment of the use of the said corporation of the fee of two dollars for each dog and five dollars for each bitch and shall be valid until the thirtieth of April in the year following, for which the same shall be issued.

Clause 6—The city clerk will keep a register of the issue of such tags and the persons to whom the same were issued and the sum paid therefor, the number in each case corresponding to the number of tags issued and in making out the collector's roll he shall credit as against the dog tax otherwise payable by any person according to such roll the sum or sums paid by such person for tags pursuant to this by-law.

Clause 7—Where the owner, possessor or harborer of any dog or bitch has paid the tax on such dog or bitch for any year no further tax or fee shall be payable for such dog or bitch by the same or any other person for the same year, but nothing herein contained shall effect the right to kill any dog or bitch running at large with or without a tag.

Clause 8—Any dog or bitch owned, possessed or harbored on any premises which may be deemed a nuisance by reason of the amount of barking, crying or howling must be removed or destroyed by the owner, possessor or harborer, upon being adjudged guilty by the Magistrate, or Justice of the Peace, before whom a charge will be laid upon information of the complainant. In event of the owner, possessor or harborer failing to carry out this clause after being told by the Magistrate or Justice of the Peace to do so within twenty-four hours, he shall be liable to a fine of not less than one dollar for each twenty-four hours afterwards, and at the expiration of forty-eight hours after judgment has been given the police will destroy the dog or bitch, and the owner, possessor or harborer will remove the same at this own expense.

Clause 9—The police will be instructed by the commissioners to impound all dogs or bitches found running at large, with or without muzzle, and to keep the dog or bitch for twenty-four hours after being impounded to give the owner a chance to claim his property, pay his expenses incurred and take the dog or bitch away. If, at the expiration of twenty-four hours the dog or bitch has not been claimed, the police are authorized to destroy the same.

Ald. Buller objected to clause 5. He thought the present fee of one and two dollars was sufficient, and especially so if the owner had to keep the animal tied up or under leash.

Ald. Phelan sided with Ald. Buller, and neither would consent to making the fees two and three dollars at the suggestion of Ald. Turner.

Ald. Duffus, with Ald. Turner, was in favor of the clause.

Ald. Buller saw considerable injustice to the dog in clause eight. He did not think an owner should be made to kill his animal just because it barked.

The proposed by-law will come up before the Council to be dealt with in a short time.

DOGS AND CATTLE ARE UNDER QUARANTINE IN VICINITY OF MILLBROOK

Millbrook, March 18.—Inspector Dr. Stubbs of the Agricultural department, Ottawa, was here for a couple of days making investigation into the rabies matter. The Elson dog's head having upon analysis been found infected, the Ottawa authorities who are assisting the Provincial department in stamping out the disease, sent Dr. Stubbs here to investigate. Since the first biting incident in which Reginald Given was concerned, a son of Mr. Dolan's, one mile north of Elson's, was bitten by his own dog, taking out a piece of his ear. The fact that the two dogs had been together induced the Inspector to quarantine Dolan's dog, and also other dogs who were said to have recently been in the company of the Elson dog, namely, Jas. Lane's and Moses Sutton's in the township, and William Leach's and William Larmer's in the village. He also put quarantine on all of Mr. Elson's stock as a precaution as his dog had bitten some of his animals. This is a precaution taken to ensure proper trace of the animals should the disease break out, but does not prevent Mr. Elson going in and out with his team, but nothing can be sold or removed from the farm without permission from the authorities. The permission will be readily granted, though, on request, trace being kept of where each animal goes. Dr. Stubbs' chief object in coming here was to ascertain if there is necessity of placing Eastern Ontario under the dog muzzle regulations and on his report the Government will act. The McBean dog's head having shown a negative result in the analysis is reassuring, but every possibility of future spread of the rabies must be guarded against. Reginald Given is in Toronto under treatment at the General Hospital, three weeks being the time set for full results. The Dolan youth will remain at home for ten days from the time of the biting, and the dog watched carefully for any appearance of the trouble.

3RD DRAGOONS ELECT THEIR OFFICERS FOR HALF YEAR

The semi-annual meeting of the officers of the 3rd Prince of Wales' Canadian Dragoons, was held at regimental headquarters, at the Armories, Peterborough, yesterday afternoon, there being a good attendance. The following were in attendance:—

Lieut.-Col. G. H. Syer, Millbrook, in command.

"A" Squadron (Colborne) — Capt. Dudley and Capt. Campbell.

"B" Squadron (Millbrook)—Major P. A. Davis, Capt. S. T. Medd, Lieut. Mollmoyle.

"C" Squadron (Peterborough) — Major Thomas Johnston, Lieut. Cleghorn, Lieut. Anderson.

"D" Squadron (Wellington)—Major Wm. McCullough.

Capt. F. A. Langfeldt, Chaplain.
Capt. E. S. Clarry, Paymaster.
Capt. Haywood, Adjutant.
Major W. T. Hall, Corps Reserve.
Major George Hall, R.O.
Major Charles Stapleton, R.O.
Lieut. J. J. Duffus, Signalling Officer.

A number of matters of importance to the regiment were taken up and disposed of, principal amongst which was the adoption of official designs for cap and collar badges.

The report of the Inspector of Cavalry was read and the officers congratulated Col. Syer upon the splendid tribute paid to his command by the inspecting officer, Col. Williamson.

The officers present were delighted with the new armories, and were particularly pleased with the handsome new headquarters of the 3rd Dragoons, which have been provided. Most of the officers stayed over, and durin gthe evening at the armories played indoor baseball, bowling and other indoor games with the officers of the 57th.

The officers of the 3rd Dragoons were very pleased to have with them their first Quartermaster, Major Charles Stapleton, who has spent perhaps, more camps with this regiment than any other officer in its history. Major Stapleton is on the Reserve of Officers now, but his enthusiasm for the 3rd Dragoons is always at fever heat.

Major Young, of the 24th Field Battery, and former Medical Officer of the 3rd Dragoons, was a welcome visitor at the meeting.

THE UNREST OF MODERN THOUGHT

Mr. J. H. Burnham's Interesting Address Before St. Luke's Young People's Association.

Mr. J. H. Burnham spoke in St. Luke's school house last evening before the St. Luke's Y.P.A. on "The Average Inquiring Man's View of Religion." He said that a study of the unrest of modern thought upon the question, showed that the unrest was due to the divorcement of ethics from religion by a great proportion of so-called Christians, who thought, or seemed to think, that so long as they maintained a certain "school" of thought they were rescuing both God and the eternal welfare of mankind. The average man preferred practical religion, and many moderate thinking men were veering away from worship to the ethical ideal. People were not averse to worshipping and following such an ideal as Jesus was, but the "procedure" of religion, like the "procedure" of the courts, in many cases so upset religion in the one case, as justice in the other, as to make both unworkable. The tendency to ignore God was bound to come to an end. No observer could fail to acknowledge the existence of an all-pervading Supreme Power that knew all that we know, and infinitely more. It was merely a question of striving to reach in thought and practice an ideal, so the average inquirer concludes, without the intervention of perplexing non-essentials.

SPORTING

SHRUBB AND HIS RUNNING MACHINE

Alfred Shrubb is going on the stage. The great little runner has turned his thoughts to things theatrical, and is awaiting final arrangements to appear in vaudeville during the spring season. He has invented a running machine, on which he will run, doing different stunts to show the public how a man ought to train, and how the strides differ in sprints and long distance races. About twelve months ago Alfie thought of the plan to construct a running machine, and the perfected model now stands over in the Royal Alexandra Theatre, where he has a try-out every day to become accustomed to it.

The machine, which Alfie has had patented in three countries, the United States, Canada and England, is 20 feet long, while the cotton belt is three feet wide. Unlike all the home trainers constructed so far, there is no sag in the endless belt, while the top surface is perfectly level, the belt sliding over a sheet-iron box which is composed of four sections. On the ends there are large hollow drums, which can be extended outwards to tighten the belt. The machine is driven by a three horse-power motor, with a controller to regulate the speed. With the motor now attached, a speed of twenty-five miles an hour can be attained, which means that a runner would have eto go at about the rate of a mile in three minutes. Of course he could not keep this up long. By regulating the speed, Alfie Shrubb intends to show the stride of sprinters compared to Marathoners, while he can also show the proper position to hold the hands and also the proper action of the legs.—Toronto News.

SIMPSON WILL RUN IN DERBIES

That Pat Powers Will Promote in New York, Pittsburg and Chicago.

Fred Simpson, who is in town to-day, says he will be an entrant in the big derbies that Pat Powers will pull off in New York, Chicago and Pittsburg this summer.

Fred was to have run Henry Jackson ten miles at Midland last night, but Jackson, who lives on Christian Island, was unable to be on hand, so the race didn't take place. The pair will meet later, however.

BOWLING

In the Garrison Sergeants' Bowling League Mitchell's team took three straights from Sharpe's team last night, and Roberts' and Goerin's teams each won one and tied the other.

Forbes Robertson, aged 81, a pioneer of Kincardine township, is dead.

The owners of the steamer Prinz Wilhelm II. believe she has sunk with all on board.

57TH OFFICERS WON BALL GAME

Defeated the 3rd Prince of Wales Nine by 38-11 in an Interesting Exhibition

Major Langfeldt twirled his indoor baseball team, composed of the officers of the Third Prince of Wales Dragoons, to a defeat last night at the Armories. The opposing team, made up of the officers of the 57th Regiment, won out in seven innings by the score of 38—11. Captain Clegg did the heaving for the winners and throughout the game displayed considerable knowledge of the bowling game.

There was lots of fun for everybody. Sergt. Hay called the balls and strikes to the satisfaction of all concerned and Farrier Sergt. Batten worked on the bases.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Review does not hold itself responsible for opinions expressed byits correspondents

Says "Stop It"

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—There are some things that die hard, you have to hit them often and hit them hard before they down. Now this church entertainment business, such as church operettas, concerts, cantattas, etc., and all church suppers, high teas, etc., where these are sold at the door of the sanctuary or by ticket, it is in direct violaton of an ordinance on the statute books of the city. To all who are in this business (and some seem to be in it to stay) I would say do one of four things.1. Either petition the Council to exampt the churches and Salvation Army from the penalty attached to the violation of said ordinance or by-law. 2. Take out an eating house and also a play-house license. 3. Quit the business or 4th prepare to pay the penalty attached to the violation of said laws.

St. Paul said; 1 Timothy 1, 9: "The law is not made for the righteous man but for the lawless . . . and for sinners."

"Submit yourself to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake," is a clincher for those who will persist in dealing out thousands and tens of thousands of meals in their churches in defiance of the city ordinance which says you shall not do so without a license. The Review hit this business between the eyes the other eve, when the editor said, "If these charges about the churches being turned into eating houses be true, the civic officials should get after them for eating house licenses."

Thanking you, Mr. Editor, for another privilege of speaking to the hearts and consciences of of your many thousand readers.

I remain,
Yours, etc.,
JOHN CARLISLE.

Gas Distended His Stomach

"My last wish will be," writes Harry P. Pollard, a well-known boot and shoe traveler of Hartford, "that everyone with a bad stomach may learn as I did, before it's too late, that Nerviline is the one remedy to cure. Why, I was in mighty bad shape, my digestion was all wrong, and every night I would waken with a start and find my heart jumping like a threshing machine. This was caused by gas on my stomach pressing against my heart. When I started to use Nerviline I got better mighty fast. It is certainly a grand remedy for the traveling man, keeps your stomach in order, cures cramps, prevents lumbago or rheumatism, breaks up chest colds and sore throat—in fact there hasn't been an ache or pain inside or outside for the past two years that I haven't cured with Nerviline. Do you wonder I recommend it?"

Insurance Companies Lose About $125,000.00 by the Wreck at Spanish River

Double Liability for About Twenty-five Persons

A loss of somewhere in the neighbourhood of $125,000 is what the Accident Insurance Companies estimate the wreck at Spanish River bridge means to them.

They figure that about 25 of those who met death carried Accident Insurance, and the average insurance, according to the tables, is $5,000. In case of death in a railway disaster there is a double liability, making the figure $6,000, or $5,000 to be more conservative.

Their loss may total more than that, for the commercial travellers, a number of whom were killed, usually carry very heavy insurance. In addition, some of the companies make the policies payable on the death of the wife while travelling, though the policy is taken out in the husband's name. In such cases they pay the husband the same amount as they would have paid the wife were the husband killed.

We issue the BEST Accident and Sickness policy offered to the public.

Do You Realize?

That despondency in women is a mental condition often traceable to some distinctly female ill!

Women who are well do not have the blues, neither are they irritable and restless. Derangement of the female organism breeds all kinds of miserable feelings such as backache, headache, and bearing-down feelings. Try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. There is no doubt that it has made many remarkable cures of female ills after all other means had failed. There is hardly a day that some woman does not write us that this simple old medicine, made only of roots and herbs, has cured her of a severe illness after several doctors had done their best and failed.

Here are two such letters — read them — they are genuine and reliable.

Belleville, Ont. — "I was so weak and worn out from a female weakness that I concluded to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I took several bottles of it, and I gained strength so rapidly that it seemed to make a new woman of me. I can do as good a day's work as I ever did. I sincerely bless the day that I made up my mind to take your medicine for female weakness, and I am exceedingly grateful to you for your kind letters, as I certainly profited by them. I give you permission to publish this any time you wish." — Mrs. Albert Wickett, Belleville, Ontario, Canada.

Rockland, Me. — "I was troubled for a long time with pains in my back and side and was miserable in every way. I had doctored until I was discouraged and thought I would never get well. I read a testimonial about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and thought I would try it.

"After taking three bottles I never was so well in my life. I am recommending Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to all my friends." — Mrs. Will Young, 6 Columbia Avenue, Rockland, Me.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine, Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health free of charge. Address Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.

AT QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY

Special Correspondence of Peterborough Review

Kingston, March 19.—Last week some newspaper reporter started a rumor to the affect that Principal Gordon intended to resign. Fortunately the report is entirely unfounded; the prospects are that Queen's will enjoy the guiding hand of our able Principal for many a year to come.

For the past year or so there has been a project on foot to organize an inter-collegiate meeting to compete in gymnasium work. This year the project has taken shape and the first intercollegiate assault-at-arms was held in the University Gymnasium on Friday evening before a crowd of about five hundred. The Universities represented in this meet were Toronto, McGill and Queen's, each sending up the men who had won in their own contests. Queen's won the highest honors, securing forty of the fifty-five points and eight firsts out of the possible eleven. The rest went to Toronto. The following are the winners in the various events: Boxing—Featherweight, R. F. Davidson, Toronto; lightweight, W. P. Alderson, Queen's; welterweight, G. M. Morgan, Toronto; middleweight, W. A. Willison, Toronto; heavyweight, H. Dickson, Queen's. Wrestling—Featherweight, W. Garvock, Queen's; lightweight, O'Alyea, Queen's; welterweight, D. R. Foster, Queen's; middleweight, J. A. McDonald; heavyweight, J. A. McDonald, Queen's. In the fencing two men represented each College, but the final honors went to D. A. Carmichael, Queen's.

On Saturday evening another very satisfactory victory came to Queen's. The trustees of the Allan Cup notified Queen's shortly after their victory that they would be called upon to defend the cup on Saturday night against the Cliffsides of Ottawa. The ice was in rather poor shape, but the game proceeded. At most of the stages of the game it was very exciting. Fast hockey coupled with innumerable delays through disputes over goal judges, broken goal nets and injuries to players was the chief feature, but when the final gong sounded the scoring stood Queen, 6; Cliffsides, 3.

Nearly every graduating year tries to have some memorable around College which is distinctive of that year. The final year this year has decided on a new plan and one that will be very acceptable. The University grounds have been unprotected from any approach, consequently pedestrians make short cuts in every direction. The year 1910 has decided to erect a double gateway at the entrance of University Avenue, on the south side of the Kingston building and have an iron fence erected from there to the corner of Stuart street. The junior year has also fallen into line and is calculating on carrying on the good work. They are going to take up the fencing where the year '10 leaves off and erect a similar one along Stuart street and a gateway on the Stuart street entrance. The Grounds Committee under Prof. MacClement is making the necessary arrangements. The north campus is in such a condition on account of the process of the erection of the new buildings that fencing cannot be done, yet it is thought that subsequent years will fall into line and complete this necessary work.

Before the Archaeological Society last week, Prof. L. B. Paton, Ph.D., of Hartford Theological Seminary, gave a lecture on "Palestine before the Hebrews." Prof. Paton is an original worker in this field and has been in Palestine on research expeditions. His lecture, which was highly instructive, was made more so by the aid of lantern slides, most of which he made while in the field.

We are pleased to note that one of the young members of the family of college faculties, namely, the Dairying Department, has been lately recognized by the Legislature. This is encouraging and is an indication of the importance of this branch of training in the welfare of our country. The grant is not enormous, yet it will go a good way in putting in the necessary repairs and further equipment. The grant amounts to $3,000.

Last Saturday morning saw the last regular and the annual meeting of the Missionary Society. The Society shows a decided advance over previous years. It has been laboring under a debt, but this year it begins with a clear sheet and several hundred dollars in the treasury. It also has increased its foreign work and its home work by fifty per cent. The members of the new executive are: Hon. President, Dr. Somerville, Toronto; President, A. D. Cornett, B.A.; Treasurer, F. C. Casselman; Alumni Secretary, R. M. McTavish, B.A.; Critic, G. Telford; Reporter, A. P. Menzies, B.A.; Librarian, A. L. Reid; Convener H.M. Committee, Miss Macallister; F.M. Committee, Miss Girdler; Membership Committee, A. D. Matheson.

Household Notes

Some people put the meringue on a pie or pudding while it is still hot. This causes the egg to liquify and quite spoils the dish.

Water that has stood for a little while in the sun is best for watering house plants. Fresh cold water will retard their growth.

Never grate lemon rind without first scrubbing well with a clean vegetable brush. The dirt that comes off will show the reason.

Fish cakes made from the smoked Finnan haddie, slightly freshened, are delicious. They should be mixed with mashed potato, the same as codfish.

Peas and beans should never be swimming in water. They should be cooked with as little liquid as possible to retain the flavor of the vegetables.

Household

Sprinkle suet with flour before chopping it or running it through the food chopper. Then the task will be an easy one.

Don't leave a tin lid on the saucepan if you start the cereal in the evening for breakfast. It will rust and the moisture will drip into the food.

Turpentine will remove paint stains from all kinds of woollen cloths. If the stains are old it may be necessary to add a little ammonia to the turpentine.

A pleasing dessert has canned peaches as a basis. Serve half a peach on a plate and top it generously with whipped cream sprinkled with crumbled macaroons.

The careful cook always breaks each egg separately into a saucer or a cup. Then, if perchance one is bad, it will not spoil the other ingredients in the dish she is making.

To remove grease from men's coat collars, rub with a cloth dampened in ammonia. This will sometimes remove the gloss from rubbed places, such as elbows and seams.

If cans of fruit are wrapped in old newspapers after they have cooled from the canning process, and placed in a cool, dry spot, the printers' ink and paper will prevent their molding.

A stain remover that has proved successful with fruit and vegetable discolorations on the hands is made by adding four drops of carbolic acid to half a pint of glycerine and rosewater.

Flannel will not harden or shrink if, when new, it is put into clean, cold water frequently. Wash well in warm water, using a little soap to remove the oil. Flannel thus washed never hardens.

When baking a chicken pie, turn a teacup upside down right in the centre of it before putting on the top crust. This keeps it from getting dry, and it is far more delicious baked in this way.

SPRING REMINDERS OF RHEUMATISM

Raw, Damp Weather Starts the Pain, But the Trouble Lies in the Blood

Changeable spring weather, often raw, cold and damp, is pretty sure to bring a time of misery to people who suffer from rheumatism. But it must be borne in mind that it is not the weather that causes rheumatism, the trouble is rooted in the blood—the damp, changeable weather merely starts the aches and often almost unbearable pains going. The trouble must be reached through the blood and the poisonous rheumatic acids driven out. This is a medical truth every rheumatic sufferer should realize. Liniments, outward applications and so-called electrical appliances never did, and never can, cure rheumatism. The sufferer is only wasting valuable time and money with this sort of treatment, and all the time the trouble is becoming more firmly rooted—and harder to cure. There is just one sure way to cure rheumatism—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They act directly on the impure, weak, or tainted blood. They purify and strengthen it and so rout out the cause of rheumatism. Mr. John Finnamore, Marysville, N.B., says:—"I was laid up with rheumatic fever for a year, and for eight months of that time I could not go about. My blood had seemed to turn to water, and the pain I endured was at times almost unendurable. Notwithstanding I was under the doctor's care I was not regaining my strength and I decided to give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a trial. I took altogether nine boxes and they simply worked wonders in bringing back my lost strength. I still take the Pills occasionally as I am working in a saw mill where the work is pretty heavy."

Not only rheumatic sufferers, but all who have any trouble due to weak, watery blood, will find a cure through Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. It is because of their direct action on the blood that these Pills cure such troubles as anaemia, indigestion, general weakness, neuralgia, and the aches, pains and secret troubles women folk alone know. Give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a fair trial, and they will not disappoint you. Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The Success and the Imitation

Every big success has its host of petty imitators. Imitation seems to be the penalty of success.

O'Keefe's SPECIAL EXTRA MILD ALE

has been a most gratifying success. It is just what many people have always wanted—a full flavored, full bodied, rich, creamy old Ale, which is so light and mild that it will not cause Biliousness.

It took years to perfect this Ale. And now that O'KEEFE'S has firmly established its reputation for high quality, other Ales are attempting to trade on the reputation of O'KEEFE'S Special Extra Mild Ale and are being sold as "Special Ale."

If you want the genuine O'Keefe's Special Extra Mild Ale, order is by name O'KEEFE'S. Do not accept any substitute as being just as good.

"TOO ILL TO WORK"

In Deepest Despair — All Run Down—Health Was Restored.

When you are sick and undecided as to the best remedy to use, there is nothing so convincing as the personal experience of some one who has suffered like yourself.

From St. Francis, Maine, comes the following statement from Mrs. Ovila Daigle: "I want to write you a few lines in order to tell you how much better my health is since taking Ferrozone.

"For two years I was weak.
"Couldn't do any housework.
"Was tired, worn out, depressed.
"Thought I wouldn't recover.
"Since using Ferrozone I have grown strong enough to attend myself to the family washing. I have seven children and a husband, and am doing all the housework myself. I still use Ferrozone, and seem to gain better health all the time."

(Signed) OVILA DAIGLE.

HARDWARE ASSOCIATION TO BE INVITED TO THE CITY

By all means invite the Hardware Association to hold their convention of next February in this city. Such was the unanimous feeling shown at the meeting of the Legal and Reception Committee last night. Of the committee there were present: The chairman, Ald. Duffus, and Ald. Buller, Turner and Phelan. A small, but nevertheless, enthusiastic deputation of manufacturers and hardware dealers were also present, and after they had expressed their views on the subject and had departed, on motion, the matter of sending a deputation to Toronto on Good Friday to invite the Association to come to this city was left in the hads of the chairman and Mayor.

The deputation at the meeting was made up of Messrs. Thos. Fortye, representing the Peterborough Lock Manufacturing Co.; Harry Morgan, Peterborough Hardware Co.; Wm. D. Campbell, Best Stove and Hardware Co.; James English, Wm. English Canoe Co., and E. B. Wilson, Peterborough Machine Co. Mr. B. F. Ackerman was on hand at 7.30 the hour announced for the meeting, but left shortly before eight o'clock, when it appeared as if there might not be a quorum of the committee.

Mr. Fortye was first heard. He regretted the small attendance, but stated he was heartily in favor of inviting the Association to this city. It would be to the interest of manufacturers, retailers and the city at large. If there was any expense to be incurred the Lock Company would gladly contribute their share.

Mr. Morgan stated that he attended the last convention. To his mind the most important inducement to be made was a guarantee that suitable premises for meetings and exhibits were available. He felt sure that satisfactory hotel accommodation could be secured, and the matter of entertainment easily disposed of.

Messrs. Campbell and Wilson were also strongly in favor of inviting the Association.

All of the members of the committee present were in favor of an invitation. The matter of suitable premises was discussed at some length. The Armories and Market Hall were mentioned as places for the exhibits, and the Collegiate Assembly Hall, Grand Opera House and the T.A.S. new quarters as places for meetings. Ald. Turner offered to supply two large tents with floors and heating equipment.

ONLY ONE DEER MAY BE KILLED UNDER NEW ACT

Important Amendment That Will Interest Local Hunters—Shorter Season for Grouse, Pheasant, Partridge and Woodcock.

When the new game act, which has received its second reading, is finally passed by the Legislature this week, it will provide that in future a hunter may only take one deer instead of two, as at present.

The open season for grouse, pheasants, partridge and woodcock will be reduced from three months, as at present, to one month. Wild turkeys and quail, which now were shot in only certain portions of the province, were decreasing rapidly, and the season will, in future, open on the 15th of September. The same would apply to ducks, and in future the season will open on the 15th, instead of the 1st of September. The season for capercaillie, beaver and otter, said Hon. Dr. Reaume, who is the author of the bill, had been closed for the past several years, and it was his intention to extend the close season until 1915. Mink, he said, would in future be in the same class as muskrat. It was found that people were trapping mink all year, and for the purpose of protecting these animals, it was necessary to have a close season. The open season for these animals in future will be from the 1st of December to the 1st of April, and the close season from April to November 30.

Complaints had been made, he continued, that hunters left their decoys in the water all night and on Sundays when shooting deer, and it was hard for others to shoot ducks under those conditions. The clause had been inserted in the bill, therefore, providing that all duck hunters must remove their decoys every night, and especially on Sundays.

In future, non-residents of the province must pay a license of $10 before they will be allowed to trap fur-bearing animals. Dr. Reaume stated that American trappers came into the province and killed fur-bearing animals promiscuously, and in order to prevent that, a fee would be charged before outsiders could get permission to trap fur-bearing animals. Those, he said, were the chief provisions of the bill.

A TOP LINER MUSICAL PLAY

"The Girl Question" Full of Melody, Laugh Lines and Pretty Girls — An Expensive Production

Pretty girls and catchy songs and dances which are marvels of grace and action, a cast of startling players, and, above all, a play with a plot of intense human interest are found in the "Girl Question," the entrancing musical play which comes to "The Grand" Good Friday, matinee and evening. The play is along the lines and is in fact a successor to "The Time, The Place, and The Girl," the musical play which has jammed every theatre in which it has played since its run of 463 performances in Chicago.

Forty of the prettiest chorus girls who have ever been seen in one show are found in "The Girl Question," as are also the famous "1400 Beauty Broilers," the latter being the ten little girls who dance with an abandon of emotion and enthusiasm and an amount of ginger which has never been equaled.

The plot of "The Girl Question" reveals a story of everyday life which is of real human interest, though broken up in its development at moments to allow for the introduction of songs and dances. The production was staged by that past master in the exploitation of dramatic scenes, beautiful stage pictures and graceful dances, George Marion, the producer of the "Merry Widow," "A Stubborn Cinderella," "The Prince of Pilsen," etc. The songs include "Good-bye, Pal," "I Hate to Work on Monday," "O, Gee, Be Sweet to Me, Kid," "Waltz Me Around Till I'm Dreamy," "When Eyes Like Yours Look Into Eyes Like Mine," "The Old Buck and Wing," and "Do Something."

"The Girl Question" is the latest of the series of unique musical comedy entertainments which Adams, Hough and Howard have furnished the La Salle Theatre, Chicago, will be seen here after a long run in the Windy City. It is a rushing, bustling, jolly, unconventional sort of play with snap and action in every line and situation, and those who have enjoyed its predecessor, "The Time, the Place and The Girl," will surely be pleased with it. The sale of seats opens next Wednesday morning.

YOUNG MEN WERE HOSPITABLY ENTERTAINED

Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Kennedy were "At Home" last evening at their beautiful residence, to Mr. Kennedy's Bible Class. Games of different kinds were played and a good time was enjoyed by all.

After the games were over refreshments were served by the hostess, and then after several musical selections had been rendered the president of the class, Mr. Norman Perry, and Mr. Saunders ably moved a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy.

Mr. Kennedy in a few words, gracefully acknowledged the expression of thanks.

The evening afforded an opportunity for the young men to get better acquainted with their teacher and with one another. The class has made rapid growth during the winter and is now one of the largest Bible Classes in the city. The class now has a membership of over fifty members. Charlotte st. church may well be proud of such a large class of young men and of such an able and efficient teacher.

Mr. E. Mr. Grier's subject will be one of the series upon which he lectured before Trinity College, Toronto.

PRESENTATION OF CHINA SET

To Mrs. Ed. Wand, by Members of Choir and Congregation of Mark St. Methodist Church

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Ed Wand, Ashburnham, was the scene of a pleasing affair last night, when members of the choir and congregation of Mark St. Methodist church called on them and presented Mrs. Wand, who, before her recent marriage, was soprano soloist of the choir, with a beautiful set of china dishes. Those present had met at the parsonage and walked in a body to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wand, to whom the occasion was a surprise. A pleasant evening, in which music and games played a prominent part, was spent by all. A number of phonograph selections were given by Mr. J. H. Callander, the choir leader, and refreshments were served by the ladies.

Mr. and Mrs. Wand wish to express their appreciation of the kindness shown them last evening.

The "St. Patrick's Evening" given at the Y.W.C.A. last night proved a very enjoyable and successful affair. The programme given was a very delightful one, and every number was thoroughly enjoyed. There were about 125 present. After the programme a social time was spent and refreshments were served. These social evenings given at the Y.W.C.A. have been very enjoyable as well as profitable, and the young ladies have met with much success in adding to their membership. The class lectures have also proved a strong drawing card and have been very instructive.

ANOTHER MIRACLE IN NOVA SCOTIA

Thought the Disease was Cancer of the Stomach

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" Cured Him

SYDNEY MINES, N. S., JANUARY 25TH 1910

"For many years I suffered torture from Indigestion and Dyspepsia. Two years ago, I was so bad that I vomited my food constantly. The agony I endured all these years, I cannot describe and I lost over 25 pounds in weight. I also suffered with Constipation which made the stomach trouble worse. I consulted physicians, as I was afraid the disease was cancer but medicine gave only temporary relief and then the disease was as bad as ever.

I read in the "Maritime Baptist" about "Fruit-a-tives" and the cures this medicine was making and I decided to try it. After taking three boxes, I found a great change for the better and now I can say "Fruit-a-tives" has entirely cured me when every other treatment failed, and I reverently say 'Thank God for Fruit-a-tives'!!"

EDWIN ORAM, Sr.

"Fruit-a-tives" sweetens the stomach, increases the flow of gastric juice, strengthens the stomach muscles, and insures sound digestion. The wonderful powers of this famous fruit medicine are never more clearly shown than in curing the apparently hopeless cases of Dyspepsia and Constipation. 50c a box, 6 for $2.50, or trial size, 25c. At dealers or from Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

RESULT OF FIELDING-TAFT CONFERENCE IS DOUBTFUL

Earl Grey, the Minister of Finance and the President of the United States Spend Several Hours in Discussion Without Arriving at a Settlement.

Albany, N.Y., March 21.—"President Taft and Hon. W. S. Fielding, Canadian Finance Minister, was in conference in regard to the tariff for several hours yesterday, but no conclusion was reached," said Charles H. Pepper, the tariff expert of the Department of Commerce and Labor, yesterday afternoon, speaking of the conference called by the President in the hope of averting a tariff war between the United States and Canada. "The situation is now one of friendly negotiation," concluded Mr. Pepper.

President Taft merely reiterated Mr. Pepper's statement as to the status quo of the negotiations since the conference, but added that he had sought advice in anticipation of the tariff going into effect automatically on March 31, and there being a subsequent change favorable to the United States. With regard to this, Secretary of State Knox, previous to the President's leaving Washington, had given his opinion, although not committing himself definitely, that such changes might warrant the President rescinding by proclamation the maximum tariff, which would be imposed against Canada as a power unduly discriminating against the United States.

Although the Payne-Aldrich tariff is arbitrary as to its application against those countries which are unduly discriminatory against the United States, President Taft has judicial power to determine what constitutes "undue" discrimination. It has been the opinion of the President's tariff advisors, however, that unless concessions are granted by Canada, and the United States Government placed with France, and the thirteen other countries enjoying preferential rates that Canada would suffer the 25 per cent. increase of maximum American rates.

While the situation up till to-day had been regarded as a most threatening one, it is believed that the conference between President Taft and Mr. Fielding was resultant of more good than was announced, and the view regarding the possibilities of a happy solution of the problem has become more optimistic. Perhaps this optimism is due to a large extent to the very friendly relations that have existed between President Taft and Governor-General Grey since the two met in this city Saturday afternoon.

The two met frequently yesterday and at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon enjoyed the hospitality of Governor Hughes at luncheon at the executive mansion. Later in the afternoon President Taft and Earl Grey and a party of friends partook of tea at the home of Dr. Ward.

At 10 o'clock last evening President Taft, with Earl Grey as his personal guest, made preparations for the journey to New York. They sat aboard the President's private tram, conversing in a most friendly manner, until a late hour in the evening, when they retired to start for New York at three o'clock this morning. President Taft has challenged Earl Greye to an international golf match at Beverly next summer and the Earl has accepted.

While Earl Grey did not participate in the conference, the very cordial relations of the executive heads of the United States and the Dominion Government has been regarded as significant. Other significant features developing yesterday were the fact that Earl Grey or Hon. Mr. Fielding are expected in Washington about the date that the Payne-Aldrich tariff would automatically become effective, and that President Taft called to him after the conference, J. A. Macdonald of Toronto, and thanked him for the service he had performed in being instrumental in bringing about the conference and making possible the continuance of "friendly negotiations."

The President was fairly inundated with telegrams again yesterday from various interests expressing the hope that an amicable agreement with Canada might be reached. Only within the last seventy-two hours, it was said, has the seriousness of the situation been appreciated in the United States and in the Dominion.

President Taft, Earl Grey and Governor Hughes of New York met here yesterday and formed a notable trio of guests at the banquet of the University Club of this city on Saturday night. On the President's arrival in the city from Rochester he was escorted at once to the governor's mansion, and from there was driven soon afterward to the Tuberculosis Congress, which has been in session in this city since Saturday, and where both he and Governor Hughes made addresses. Earl Grey arrived in the city about an hour after the President reached here. He was met at the station by the local militia and escorted to his hotel. The crowds on the streets were as demonstrative in their greeting to the Canadian official as to the President.

Earl Grey sat on the President's right at the dinner. Both took for their topics the friendly relations between Canada and the United States, and expressed the hope that these relations always might be maintained.

SUFFRAGETTE CAUSES SENSATION AT CLOSING OF THE LEGISLATURE

She is Miss Olivia Smith, the Heroine of Several Jail Terms and an Enthusiastic Disciple of Mrs. Pankhurst Premier Whitney Angry Over the Affair.

Toronto, March 21.—"There is one thing you have forgotten. I protest against this Parliament closing without doing justice to women. Women are as much entitled to votes as men. I hope that in your future deliberations you will do justice to the cause of women. This is all I have to say at present. Thank you."

These words, spoken in a low, musical voice from the centre of the Speaker's gallery Saturday afternoon, startled the usual Sabbath day somnolence which distinguishes the ceremony of prorogation of the Legislature from the blaze of brilliance in which it opens.

She proved to be Miss Olivia Smith of London, Eng., a prominent suffrage worker and the heroine of several jail terms.

It came as a bolt from the blue.

The formality of assenting to the bills passed during the session had been gone through with; the Lieutenant-Governor had read his speech, while the clerk of the House stood with folded hands and reverent mein, as if he had been assisting in an ordination of elders; the aide-de-camp had bowed himself backward down the steps of the throne; Hon. J. B. Lucas had declared the Legislature prorogued; the representative of the crown was already half way out of the chamber.

MISS OLIVIA SMITH.

Then the lady arose and launched her protest.

One of the attendants motioned her out, and she left immediately, with two others who were evidently there as her bodyguard, before anyone had a chance to learn her name. She was dressed in a brown suit and wore a fur toque and fur ruff.

Sir James Whitney is alleged to have said, shortly after the occurrence, "The fool, I wish somebody had been there to throw a bucket of water on her."

Allan Studholme, the Labor leader from Hamilton, who has been vainly trying to introduce a women's suffrage bill into the House, stated that he had had no notion that it was going to happen. He did not know the lady.

"I have been so accustomed to public speaking of the kind over in England that I acted as I did on impulse, and in the belief that such a course might be more effective than are the present methods here. I wondered afterwards if people here might think what I did was vulgar. I do not wish further publicity."

This was the statement made by Miss Smith, in explanation of her interruption of the ceremonies.

Miss Smith, who is about 30 years of age, has dark brown hair; slightly tinged with grey, and an intelligent and pleasant face. On her breast she wears the suffragette badge, which is of silver and formed to represent prison bars, signifying that she has suffered imprisonment for the cause. Miss Smith is staying with friends at 26 Alice street.

Very few of the members of the House were in their places. The Cabinet was represented by the Premier and Hon. I. B. Lucas. The leader of the Opposition was absent. The Labor party, which numbers one, was there in full force. Mrs. Gibson and the Misses Gibson occupied seats on the floor of the House.

The Lieutenant-Governor, who wore his military uniform, was attended by a staff of officers from the Toronto garrison, Lieut. Young being aide-de-camp. The traveling escort was furnished by the Royal Canadian Dragoons, while the 48th Highlanders, with brass and pipe bands, supplied the guard of honor. The 9th Field Battery fired the accustomed salute of 13 guns.

The speech of the Lieutenant-Governor dismissing the House from its labors called attention to the business-like methods pursued, resulting in an avoidance of unnecessary delays, and epitomized the work of the session. Some of its clauses read:

"An evidence of the increased usefulness of the Railway and Municipal Board is found in the enlarged powers that have been conferred upon it with reference to the operation of street railways and the supervision of the conditions under which telephone companies created by the provincial authority may carry on their business.

"Further legislation to facilitate the work of the Hydro-Electric Commission has been enacted in order to give reasonable protection to life and property.

"In view of rapid development in Northern Ontario power has been given to the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway Commission providing for the construction of a branch extension of that railway should the same on further experience and investigation be considered necessary in the public interest.

INSURGENTS AND DEMOCRATS BREAK THE SPEAKER'S POWER

"Uncle Joe" Cannon Falls From His Autocratic Perch Amid a Remarkable Scene in the United States House of Representatives.

Washington, D.C., March 21.—Joseph Guerny Cannon of Danville, Ill., is still Speaker of the House of Representatives. But he lost Saturday the ancient prestige and weapon of that office when the allied Republican insurgents and Democrats took from him, not only the chairmanship of, but even membership of the all-powerful committee on rules, the chief asset in his stock of power.

Amid scenes of the wildest disorder, for the like of which one must go back to the exciting days prior to the civil war—perhaps those times might not duplicate it—the veteran Speaker, almost 74 years of age, stood erect and defiant, his head "bloodied but unbowed." And at the end, when a big Texan Democrat accepted the Speaker's daring challenge and introduced a resolution to fling him out of the speakership, the Republicans, regular and insurgents, with few exceptions, rallied with almost unbroken party front and gave him a vote which almost offset the "repudiation of Cannonism."

This is what happened: By a vote of 191 to 155, the Republican insurgents voting solidly with the Democrats, the House adopted the resolution of Representative Norris, Republican of Nebraska, requiring a reorganization of the rules committee, increasing its membership from five to ten and declaring the Speaker ineligible to membership thereof.

By the curiously identical vote of 191 to 155, but with a decidedly different personnel of alignment, the House defeated a resolution of Representative Burleson of Texas, declaring the Speakership vacant and ordering an immediate election of a successor to Mr. Cannon.

Champ Clark, minority leader in the House, said, "The Republicans are on the toboggan slide and if Democrats outside of Congress will get together, as the Democrats in the House have gotten together, our victories this year and in 1912 will be as sweeping as those of 1890 and 1892."

There were moments when it looked as though the preponderantly Republican House might even elect Champ Clark Speaker. In fact was this not only actually proposed in a motion by Mr. Clark of Florida, but Speaker Cannon himself, in his "defi" to the House, declared that his enemies should be consistent and proceed to the election of a Democratic Speaker. Indeed, it was this challenge to the House, daring as it was, which, instantly provoking the Burleson resolution for his dethronement, turned the tide again in his favor, which rallied the Republican regulars and insurgents, together, with few exceptions to the point of what may well be termed a vote of confidence.

Through it all, the aged Speaker, invariably calm, stoical, consistent to the end, stood in his place, his gavel, with steady thumps upon his desk, punctuating the riotous contusion.

The most insignificant sort of a resolution was responsible for the great three-day battle which ended yesterday. This resolution, less than fifty words, introduced by Representative Sabath, (Democrat, Illinois), provided that in the coming census, enumerators should ascertain the mother tongue of the persons enumerated.

Representative Crumpacker (Republican, Indiana), chairman of the census committee, presented this resolution on Wednesday, and the Speaker refused to consider it. That meant only that it would have to wait a while, but Mr. Crumpacker believed the resolution in order under the rules, making Wednesday "calendar day." He brought it up again on Thursday.

Speaker Cannon ruled that, the resolution was privileged and an appeal was taken from his decision. There was a majority against sustaining the Speaker. Immediately Representative Norris, the insurgent, was on his feet. The time for which he had been waiting had come; the Republican whip could not hold his men in line. Smiling, not foreseeing the impending cataclysm, the Speaker recognised "the gentleman from Nebraska."

The insurgent leader drew from his pocket a worn, creased resolution—he had been carrying it for weeks—and declared that under the Speaker's ruling his resolution also was privileged. There was no escape, and after deferring a ruling on the matter for two days and a night, the Speaker, knowing well that he was helpless, made his ruling and was overthrown.

King May Abdicate.

Rome, March 21.—Crown Prince Constantine is authority for the statement that the next three weeks will decide whether his father, King George, is to retain the Hellenic throne.

Everything depends on whether the Greek National Assembly succeeds in carrying out the Army League's orders and the league dissolves. The King does not intend to continue ruling under the direction of an irresponsible body like the league.

Scaffolding Collapsed.

Niagara-on-the-Lake, March 21.—While two men were working on the roof of the Anglican rectory Saturday afternoon, the scaffolding gave way. A. J. Armstrong, plumber and tinsmith, fell thirty feet, and sustained internal injuries which may prove fatal. Adolph Addison managed to save himself by clinging to the cornice until a ladder was brought.

Fisheries Report.

St. John, N.B., March 21.—St. John harbor fisheries for the season just closed were valued at $56,009, a decrease of $18,000 from the previous season.

REUNITED AFTER SIXTEEN YEARS

Port Arthur, March 21.—A case of a family being reunited after sixteen years was recorded here Saturday. Charles Connor, for four years an employe of the Vigars Shear Lumber Co., left instructions with his landlady that if anything happened him, to send word to a daughter at Bay City, Mich. Connor was taken sick, and the landlady wrote as requested, but though the daughter is dead, the letter went to Connor's wife at Gaylord, Mich. She with her son immediately came to Port Arthur, finding her husband recovered. She had not heard from him for sixteen years.

IS MOVEMENT LOSING GRIP?

London, March 21.—The suffragettes appear to have lost their drawing powers. The first meeting they have held since the general election was called for Albert Hall on Friday night, but despite all kinds of advertising it was a frost.

During the day the suffragettes resorted to all kinds of devices to call attention to the affair. Despite all the efforts Albert Hall was only one-quarter filled.

What the audience lacked in numbers it made up in enthusiasm. A resolution was passed unanimously that the granting of votes to women was more important than the budget or the reform of the House of Lords.

The plans for the suffragette spring campaign include a great procession of women, which will end with a mass meeting. About $8,000 was raised at Albert Hall meeting.

Lady Constance Lytton, who under the name of Jane Warton served a prison sentence, was presented with a gold medal "for valor." She was greeted with tremendous applause.

WANT MATINEES TO BEGIN AT 1.30

Chicago, March 21.—Out of 581 votes cast by women at a matinee Saturday to determine at what hour they would prefer to have all matinees in Chicago begin, 183 voted for 1.30 o'clock. Some of the reasons for the early hour written on the ballots by the women were:

"To enable us to be home early so that my husband will not know I have been out."

"So I can cook supper on time."

More than 200 women were in favor of keeping the time at 2.15 o'clock, and 83 declared it was impossible for mothers with children in school to get down to the theatre until a later hour.

LATE TICKS FROM WIRES

A five-day campaign to raise $50,000 for a new Y.M.C.A. building in Lethbridge has ended with $55,000 in sight.

John Devlin died yesterday in Montreal as a result of a broken back, received in an altercation with one McGrath, on St. Patrick's Day. Before dying, Devlin exonerated him from all blame.

Alex. Scott, aged 40, foreman for the Manitoba Cold Storage Co., of Winnipeg, was instantly killed Saturday morning by being caught in the rapidly-revolving flywheel of an ammonia-compressor.

While the remains of the father of John Hall Kelly, M.P.P. for Bonaventure, were exposed yesterday in Montreal, some drapery took fire and as the son endeavored to put it out his hands and arms were seriously burned.

Charles E. Coling, editor of The Live Wire, a Winnipeg weekly publication, was arrested Saturday night on charges of publishing and circulating obscene literature. The Live Wire, a new publication, has exposed many grafts in Winnipeg.

Florence Kinrade, with her husband, Montrose Wright, are at one of the leading Winnipeg hotels registered under assumed names. They arrived at Calgary from Hamilton on Wednesday. She has been recognized by several people, although she does not admit her identity.

STARTLING REVELATIONS AT ALBANY

New York, March 21.—Mercilessly hurling question after question at reluctant witnesses, and reading to them in rapid succession letters and telegrams that told in unmistakable terms of the activity of fire insurance companies in influencing legislation at Albany, William H. Hotchkiss, state superintendent of assurance and his attorney, Frederick Hurrell, forced startling revelations at Saturday's session of the fire insurance enquiry.

It was shown that large sums of money had been raised to procure or thwart legislation between 1901 and 1906. These payments, the majority of which were to law firms, ranged from $700 to $17,500.

Timothy L. Woodruff, now chairman of the Republican state committee; the late Senator John Raines, Representative George R. Malby and former Assemblyman Jas. A. Riordan of New York, were among those mentioned in the testimony.

BRITAIN MUCH WORRIED OVER RUMORS ABOUT KING'S HEALTH

London, March 21.—London has been full of disquieting rumors about the King all week. The news that he was confined to his rooms at Biarritz started these reports, though it was said that he was only suffering from a cold.

A usually well-informed correspondent writes as follows:

"King Edward's indisposition gives considerable disquietude to his entourage, and, from all I hear, his health is really in a precarious state. It is the policy of the British press to state that he is in the best of health and spirits, whereas the contrary has been the case.

"At a recent visit he paid to a country house in Norfolk His Majesty was in such low spirits that the best efforts of his favorite friends could not restore his equanimity. His sojourn at Brighton caused some improvement.

"Curiously enough, the incident which has caused the most serious apprehension is his leaving the Porte Saint Martin Theatre, where he went to see 'Chantecler' in Paris, before the last act. I believe that only once in his life before has the King left a theatre before the conclusion of the play; that was at Marienbad, when he left the theatre as a protest against the singing of some verses insulting to the abbot of the famous monastery there. Everybody who knows the King is convinced that no amount of boredom would make him quit a theatre while the play was in progress, and the statement that he left before 'Chantecler' concluded because he was tired by his journey is not considered adequate. It is said that the real cause was the accession of a sudden indisposition to which he is unhappily subject, and which takes the form of a violent choking fit.

"He is always carefully watched by those about him, and must receive instant attention. On one occasion a fit took him after some songs at dinner, and he remained rigid in his chair, to the great alarm of his people.

"During the state visit to Berlin he was seized with a severe attack and the Queen herself rushed to his aid.

"Despite the prevalent disquietude regarding the King's health, every one hopes for the best. Nothing but the strict orders of his medical attendants would have got the King away during the constitutional crisis now pending, and his physicians here hope that rest and relaxation of mind and body may send him back in good fettle."

ELLA AND THE ARABS

Paris, March 21.—Ella Wheeler Wilcox arrived in Paris after a long journey in Tunis and Algiers.

Mrs. Wilcox was driven out of Biskra by her own popularity. One among her many accomplishments is that of reading palms. She became interested in an old Arab, to whom she explained her knowledge of palmistry. She read his hand, told him how many wives he had, and how many children, related events of his life and described his character greatly to the Sheik's amazement. Evidently he told his friends, for she was mobbed at the hotel and followed by crowds in the street, all begging her to tell their fortunes. At last she was obliged to flee from the town under cover of night.

ADVERTISE IN THE REVIEW.

Not to Supplant Montreal.

Woodstock, March 21.—Fire broke out in Kirkpatrick's store at Burgessville, Saturday and completely destroyed it, with the postoffice, which was in the same building. A lot of mail matter and mail bags were destroyed.

SCANDAL IN THE GERMAN COURT

Berlin, March 21.—More scandal like that which overwhelmed the "Knights of the Round Table," is promised by Count von Gersdorff, who is not only a member of the Prussian House of Lords, but has been a chamberlain to the Emperor.

The count's wife, a sister of the first Countess von Pfeil, committed suicide at Monte Carlo. Count von Pfeil was tried by the imperial military authorities last week on the charge that he bribed their servant to swear falsely against his first wife when the marriage was dissolved in 1907.

During the trial for perjury Countess von Pfeil testified bitterly:

"My sister killed herself because she had just such a blackguard for a husband as I had."

"Such a statement is an absolute lie," says Von Gersdorff publicly. "My wife ended her life because her physician felt compelled to tell her she suffered from an incurable disease. During Von Pfeil's trial I remained neutral, although the countess had made the lowest insinuations against me. This last attack of her's is too much; I shall make public facts about the countess that are known to me."

The military authorities have ordered a new trial for Count von Pfeil on the charge of perjury. So Von Gersdorff will have an opportunity to testify for Von Pfeil and to blurt out the damaging facts he pretends to know.

Persons high in the army and in society are trying earnestly to hush up the scandal.

Engine Turns Somersaults.

Nelson, B.C., March 21.—A railway accident occurred at McNeillie Siding, on the Crow's Nest branch of the Canadian Pacific, Saturday morning, by which two men lost lives and one was probably fatally injured. As a freight train crew was shunting cars, the engine and tender detached, jumped from the rails, and plunged 150 feet down an embankment to the Goat River, turning somersaults as they fell. On the engine were Engineer Jim Carson, Head Brakeman Campbell and Fireman Ford. Campbell and Ford were killed outright. All three belonged to Cranbrook.

Indianapolis Metal Trades Ultimatum.

Indianapolis, Ind., March 21.—Two thousand machinists and members of the metal trades alliance in this city will strike on April 15 unless local factories grant an increase of 7 1-2 cents an hour. They are receiving 28 1-2 cents.

BIG STRIKE THREATENS

New York, March 21.—A general strike of all the building trades employes of this city will be called on March 28, according to the announcement of Charles Wamp, secretary of the Steamfitters Local Union, unless a settlement of the steamfitters' strike, now on, has been made before that date.

The vote to strike was taken Saturday night, at a conference of 250 delegates, representing every building trade union in the city.

The steamfitters' strike has now been on for three months. The men ask an increase in wages from $5 to $5.50 a day, as well as complete control over every branch of steamfitting. The union is now recognized in matters only relative to actual installation and the employers have persistently refused to listen to new demands. In fact, the men assert that they are blacklisted from obtaining employment elsewhere.

A MILLION FOR CLAIM

Cobalt, March 21.—Information has just been received from Porcupine that thirteen of the twenty-six claims owned by the Wilson-Edwards syndicate have been sold for one million dollars. The purchaser is a party representing New York interests.

The mine lies in the southeasterly extremity of Tisdale Township, and is one-half mile southwest of Porcupine Lake.

A cash payment of $50,000 has been made.

THE PANAMA DISPUTE SETTLED

Panama, March 21.—The settlement of the boundary controversy between Panama and Costa Rica is announced. The successful conclusion of the negotiations caused great satisfaction throughout the republic and the newspapers publish editorials in which they congratulate Foreign Secretary Lewis and also express appreciation of the valuable, assistance rendered by Secretary Knox of the United States Government.

THE CONSERVATIVE CONVENTION

The Conservative meeting on Saturday to appoint delegates to the Ottawa convention was a great success and good judgment was shown in choosing representative men. The Peterborough delegates have yet to be appointed and a meeting will be called for the purpose in the near future.

There is a possibility that the convention may not be held in June as was at first proposed, many Conservatives in different sections of the country having expressed the opinion that a later date would be more convenient. Whatever the decision may be regarding the date, it is important that all those selected as delegates should attend.

This convention will be an important event in the history of the Conservative party and it is desirable that all sections of the country should be fully represented.

THE WATERWORKS POWER

The city cannot afford to give away power below cost, but on the other hand it would not be wise to try to make a large profit out of it in selling to manufacturers.

The aim should be to make an arrangement, that, while not burdening the taxpayers, will add to the importance of the city as a manufacturing centre and largely increase its population.

No time should be lost in doing something. Every day that passes with the power going to waste means a loss of money to all branches of trade in this city, because the wages of the workmen employed by the factory or factories using the power would go into general circulation. At the same time the City Council would not be justified in rushing into any arrangement that would be burdensome to taxpayers. The rate payers should have an opportunity of knowing what proposals are made to the city.

NO CONCESSIONS

It is to be hoped that the conference between President Taft and Hon. Mr. Fielding will not result in any concessions being made by Canada to the United States. Any lowering of the Canadian tariff on either manufactured goods or farm products will cause a storm of indignation throughout Canada. The minimum American tariff is very much higher than the Canadian general tariff, and there is no possible excuse for making any concessions to induce the United States not to impose the maximum tariff on Canadian products.

It is announced that the United States minimum tariff will apply to every country except Canada, although other countries have much higher tariffs than ours.

If all the manufactured goods we buy in the United States were made in Canada the workingmen employed would make a better home market for Canadian farmers than they can ever expect to get in the United States.

SECRET SETTLEMENT

It is alleged by merchants of high standing in Montreal that they are greatly handicapped by the competition of dishonest merchants who make fraudulent customs entries to evade the payment of duties and that the Government instead of severely punishing these dishonest importers when frauds are discovered makes secret settlements. The matter was considered by the Council of the Montreal Board of Trade the other day, and it was decided to make representations to the Government against a continuance of the custom. It is very unfair to honest merchants all over the country to allow these guilty importers to go unpunished. It is also injurious to Canadian manufacturers. The tariff is not high enough to adequately protect our home manufacturers even when the full duty is paid, and our manufacturers lose what little protection they have when importers making fraudulent entries are allowed to go unpunished. The Government is very much to blame for making secret settlements with these men. Their names should be published and they should be very severely punished.

MISTAKE OF TARIFF EXPERTS

When the United States Tariff Commissioners began to consider whether Canada was entitled to the minimum tariff or not, it was announced by American newspapers that Mr. Taft would expect these commissioners to discover some way to avoid a tariff war with Canada, and that they would probably strain a point, if necessary, in order to be able to report that the maximum tariff should not be imposed on Canadian products.

However, the commissioners acted as if they had been instructed to find some reason for imposing the maximum tariff. On no other ground can we explain their carefully prepared statement designed to show that the Canadian tariff on American imports is higher than the American tariff on Canadian imports. No one who knows the situation can say that it was a fair statement of the case, and yet its publication in newspapers all over the United States gives the American people the impression that Canada is discriminating against the United States and makes it difficult for President Taft to declare that this country is entitled to the minimum tariff.

If the commissioners supposed they could deceive the Canadian Government and the Canadian people by such a statement, and thus induce our Government to make concessions, they were very much mistaken, although some leading Liberal newspapers accepted the statement readily enough.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Liberal politicians who can imagine that clay is rock and vote for paying contractors for clay excavation at solid rock prices should be allowed to imagine that they are members of Parliament after the next election.

The U. S. Secretary of the Navy says that ships are constructed more economically when the work is done by private concerns than at the Government navy yards. As it has been decided to build the Canadian navy in Canada, our Government should ask some large British shipbuilding firm with experience in building warships to establish a branch shipyard in Canada.

The Argentine Republic, a country which is no greater in population and wealth than Canada, has just ordered two dreadnoughts. They will be of 25,000 tons displacement, and carry twelve 12-inch., twelve 6-inch and twelve 4-inch guns. The speed will be 22 knots. The contract for these warships has been awardedd to an American shipbuilding concern in competition with all the great shipbuilding yards of the world. A few years ago people were sneering at the American navy as a "tinpot navy," but now no one disputes the fact that the United States can build first-class warships. Canada may be competing with the United States in building ships for South American countries some day.

SUFFERED FROM VIOLENT CATHARTICS

The Warning of Mr. Geo. C. Fox Is One That Should Be Heeded by All.

Few men on the road are better known than genial George Fox, whose friends throughout the West are legion. In the following letter he expresses gratitude for signal services rendered by Dr. Hamilton's Pills. He goes on to say: "Until I used Dr. Hamilton's Pills and experienced their wonderful mildness and curative power, I estimated the value of every pill by its activity. Talking about this to a well-known physician I met on the train the other day, he explained there are different kinds of drugs that act upon the bowels, the most active being known as drastic. Except in extreme cases where the life of the patient depends upon speedy evacuation of the bowels, pills should never be drastic. Purgatives cause catarrh of the bowels and inflammation; their dose must be increased, causing even more harm. With such a clear explanation I could see why Dr. Hamilton's Pills are curative and not irritating, why they are mild, yet most searching.

"From my experience I recommend everyone that takes pills to give up the old-fashioned harsh, purging pill, and, instead, to use Dr. Hamilton's. They cure headache, biliousness, constipation, bad stomach, and keep the system in perfect condition."

BASIL KING,

Author of "Let Not Man Put Asunder," "The Steps of Honor," Etc.

Copyright, 1908, by Harper & Brothers.

She picked up the coins one by one and pressed them in her palm. Suddenly, before she could control herself, the tears rose and ran down her cheeks. As she dashed them away it seemed as if a figure rose before her through the mist they made. It was not the man with the brown beard and the gleaming eyes she had seen that night; it was the blind woman, who had gone on from court to court and from year to year till her father had been forced at last to "club her down."

CHAPTER III.

Of all the Trafford family it was Paula who had least of the clearness of vision and promptness of action that were so remarkable in her parents. Her thought worked slowly and somewhat illogically. She was not capable of large conceptions, and when she tried to trace for herself a definite line of duty it soon lost itself in vagueness.

She was conscious of this as she sat on the following morning looking over her correspondence. Everything in the room about her suggested wealth. She herself, in a soft, trailing garment that seemed to be woven of gossamer and the petals of pale pink flowers, looked as far removed from the practical side of life as a Princess de Lamballe or a Dauphiness Marie Antoinette. Her coffee, brought to her in the gold plate service kept in the hotel as a delicate attention to passing royalties, was beside her on the table, and she sipped as she read.

The duke's daily letter she glanced through first, laying it down with a sigh. When she had read the notes from her friends she separated the letters of invitation from those of premature congratulation on her reported engagement. Then she attacked the large pile of envelopes, the nature of whose contents she knew only too well. They were all requests for contributions of money to charities of various kinds, and she swept them aside with a gesture of impatience. In spite of herself her thoughts went back to the man she had seen last night—the man who was "evidently a gentleman," but who "looked poor."

For a man to "look poor" seemed to Paula the last touch of the pitiable. All the men with whom she had much to do had at least the outward air of riches. This man, on the contrary, wore the very stamp of one obliged to deny himself. Yes, that was it. She could see it now. It was not poverty that he expressed so much as self denial. The very clothes he wore were threadbare. She had noticed that detail, unconsciously at the time, and now it came back to her significantly. Well, he had a mother and a sister dependent on him. It was only too likely that he should be forced into personal privation. It was not the nobleness of the sacrifice that appealed to Paula. That was not the standard by which she had been taught to judge. It was rather the pitifulness involved in the necessity for making that kind of sacrifice at all. The men of her family put forth gigantic efforts and carried them out to gigantic successes. She understood that; she was used to it. But that a man of her own world, one who was on such footing as to be casually presented to herself—that such a man should be driven to pinching, sordid, petty economies in clothing and perhaps in food had in it something of the shameful. It put him at once, in her imagination, into the class of people without money—the seekers, the wheedlers, the beggars. She was not indifferent to poverty, but she could not help being distrustful of it. She had seen so much of it, fawning and whining, with the back rent and the hand outstretched! She could not remember the time when they (the Traffords) had not been tracked down by petitioners. They had moved among them like European tourists among Egyptian fellahin, with cries for backsheesh forever ringing in their ears. Whether from the individual or the institution, the demand for money never ceased.

She had come to give carelessly, with a kind of royal prodigality, but none the less with a certain contempt for those who asked of her. They wearied her; they goaded her. There were so many of them that she was tempted to class every one who had not huge means of his own among their number. For the minute she saw Roger Winship there. He was poor. That surely was a sufficient reason why he should put his hand out like the rest.

Then came the thought of what had made him poor. She went over again the discussion of last night. Her father had eaten the heart out of the Winships' business before they had ever heard of him. He had laid out his plan of campaign to ruin them five or six years ahead. What did it mean? What could she do? Could she do anything? Was there a right as well as a wrong to the situation?

She leaned her head on her hand and tried to think, but the complex questions at issue were of the sort that baffled her intelligence. Her mind could only shift aimlessly about, as in a labyrinth, where all the paths led to nothing. She felt herself beating about in despair in search of a way when Mrs. George Trafford came tripping in and pointed out the direction.

She had knocked lightly at the door, but had entered without waiting for an answer. She, too, was in a morning costume, but one significantly unlike Paula's. It was of white linen, belted in at the waist with pale blue. It was neat and trim and cleared the ground, setting off her small figure to perfection.

"Good morning, Laura," Paula said rather wearily.

"Good morning, dear," Mrs. Trafford returned briskly.

They kissed each other in a pecking fashion, and Mrs. Trafford sank into the nearest chair. No one could see her without being sure that she was the sort of woman to go to her point at once.

"I simply had to come to you, dear, before you had a chance to go out. I've been so distressed about the conversation of last night. I've told George that he shouldn't hurl things at you like that."

"What things?" Paula demanded, holding herself erect and flushing.

"About your father, dear. You might easily misunderstand"—

"I should never misunderstand to the extent of thinking he had done wrong," the girl said haughtily.

"No, of course not. But I know exactly how you feel, because I've had fines of feeling that way myself."

"You mean"—Paula began and stopped abruptly. Her eyes clouded, and the tiny furrow marked itself between her brows as she gazed straight before her, trying to shape her thought.

Mrs. Trafford leaned back in her chair and waited. She was a pretty woman, with a cold, clear cut daintiness of a statuette in biscuit de Sevres. When George Trafford married her it was a surprise to every one but herself. A western girl, the daughter of a doctor in a small country town, she had the western ability to meet poverty just as when it came she had the western readiness to accept wealth. She had not looked for wealth—certainly not such wealth as George Trafford's—but she knew her capacity to fill any position, and she entered upon her new career with plenty of self confidence.

The marriage was something of a public event, especially in the west. Even in New York there was some curiosity over the advent of a penniless country girl suddenly lifted to such a giddy height of fortune. Laura knew that people expected her head to be turned. They looked at least to be amused by that wild splashing in money supposed to be characteristic of those who have been hurriedly made rich, especially when their antecedents have lain beyond the Mississippi. But they reckoned without the personal knowledge of one who knew thoroughly her own mind. In coming to New York Laura felt herself raised up for the purpose of illustrating the correct and conscientious use of wealth.

By this time the social position of the Traffords in New York had been secured. Little by little, however, they had passed through the necessary stages of initiation, so that when Mrs. George Trafford made her entry it was into an uncontested place. In spite of the Mississippi, there was no reason why, as a bride unusually pretty and incomparably rich, she should not become one of that chosen oligarchy of ladies whose golden sceptres sway over the American metropolis.

And yet she had the courage to snub gently, courteously, but none the less decidedly to snub—those two great potentates, Mrs. Van Rensselaer Smith and Mrs. Stuyvesant Jones, when, through sheer kindness, they united their rival forces to come and tell her o. She should have no time for mere amusement, she informed them. The duties of her position would tax her strength to the utmost. Besides, she shrank from ostentation, from anything that made a parade of the mere power to spend. True refinement lay in making as little display as possible, didn't it? None, in fact, could know it better than themselves. The responsibility of wealth involved so many considerations for others that oneself and one's legitimate, one's natural, tastes were driven to the background.

The years were slipping by, and Laura was true to the principles with which she started. The only display she made was of the fact that she made no display. Her only ostentation was that of her lack of ostentation. She made no secret of the fact that she looked upon wealth as a heavy burden. "Mr. Trafford and I have no pleasure like that of giving away," she sighed not only in private, but in public. They did give away on a scale of superb munificence. By confining their gifts to what would refine, elevate and educate the masses at large they took care not to pauperize or encourage idleness. Schools, colleges, libraries and art museums had the chief benefit of their generosity. The grim want of individuals did not appeal to them, "because," as Mrs. Trafford said, "there were so few cases in which the after effects of charity were not deleterious." She liked to feel that her liberality had a sound commercial basis.

"You needn't be afraid to speak out with me, Paula, dear," she said encouragingly when the girl had been a long time silent. "As I've told you already, I've been through it all, and I want to help you. Before I married George I'd heard lots of things about Uncle Trafford that—well, that rather shocked me."

Again Paula lifted her head haughtily, but Laura hurried on.

"I had to reason everything out before I could see how right he was. If I hadn't been able to come to that conclusion I could never have accepted George. Now, here's a principle which, George says, people in our position must never lose sight of—you can't go behind the law. If the law is on your side you must be right."

"But can't the law be outwitted?" Paula asked ponderingly. "It seems to me I've heard of that."

"I believe it can, but George says Uncle Trafford never tried to do it. That's where he's been so able."

"Did he—tell me frankly, Laura, please; I know he didn't, but I must ask you—did he, in your opinion, ever do anything that wasn't honorable?"

"George says," Mrs. Trafford answered slowly, "that business is a good deal like whist. Each player holds his portion of the cards, out of which he's permitted to win the game by any means short of cheating. It's acknowledged beforehand that there's no place in the play for mercy or unselfishness. Now, dear, your father is an amazingly clever player of the game. He can win it when his opponents hold all the best cards and more than half the trumps. It isn't his place to consider them. It's his duty to take the tricks."

"But if it's skill to bring trouble and worry and want to some people and to others—to us, for instance—millions more than we can ever use"—

"There's no such skill as that, dear," Mrs. Trafford argued in a virtuous tone. "From the beginning of history wealth has always been a stewardship, and it has gone into the hands of certain stewards. If you are a steward it's much more important to fulfill your stewardship than to question the means by which you were appointed."

"But," said Paula doubtfully, "could not part of the stewardship be to make reparation?"

"Reparation isn't as easy as it looks, dear. It's not only a matter of giving,

"You needn't be afraid to speak out with me."

but a matter of taking. When one side is willing to offer it the other perhaps isn't ready to accept it."

"But if it were money? Anybody would accept money."

AN ECHO OF RECEPTION

To Dave Hartley After His Defeat of Jimmy Reynolds Sounds in Division Court

A faint aftermath of the big demonstration given Dave Hartley, after his defeat of Jimmy Reynolds, was a case this morning in the adjourned session of Division Court. Mr. R. Gibbs, the Water street liveryman sued Mr. Geo. Stevens, who was Hartley's manager at the time of the walk, for four dollars cab fare, and Mrs. Stevens was included as co-defendant in the suit.

The case came up before Judge Hayeke on Friday, and Mr. Stevens denied being in Gibbs' stable or giving any order for cabs. Mr. Gibbs held that Stevens ordered a cab for the station and one for the Oriental hotel, which met Mrs. Stevens and Mrs. Hartley there after the supper on the night of Hartley's return.

The case was again enlarged till to-morrow morning.

Mr. G. W. Hatton appeared for Mr. Gibbs, while Mr. Stevens' interests were looked after by Mr. R. E. Wood.

Police Court Cases

Two Sunday drunks were each fined $5.00 at the police court this morning. Both were arrested last night.

JUDGMENT TO-MORROW.

Judgment in the Butcher case was further reserved until to-morrow morning.

GREAT ARRAY OF MUSICAL NUMBERS

Numerous Song Successes in "The Girl Question" Here on Good Friday

The next attraction at the Grand Opera House will be H. H. Frazee's production of "The Girl Question," a musical play by Adams, Hough & Howard, authors of "The Time, the Place and the Girl," and is along the same lines of human interest, embellished by dashing songs and dances and pretty chorus girls. There is side-splitting, fun resulting from witty dialogue and humorous situations, as well as an absorbing plot. The chorus contains forty-eight Blue Ribbon show girls, and the $1,000 beauty "broilers." The production was staged by Mr. George Marion, which is a guarantee of success.

The time table of the musical numbers of "The Girl Question," the successor to "The Time, the Place and the Girl," which comes to the Grand for two performances Good Friday, is as follows: Opening chorus, 8.15, "Be Sweet to Me, Kid"; 8.25, "Waltz With Me Till I'm Dreamy"; 8.35, "There's no Place Like Home"; 8.48, "It's Bye-Bye, Pal"; 9.07, the second act, "The Old Buck and Wing"; 9.22, "I Like to Hear You Call Me Honey"; 9.35, "When Eyes Like Yours Look Into Eyes Like Mine"; 9.50, "The Imitation Craze"; Anna Held Girls, George Cohan Boys. Act three, "I Hate to Work on Monday"; 10.20; and "Do Something," 10.30; the Phantom Chimes 10.37.

HALLEY'S COMET

The following are notes made of Halley's comet at the time of its appearance in 1835;—

"At last it came, the much talked-of and long looked-for comet. Papers after papers appeared before its appearance, and computations had been made to the greatest degree of minuteness. I myself bought four of these publications. One observed, one looked, as much as the powers of the eye would permit. One was told: 'To-night it must be visible, it has approached us another few million miles, near such and such a star it will be found according to the astronomers.' But for all that it could not be seen with the naked eye. Of course by means of good telescopes it had been seen for some time, although very faint. The appointed time (5th Oct., 1835) came, when it was to be near the earth, but no comet was to be seen, and many gave up the hope of seeing it. There then appeared in the newspapers an article by Capt. Boguslawsky, of Breslau, wherein Oct. 12 was given as the time of the nearest approach to the earth. (This captain had already in 1834 published the computations for this comet, but it appeared that they were being crowded out by other computations whose authors believed that they had obtained the only correct results.) It was soon shown that Boguslawsky was right in every particular.

"At last, on 11th October, the comet was visible to the naked eye, and as predicted by Boguslawsky, near the star Dubhe, the hind wheel of King Charles' wain (Great Bear.) It was finest on Oct. 13. The tail was very long, although faint. It was regretted that this time it reached the nearest distance to the earth before perihelion, for as a rule, as is well known, the tail attains its greatest brilliancy on the return passage from the sun. According to Boguslawsky's computations, the comet was to take quite a different path among the stars than predicted by the other astronomers, and he was right. It was still visible on the 17th and 18th Oct. The nucleus was still bright but the tail scarcely visible. The following nights it was no longer visible to the naked eye, which was due in part to the increasing light of the moon, and also to cloudy sky."

parts of the riding were appointed to the Dominion Conservative Convention to be held in Ottawa. The delegates from the city will be appointed at a meeting to be held shortly after Easter. Election of officers also took place on Saturday.

The chair was occupied by Ald. Phelan, in the absence of the president, Mr. James Kendrey, and among those who made short speeches were Messrs. J. H. Burnham, R. N. Scott, J. T. C. Land and Ald. Buller. All spoke most hopefully of the outlook for the Conservative party.

The representation was particularly large and strong from the country, and the sentiments expressed showed the strength and confidence of the party in this riding, never to have been greater.

As the work of electing delegates from the country was so complete it was felt that the same work from

BYERSVILLE RESENTS A FOUNDATIONLESS RUMOR

Mr. T. H. Crowley, one of the largest ratepayers of the progressive hamlet of Byersville, in conversation with a Review reporter to-day, indignantly denied that Byersville ever had any idea of joining Peterborough. He said the rumor was without the weakest fabric of foundation, must have come from a very irresponsible source and should never have been seriously considered or given any publicity.

He pointed out that the taxes would be considerably higher for Byersville if a union with the city took place, and that the residents of Byersville were thoroughly satisfied with the able administration of the North Monaghan County Council. Mr. Byers stated they had never asked for any special concessions from the North Monaghan Council, but was sure anything reasonable requested would be readily granted.

"DO AS YOU PLEASE" RELIGION IS CURSE OF PRESENT GENERATION

Rev. Dr. Langfeldt Speaks of Two Kinds of Protestantism—People Stay in Bed When They Should be Attending to Their Religious Duties.

That there were two kinds of Protestantism, and two kinds of Protestants was the mainspring of some pertinent remarks made by Dr. Langfeldt in the course of his sermon at St. Luke's church last night. There was a good kind and a bad kind, and the line of demarcation was sharply drawn by the rev. gentleman. The right kind of Protestants were those who protested against any doctrine that would dethrone Christ from His throne as the only mediator between God and man, that would take from Him His great office of High Priest and only priest, substituting therefore beliefs contradictory to the Word of God. This Protestantism was the right kind, and would exhibit itself in loyal adherence to religious duties. The Protestantism of the other sort, which had become the curse of the present generation, which, after all, only adopted entertainments and sentimentalities for real religious duties. The Protestant of that kind would lie in bed on the Lord's Day when he should be in the House of God he would interpret the Word of God to suit his own ends and get offended when the church would call upon him to consider his duties to God the chief concern. The Protestant of that mind, when not having his own way, would sulk and make himself the judge of those who for logical reasons would differ from him. He would stay away from church if his fads or fancies would not receive that recognition which in his religious conceit he thought he was entitled to. With all the liberties enjoyed resulting from the proclamation of the Gospel of Christ the ultra-Protestant did not appreciate the liberty with which God has made him free, and turned his religion into a mere religious license, in other words, to "do as you please."

There was neither discipline, nor self-denial, nor obedience, in that kind of Protestantism which had become a mere cloak to cover up absolute indifference and carelessness. Whatever the differences might be that separated the Roman Catholics from those, who through faith in Christ and justification by faith in Christ, believed they could enter into the presence of God independent of bishop or priest, it would do no harm to the Protestant cause if Protestants would take heed of the noble example displayed by the Roman Catholics in their loyalty and devotion to sacred duties.

Dr. Langfeldt said in conclusion that unless there was a revival in Protestantism of the second kind, it would extinguish the light and power of the Protestant religion. He exhorted the people to be more in earnest, more faithful and more ready as a matter of duty to let Christ and their duty to Christ occupy the first place in their life.

She told of the great work that had been done in the foreign mission fields, and also dwelt on the crying need of additional workers and more money to carry on one of the most important causes of the Christian church.

FISHING AND HUNTING IN THE DOMINION

The advertising department of the Canadian Pacific Railway has issued a handsome booklet entitled "Fishing and Shooting." It contains over eighty pages and is handsomely illustrated with cuts showing hunting and fishing scenes in different parts of the Dominion. The booklet has an immense amount of information about hunting and fishing in Canada that will prove interesting to all lovers of rod and gun.

WILD DUCKS STAY AT MINDEN ALL WINTER

A Lindsay paper has a nice little article about wild ducks remaining at Bobcaygeon in the winter, but if the writer had been at Minden he could have seen as many as eight lovely large wild ducks at a time, in the open water of the river, right in the village, nearly any time during the winter. Nobody molested them, and they became so accustomed to the traffic at either side of the river that they were often mistaken for tame ducks.—Minden Echo.

How a Bear Fishes.

Few people have had the opportunity of seeing a bear feeding—that is, in his native state—and fewer still have seen him fishing. But fish he does, and in it he displays an amount of patience and dexterity that is amazing. He will lie motionless upon an overhanging log or bank with paw poised and little beady eyes attentively scanning the water. Salmon and trout are his chief delight, and, should one come near enough to the surface, he is snapped out on the bank with a flip and a twist, and vanishes in Bruin's capacious maw.

A Nautical Explanation.

The officers were on the quarter-deck looking at a comet and noticed an eager discussion among the crew forward. The captain called one of the men aft and asked him what was the subject of discussion.

"We were trying to make out what that there thing was," replied the man, pointing to the comet.

"And what do you imagine it is?"

"Dunno, your honor, but Bill Jones here, as knows most things, says as how it's a star that's sprung a leak."

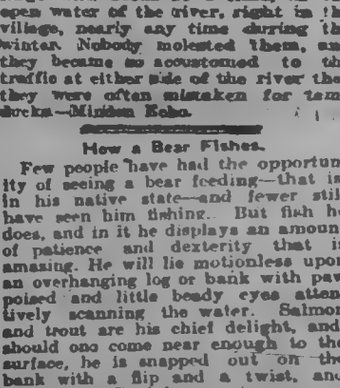
Exhausting.

"Don't you," said the earnest young woman, "sometimes have thoughts that are beyond your powers, of expression?"

Percy—Yaas. I fwequently have thoughts that are vewy hard to expwess, and the worst of it is that when I get them expwessed I cawn't help wonderwing why I want to all that twouble.

The Fire Engine.

Why is a fire engine in operation an anomaly? Because it plays while it works.



FUR TRADE TRAGEDIES

PROFITS WERE IMMENSE, BUT SO WERE DANGERS.

Unfriendly Indians Were the Greatest Peril of the Fur Traders of a Century Ago—Explorers Were Scholars and Scientists, But the Traders Were Out For Plunder, and Their Crimes Were Many and Ruthless.

In the early days great profits accrued from this fur-trade. During the three years following 1784, and not including the cargoes secured by the operations of Capt. Mears, 5,800 otter skins, valued at $160,700, were taken on the British Columbia coast and sold in China. From 1799 to 1802 inclusive, 48,500 skins were secured, which at an average of $30 a skin represented a value of one and a half million dollars. One celebrated trader named Sturgis, states that in a single voyage he had collected 6,000 skins, and that in a single day he had purchased 560 of prime quality. Where such enormous profits could be made, no wonder the trade was prosecuted with vigor and, it must be said, often without scruples or regard for the rights of the natives.

Many of these early fur-traders were men of very different stamp from the explorers who had preceded them. The latter, representing for the most part, the Government of Great Britain, came in search of geographical knowledge. They were not tempted to wrong or cruelty by greed. They found on the whole the natives peaceably inclined, and they left them friends. The one object of the traders was to secure cargoes, and in securing them the difference between right and wrong was often overlooked. Liquor was supplied the natives and the inevitable debauchery followed. Often the hostility of the natives was roused and tragedies were enacted, as dark and bloody as any that ever formed the object of sea-faring tales. The recital of the chief circumstances of a few will indicate the character of those early years of the fur-trade on our Pacific coast.

It will be remembered that when the Spaniards withdrew from this coast and left it to Great Britain, the early port of Nootka, on the western coast of Vancouver Island, was taken possession of by the native chief Maquinna. In 1803 the port was visited by the ship Manchester of Philadelphia, having on board a rich cargo for barter with the natives. Seven of the crew deserting, placed themselves under Maquinna's protection. Shortly afterwards they attempted to desert to another chief, but were captured and put to death with great cruelty.

Another remarkable tragedy of those early rough, and often lawless, days of the Pacific coast fur trade was that of the ship Tonquin, which took place at Clayoquot Sound, on the southwestern coast of Vancouver Island. The Tonquin sailed from New York in September, 1810, with supplies for John Jacob Astor's famous trading post, Astoria, on the Columbia river. In the following March the Tonquin reached Astoria, and having discharged the part of her cargo destined for that port sailed northward to Clayoquot Sound, whose shores were inhabited by a powerful tribe of savages, known as the Wahen-ishes. Captain Thorn, a hard, tyrannical, obstinate man, commanded the Tonquin, and for his first officer, he had Alex. Mackay, who is will be remembered, had accompanied Alex. Mackenzie on his memorable trip across Western Canada, through the Rocky Mountains and down to the Pacific Coast.

No sooner had the Tonquin anchored off Clayoquot than natives in canoes came out to her in large numbers. They were allowed on board, and in the most friendly manner proceeded to barter furs for merchandise. But the apparent friendship was feigned, as Captain Thorn was informed by a native who had been engaged as interpreter. He told Thorn that the tribe was ill-disposed and intended attacking the ship on the following day. Thorn's obstinacy proved his ruin, for he refused to take advantage of the interpreter's warning. Of the entire crew not one man escaped and the story of the massacre was carried to Astoria by the interpreter two years later.

Following the early explorations of British Columbia, and especially explorations carried on along the coast, comes the fur-trading period, which extended over many years, and in which adventurous and often lawless men were engaged. Great profits were made in this trade, for the fur-bearing animals were plentiful and their pelts, obtained in barter at low prices from the natives, found a ready and exceeding lucrative market both in China and Europe. With good luck the fur-traders soon accumulated fortunes.

The greater part of these furs was obtained from the sea-otter, a powerful animals, sometimes four feet in length and weighing ninety pounds. In describing this animal a trader of those early days wrote: "A full grown prime (pelt), which has been stretched before drying, is about five feet long, and twenty-four to thirty inches wide, covered with a very fine fur, about three-fourths of an inch in length, having a rich jet black, glossy surface, and exhibiting a silver color when blown open. Those are esteemed the finest which have some white hairs interspersed and scattered over the whole surface, and a perfectly white head. . . Otters are sometimes seen many leagues from land, sleeping on their backs on the surface of the water, with their young ones reclining on their breasts. The cub are incapable of swimming until they are several months old. The dam will not leave her young ones in the moment of danger, and, therefore, shares their fate. . . They are unable to remain under water longer than two minutes"

To-day the sea-otter has almost entirely disappeared from the coast of British Columbia. Writing in 1894, Alex. Begg, in his interesting history of the Pacific Coast Province says: "The number now caught on the coast is very limited."

BLOWING BOTTLES.

Processes Through Which Even the Most Ordinary Must Go.

Although the oldest bottles known were made of skins, glass bottles containing wine are represented on Egyptian monuments which are more than 4,000 years old, while as early as Pharaoh of the Exodus there were bottles made of bronze, silver, gold, porcelain and alabaster, which from their superior workmanship and elegant design go to prove that even at that period the art of bottle making was by no means in its infancy. The early history of the bottle is somewhat meager, owing no doubt to the fact that the true bottle has never been a thing of much beauty, except in a few rare instances, but rather a humble vessel of no intrinsic value.

Bottles are made to-day in stupendous quantities and are of all sorts, sizes and descriptions. In the manufacture of a common bottle either sand, soap boiler's waste, brick clay or other materials, according to locality, are used. Having been run down into a molten mass, the metal is skimmed, and the first operator, known as the "gatherer," takes a little of the glass on the end of a heated pipe. When this has cooled somewhat he again dips his pipe into the glass, having "gathered" in the two dips sufficient to make a bottle. This he hands on to the "blower," who as he blows through the tube rolls the metal on a stone, thereby fashioning the bottle neck. The roughly-shaped mass is then placed in a mold and the operator continues to blow until he has brought it to the required form. After this the bottle is handed to the finisher, who by touching the neck with a small bit of iron dipped in water completely severs it from the pipe. He attaches the pontee, an iron instrument tipped with molten glass, to the bottom of the bottle and thus gives it the usual rounded shape. This pontee may be used for from twenty to twenty-four dozen bottles. Then, warming the bottle at the furnace, the finisher takes a small quantity of the metal on what is known as a ring iron and, turning it around the mouth, forms the ring seen at the top of the neck. Taking the shears, he trims the neck. In the centre of one blade of the shears is a piece of brass tapering like a cock, which forms the inner mouth, while the other blade has a piece of brass fastened to it, for the purpose of shaping the ring. A boy lifts the completed bottle on a fork, and it is taken to the annealing arch, which contains about ten or twelve gross of bottles placed in bins one above the other. These are the processes which even the cheapest and most ordinary bottle has to go through. So it can well be imagined what an infinitude of care and trouble is needed to produce a bottle of the finest grade.—London Globe.

Partial Forgiveness.

A farmer, believing himself to be dying, sent for a clergyman and somewhat shocked that good man by the offhand, easy way in which he announced his fitness to die. Pressed upon certain topics, particularly upon the question of forgiveness to his enemies, he said he forgave everybody who had injured him, "except Johnny Smith."

John had played him such a trick about the sale of a certain cow that the farmer declared nothing should make him forgive him. Impressed by the exhortations of the clergyman and moved by fear of the consequences of dying unforgiving and unforgiven, he turned to the minister and said, with an air of satisfaction at having hit off a solution of the difficulty: "All right. Jest as you say. If I die I forgive him, but if I live, by jiminy, he'd better look out!"

A Cat Operation.

"I saw something to-day that pushes the limit," said a young married man who had just returned from the cat and dog hospital. He had been there to take his wife's pet cat, that had broken her leg.

"What was that?" naturally the wife asked him.

"A cat that was being treated for a mole on its nose. There wasn't a thing on earth the matter with the animal except that it had a tiny mole. The owner of the cat, a fashionably dressed young woman heavy with furs, said it spoiled the animal's beauty. Whoever heard of such a thing? Torturing a poor cat just to have a mole removed from its nose."

RESERVE HORSES FOR WAR.

Switzerland's Method of Preparing For Rapid Mobilization.

In Switzerland the state is part owner of horses used by reserves. It purchases a remount at three and a half years old, and the soldier pays half the cost of the horse to the government, together with the difference between its cost and the price that the horse fetches at auction, for all horses are sold by auction to the men.

After every year of training the government refunds one-tenth of the original half cost to the man, and at the end of ten years the horse becomes the absolute property of the soldier. In this manner the soldier is not only always well mounted, but as he keeps his horse with him at his home his mobilization problem is of the simplest nature.

The average price of these Swiss troop horses is about £45, says Bally's Magazine, and as most of these horses are imported from Ireland and north Germany their price is considerably higher than it would be in Great Britain. Thus the state secures the services of a horse for an annual outlay of about £4 10s. But there are certain other expenses which must be included in this estimate, such as the cost of the establishment for remount depots, etc., which raises the total cost of horses for the Swiss government to about £8 12s. a year.

Insurance Companies Lose About $125,000.00 by the Wreck at Spanish River

Double Liability for About Twenty-five Persons

A loss somewhere in the neighbourhood of $125,000 is what the Accident Insurance Companies estimate the wreck at Spanish River bridge means to them.

They figure that about 25 of those who met death carried Accident Insurance, and the average insurance, according to the tables, is $5,000. In case of death in a railway disaster there is a double liability, making the figure $10,000, or $5,000 to be more conservative.

Their loss may total more than that, for the commercial travellers, a number of whom were killed, usually carry very heavy insurance. In addition, some of the companies make the policies payable on the death of the wife while travelling, though the policy is taken out in the husband's name. In such cases they pay the husband the same amount as they would have paid the wife were the husband killed.

We issue the BEST Accident and Sickness policy offered to the public.

As Shown by Labor Department—75 per cent Higher Than in 1907

The results of a special investigation by the labor department into the wholesale prices of grains and fodder during the past twenty years are published in the Labor Gazette and make interesting reading. While the course of the different commodities has varied somewhat it has been found that in general the lowest point was reached in the years 1896-1897, since when there has been a pronounced upward movement. This became particularly marked in 1907-08 the past year sustaining the high level reached in 1908, namely, approximately 75 per cent. above the average price of the last decade of the nineteenth century.

In order to compare the course followed by the prices of the several commodities a table of relative prices has been compiled. These numbers show for each commodity the percentage which the average price of the commodity from year to year was of the prevailing average during the decade 1890-1899. Thus in the case of barley, No. 2, Ontario, the number 121.5, under the heading 1890, means that the average price of the grade of barley specified during the year was 22 1-2 per cent. higher than the average price during the decade 1890-1899.

In the following table the price in 1890, the lowest intervening price and the price in 1909 are given in that order:

Barley, malting, western, 1890, 174.8; lowest, 67.8; 1909, 169.9.
Barley, No. 2, Ontario, 123.5, 62.2, 145.1.
Bran, 110.6, 54.9, 182.2.
Corn, No. 3, yellow, 105.8, 57.0, 164.6.
Hay, 94.8, 79.1, 135.0.
Oats, No. 2, white, western, 140.6, 67.2, 133.3.
Oats, No. 2, white, Ontario, 126.2, 68.7, 150.7.
Peas, No. 2, Ontario, 105.2, 75.9, 158.4.
Rye, No. 2, Ontario, 98.9, 71.3, 140.0.
Shorts, 110.2, 66.6, 162.2.
Straw, 101.6, 78.5, 133.8.
Wheat, No. 1, Northern, 109.5, 79.2, 140.5.
Wheat, No. 2, white, Ontario 122.5, 76.2, 143.0.

Doctors Condemn Oily Liniments

The Public are Warned to Be Careful of These Strong-Smelling Oily Liniments Containing Harmful Acids, Ammonia, Etc.

Many people have clung to the old-fashioned idea that a thick, greasy liniment is the best kind. Doctors say not—and they know.

Recently a number of these white, oily liniments were analysed, and they were found to contain an enormously high percentage of harmful acids, and such irritating chemicals as ammonia, etc. For the moment they may cause a warm sensation when first applied, but their continued use never cures rheumatism, and only deteriorates the skin, sets up inflammation and causes endless trouble.

When a doctor warns you to quit using a white, oily liniment—do so. He knows that a thick liniment can't penetrate, can't sink through the pores and reach the seat of the pain.

When asked his opinion a few days ago, Dr. Roberts stated that he considered a strong, penetrating, pain-subduing liniment such as "Nerviline," to be superior to any of the white, ammonia liniments. In his twenty-five years of practice he had witnessed cases of rheumatism, sciatica, and lumbago that simply would not respond to ordinary treatment—but Nerviline cured them. The same physician also spoke of the great advantages of keeping a preparation like Nerviline in the house always, because of cramps, diarrhoea, stomach disorders, earache, toothache, headache, and such minor ailments. Nerviline is a first-class cure. There is scarcely an ache or a pain, internal or external, that Nerviline won't cure. In thousands of homes no other pain-relieving medicine is used. Fifty years' continued success and the endorsement of the profession are proof that Nerviline is the liniment for the home.

ST. PATRICK'S INFLUENCE

On the Lives of the Irish Worshippers in the True Faith and Redemption of Ireland

In an eloquent and carefully studied discourse, Rev. Father Keeley, of Lindsay, spoke at St. Peter's Cathedral last night, in the highest appreciation of the wonderful life work and notable example of St. Patrick, the patron saint of Ireland, and the founder of the true faith in the isle which is now referred to by the Holy See as the fairest daughter of the church. The address was marked by convincing force and logic, the encouraging story to all Catholics of the transformation of Ireland from a heathen land of Druidism to a Christianized and Catholic country, making an inspiring and timely theme.

A special orchestra, consisting of Miss Maggie Doherty at the organ, Mr. Jos. Minicetto, cornet, and the Misses Doris, violins, played a medley of Irish selections prior to the opening of the service, and also at the conclusion of devotions. The orchestra played with fine spirit and sympathy. Miss Lavina Hallihan sang "St. Patrick's Day" with splendid expression, and she and Mr. Harry Quinlan also took the solos in "O Salutaris," in a most acceptable manner.

Father Keeley, at the commencement of his address, said that the congregation had assembled to study the life of the patron saint of Ireland, and to consider the part he had played in the world's history.

The life of St. Patrick was to be looked at from a supernatural viewpoint. It was always the custom of all countries to venerate their heroes of the past, to hold them up as models that the people might study their virtues and follow their examples. To-day we have found the memory of St. Patrick preserved after so many centuries we must conclude that St. Patrick was blessed of God. In all English-speaking countries and wherever the Irish were assembled, the saint was still praised by the great statesmen and by the ministers of the House of God. The speaker then interestingly traced the history of Ireland previous to the birth of St. Patrick.

Even under the Druids Ireland had a high state of civilization, when England, be it remarked, was still in a condition of barbarism. One of the misrepresentations of the present time was that the Irish were cruel in their warfare, but this was not true, for the Irish, while they have always fought for their principles and convictions, had never been cruel in their methods.

The early life of St. Patrick was sketched, in the course of which his arrival in Ireland was told of, and the incidents of his persecution and bondage dealt with. God showed him His light, and he returned to Ireland after his escape from bondage, and took up the priesthood and became the great apostle of the Irish people.

Almighty God in the past, when His people were in danger of losing the true faith, had raised up Abraham and his people and later, when the same danger was imminent He raised up St. Patrick and his people. St. Patrick set upon his work immediately and bravely attacked paganism from the front and won over its leaders and later the humbler followers in the ranks. Eloquent tribute was paid the patron saint of the Emerald Isle by the preacher, who said his magnificent work in the conversion and redemption of Ireland was without precedent in later day religious history. The preacher drew a graphic picture of the appeal of St. Patrick to the Druids assembled in Tara's Hall, when the Saint told them of the beauty of the Catholic faith and of the cleansing and saving power of the religion of Jesus Christ.

There was no people that had received the revelation of the true faith and understood the supernatural in religion like the Irish. And they had held their faith, despite years of oppression and persecution.

About 100 members of Div. No. 1 A.O.H., Peterborough, attended the cathedral in a body. They were marshalled by Mr. James J. Hickey, the county president.

SNIPS ON SHROVETIDE.

What They Used to Do on St. Pancake's Day In Merrie England.

Nowadays, if it were not for the appearance on our tables of the succulent fritter, most of us would be quite oblivious of the occurrence of Shrove Tuesday. But in the days of our grandfathers the case was very different, and many were the curious and time-honored customs which marked the day.

Most curious, perhaps, of all these Shrovetide customs were the great football matches. The game, however, was scarcely of the kind which would be recognized by the Football Association, partaking as it did more of the strenuous character football as played in America.

Frequently, the majority of the able-bodied men of a town took part in these Homeric contests, and the field extended several miles.

Thus, at Perth, a match used always to be played between teams representing, respectively, the Bachelors and Benedicks of the town. The kick-off was at two o'clock, and the struggle raged until sunset, the aim of the married men being to deposit the ball in a certain hole in an adjoining moor, while the goal towards which the bachelors made was a pond.

A similar struggle used to take place between two of the rival parishes in Derby, and the side which won the day was wont to proclaim the fact by fastening the ball, decked with colored ribbon, to the spire of the parish church. Even the "gentler" sex were not to be excluded from the delights of Shrove Tuesday football, and a match used to be played every year between the matrons and spinsters of Inverness.

As in the matches of the men, the players were allowed to adopt such means they pleased of propelling the ball, and as tackling was usually more than vigorous, casualties occurred.

Even in the country districts the matches must have been something of a trial to those who possessed no sporting tastes; while in London the dangers attached to the practice were so great that the civic authorities issued on order, forbidding, under heavy penalties, the playing of football in the streets.

In the old days, Shrove Tuesday was the occasion of many quaint observances at schools, especially in the North of England. Thus, at some schools, it was customary for the pupils to try to "bar out" their teachers, and if they succeeded in this endeavor they were allowed to claim an indulgence of a day or two's extra holiday. As some compensation, however, to the master, every pupil had to pay a small sum of money, known as a "cock penny," which went towards the salary of the teachers.

Perhaps the best-known school custom still extant is that of "tossing the pancake" at Westminster, the pancake being afterwards scrambled for, and the appropriator of the largest portion rewarded.

A rather brutal sport, which is now, fortunately, extinct, was that of "cockshying." By means of a long piece of string, one end of which was fastened to its leg and the other to a stout post, the unfortunate bird was confined within a narrow circle, while the competitors threw short, thick sticks at it from a distance of about twenty yards. The man who was successful in knocking the cock over, and in securing it before it could regain its feet, was the winner.

Welsh Miners May Strike.

Cardiff, Wales, March 21.—The prolonged negotiations over the new wage agreement between the South Wales coal mines owners and miners were broken off Saturday night, and a strike of 200,000 miners is regarded as inevitable on March 31.

This strike will affect altogether one million workers, including railway and dock employes and others dependent upon the collieries.

Windsor's Postal Boom.

Windsor, March 21.—A decided increase in the business of the Windsor postoffice for the past two years is, according to the belief of Postmaster Wigle, due to the fact that so many new firms have located in the city during the last few years. The business has almost doubled since 1907, when the revenue was $37,000, and for 1908 it is $50,000.

DEATH CAME SUDDENLY TO SERGT. MAJOR E. G. RUNDLE

It was with general regret that the news of the death of Sergt.-Major E. G. Rundle, of Toronto, and for many years a well-known and highly respected resident of this city, was received yesterday. The deceased had been ailing for some time, but the immediate cause of his death, which came suddenly, was heart trouble. He had reached his 72nd year, having been born in the town of Penryn, Cornwall, England, in September, 1838. He received his education in the national and private schools and on July 15th, 1856, enlisted with a battalion of the 17th Leicestershire regiment. From that time he had a long and varied military career, during which he distinguished himself on more than one occasion, while in active service. The interesting story of his life he told in his book, entitled, "A Soldier's Life," which was published about one year ago. After coming to Canada, he took part in the Trent affair and the Fenian Raids and following the close of the American Civil War, he was a member of the Red River expedition. In 1867 he was appointed gymnasium and drill instructor of the local Collegiate Institute and held this position for eleven years. He was also an active member of the Peterborough rangers and held the position of Sergt. Major. Prior to making his home in this city, he resided in Toronto, where he was instructor and lecturer at the military school. In 1902, he returned to Toronto and had resided there until his death.

He is survived by two sons, of Toronto, and William, of this city. The funeral will be held in Toronto.

LINDSAY LIBRARY OPEN ON HOLIDAYS

Lindsay, March 19.—At last night's council meeting the question of the opening of the public library on holidays came up for discussion.

His Worship Mayor Begg said he always maintained that the institution should be kept open on such occasions. The library shelves could be screened off and the public given use of the reading material on the tables.

Reeve Jordan wanted to know if it was opened Sunday, and if not, why not?

Mayor Begg said that the old library was opened all the time, but the public could not get into the new institution until nearly noon.

A resolution will be passed at the next meeting of the council requesting the library board to keep the library open on public holidays.

THEATRICAL PAPER TREATS OF MISSION OF THE STAGE

"The Billboard," one of the best theatrical journals of the English-speaking world, having offices in the United States, England and France, prints the following timely and convincing editorial:—

"We have been foremost in contending that the stage had a mission which it could not consistently ignore; that in its influence for good or bad in the world it outranked all other agencies, and the manager who placed on the board a play which failed to point a lesson or minister to the real needs of humanity, charged his soul with a responsibility which was fraught with grave consequences. As individuals, none of us, have the right to assist in tearing down the social fabric by corrupting morals, and while not believing the millennium near, we believe it possible to improve conditions by doing needed house-cleaning in order that the present generation may not transmit the undesirable things which all decent people now realize are a blot upon present day theatricals.

We are also not slow to sense the fact that play producing is and must be reckoned a commercial proposition, and as such the things that pay are those which survive. But while realizing that fact to its fullest extent, we submit that the public is led and does not necessarily set the pace. If given wholesome plays of heart interest, rarely does the public fail to respond. Too often the reason for failure is due to bad management and other causes rather than the merits of the play itself.

During the past season the theory which we contend for has often received practical demonstration, and several plays have been made to stand out, towering above the mass of mediocre and worse, as shining examples. The following story, related to us by a churchman of one of the Central States, is a striking instance, for the truth of which he vouched. In a certain Episcopal diocese, which, for obvious reasons shall be nameless, there was a church needing a director to direct its spiritual destinies. Assigned to the charge was an active clergyman, who assumed the burden, but for some reason did not remain true to the faith and was displaced. Another clerical gentleman succeeded him, and before many months he, too, was found wanting, and the parish found itself again without spiritual direction. By this time the state of the parish was deplorable, and the Bishop, desiring to bring order out of chaos, determined to send one of the best men in the diocese. The gentleman upon whom the choice fell knew well the desperate state of affairs and was undecided as to his duty in the premises. About that time, together with another clerical brother, he had an opportunity to witness a well-known present day play, "The Servant in the House." The lesson of the play was so striking that he turned to his companion, and remarked, "My course is plain." The charge was accepted by him, and plunging into the work with vigor, he within a short time accomplished a wonderful transformation, a little later dying as a result of the herculean efforts required of him.

This instance is not cited for the purpose of inspiring martyrdom, but to make evident the influence which good plays wield in the uplift of the human race.

WESTERN MEMBERS GETTING SICK OF RAILWAY CHARTERS

Vigorous Objections Are Made to Route Maps of Railways Being Approved Without Any Work Being Done —Clarry's Outstanding Account.

Ottawa, March 22.—During a discussion on several western route maps before the Minister of Railways yesterday, representatives of the Western provinces objected vigorously to a route map being approved without any work being done.

They stated that if the farmers' wheat could be carried on "projected" lines, the west would have more transportation facilities than are required.

Hon. George P. Graham, in discussing the point raised, pointed out to the representatives of the railway companies present that the day would shortly come when blanket charters would not be granted and companies would not be allowed a choice of several routes. They would be allowed to choose one route, and they could either use it or abandon it, before they would be given another location.

He thought the railway committee, and especially the people, were getting tired of proposals to build, followed by delays from two to twenty-five years.

Before James Conmee's bill to incorporate the Rainy River Radial Railway Co. passed through committee, it was given its third reading.

Hon. Mr. Graham said he was against giving to railway companies the right to expropriate water powers. A predominant feature of all these railway bills was the endeavor to acquire water powers and the right to expropriate. It was time to call a halt.

J. G. Turriff (Assiniboia) supported this.

Mr. Turcotte's bill to incorporate the Northern Quebec Colonization Railway Co., and Mr. Gerard's bill to incorporate the James Bay and Eastern Railway Co. were allowed to stand.

Four bills which came from the Senate, to incorporate the Ottawa, Montreal and Eastern Railway Co., respecting the Canadian Northern; to incorporate the Pine Pass Railway, and respecting the Richelieu & Ontario Navigation Co., were sent back to the standing committee, as the amendments made are important.

During question time in the House Mr. Lennox was informed that the amount of the account of L. F. Clarry of Peterboro, outstanding for payment, is $597, of which $249 is for eight claims respecting flooded lands.

Mr. Monk was informed by Sir Wilfrid Laurier that no petitions had been received by the Government praying for the creation of a Canadian navy.

Major Sharpe, North Ontario, learned that the pork commission's report on the industry in Europe would be made public shortly.

MADE RESTITUTION AND IS LET OFF

Woodstock, March 22.—Louis Chatterson, who escaped from the police after confessing to firing vacant houses and robbing firemen, was captured on Sunday night on returning to his boarding-house. He pleaded guilty yesterday morning, and was let go on suspended sentence, promising to pay back the money and pay expenses.

LAWYER MUST BE ENGAGED

Brantford, March 22.—John S. Clark, complainant against several local men here in a charge of conspiring to destroy certain papers belonging to him, endeavored in the Police Court yesterday afternoon, to conduct his own examination of Detective Cockburn of the Canadian Detective Agency, who had been working for him, but the magistrate would not allow Clark to proceed.

Clark refused the services of the crown attorney, and was told he would have to secure a duly qualified lawyer as private prosecutor. He replied that he had the advice of eminent counsel that he could proceed with his own case, but a letter from the Attorney-General's Department did not support this contention. The case was finally adjourned, till he secures a lawyer. The case has been in progress for several weeks.

MINISTRY WAS BOMBARDED

Budapest, March 22.—Stormy as have been sessions of the Hungarian Chamber of Deputies, the Magyars yesterday outdid themselves and inkwells, books and other handy missiles were hurled at the heads of the Ministers until the latter took refuge in flight.

Both Premier Khuen von Hedevary and Count Sereny I., Minister of Agriculture, were struck by flying inkwells and their heads cut open. The latter may lose an eye.

The trouble had been brewing for some time, and the Premier and Ministry, unable to make headway dissolved the chamber by royal decree. This was the signal for a riotous outburst by the Oppositionists, who claimed that the dissolution was unconstitutional.

Montreal, March 22.—Owing to insurance losses on Canadian and American lake business, Lloyds' Register will send a representative to Cleveland, Ohio, during the summer months. G.T.R. Telegraphers Award.

Ottawa, March 22.—The Grand Trunk Railway, in reply to the award of the arbitration board on telegraphers' wages, offers to abolish, as far as possible, Sunday work, and in addition to accepting the minimum scale recommended by the board, will set aside, to be added to salaries above the minimum, a larger lump than the six per cent. recommended by the board, but not as large a sum as a general increase of Sunday pay based upon the present amount of Sunday work would give, plus the six per cent. recommended. In dealing, however, with the increases of salaries above the minimum, the company proposes to compensate for Sunday work.

BRYCE'S SERVICES AT CANADA'S DISPOSAL

London, Eng., March 22.—The tariff negotiations between Canada and the United States were the subject of questions in the House of Commons yesterday, certain members desiring to know whether the Government proposed to assist Canada, "in view of the American threats to penalize Canadian imports, and the danger of a tariff war."

Premier Asquith stated that the Canadian Government had been made fully aware that the good offices of the British Government and of Ambassador Bryce were at their disposal, but he declined to discuss the matter further, in view of negotiations that were proceeding.

Zimmerman declared he married only from love, but he accepted their money and left them when his ardor cooled. He married 11 women in one year.

Chicago, Ill., March 22.—All questions in dispute between the 27,000 firemen on western railroads and the railroad managers will be amicably settled, according to an arrangement reached yesterday through the aid of U. S. Labor Commissioner Neill.

The question of seniority or the promotion of old-time firemen over new firemen and the question of representation by the union of firemen who have been promoted to be engine men are to be compromised before any arbitration is attempted.

The demand of the men for an increase in wages of 12 1-2 per cent. is to be submitted to arbitration under the Erdman Act.

FORTY-FIVE KILLED IN WRECK ON THE CHICAGO-ROCK ISLAND RAILWAY

Passenger Train is Derailed in Narrow Cut Near Green Mountain, Iowa, and Cars Are Telescoped—Wreckage Covered With Blood.

Marshalltown, Ia., March 22.—Forty-five persons were killed and forty were injured, many of them fatally, in a wreck four and a half miles north of Green Mountain, Iowa, yesterday on a Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific passenger train.

Many passengers were apparently killed outright, but the suffering among the injured was terrible. Arms and legs were cut off. The wreckage was almost crimson with blood. A few of the passengers were found still living with a rod or a splinter impaling them in the wreck.

Among the dead is John Bambridge of Hartford, Norfolk County, Ont.

Other identified dead are: Milton Parish, Cedarvile, Mo.; Jacob Nasholz, conductor; A. Ross, fireman; Ross Charter, brakeman; Archie Price, colored porter; R. A. Robinson, engineer; L. A. Parris, Cedar Falls, professor Iowa State Teachers' College; Mrs. Lewis, Valley Junction, Ia.; M. W. Eggers, Waterloo, Ia.; F. D. Lyman, Waterloo; N. C. Heacock, West Liberty, Ia.; Anthony P. Phillips, Waterloo; Walter P. Bunt, Waterloo; Fred L. Colon, Washington, Ia.; H. L. Pennington, Galesburg, Ill.; T. B. Beets, Cedar Rapids; C. G. Evans, West Branch, Ia.; Mrs. Walter Davis, Waterloo; F. F. Fisher, West Branch, Ia.; Wm. Fleck, Vinton, Ia.; Ingebret L. Tangen, Northwood, Ia.; Earl T. Main, banker, Williamsfield, Ill.; Caesar C. O. Hoff, Minneapolis; Andrew J. White, Vinton; Lauren Allschweger, Ogden.

Unidentified: Ten women, two men and two girls.

A little freight wreck on the Rock Island Sunday night at Shellsburg was the indirect cause of the disaster. The Rock Island line was blocked and it became necessary to detour over the Great Western tracks. Two trains sent from Cedar Rapids to Marshalltown, were coupled together and the two locomotives placed in front of them. Both locomotives were running backwards.

The combined train consisted of 15 cars. A Pullman was next to the locomotives. Then came a smoking car and a day coach. In the latter were many women and children.

The doubled train was going about 35 miles an hour when it reached a cut five miles from Green Mountain at the top of a hill. In this cut the tender of the front locomotive jumped the track. This threw the head locomotive into the sides of the narrow cut. The sides were soft and the engines went into it and stopped almost instantly.

The sudden stoppage ditched the second locomotive, and the momentum of the heavy train crushed the day coach and the smoking car against the heavy Pullman. The smoking car and day coach were telescoped and hardly an occupant of either car escaped death or injury.

While the last ten cars remained on the track, the shock threw the passengers from their seats.

Uninjured passengers began removing the dead and injured. The dead were taken to an adjoining pasture and laid on the grass. A relief train from Marshalltown, carrying surgeon and Coroner Jay, arrived two hours after the crash. The dead were crushed and mutilated in many cases beyond recognition. Heads were severed from bodies, arms and legs were cut off. Here lay a bleeding trunk; there a head with the agony of death still on the countenance. Several bodies are so mutilated that they may never be identified.

BAD FLOOD ON GRAND RIVER

Phenomenal Rise in Waters and Galt Homes Are Deluged.

Galt, March 22.—The River Grand went on a rampage yesterday, rapidly and unexpectedly rising seven feet, washing over the retaining wall of the Knox and Central Church manses. The high water is causing much damage and discomfort. It is the highest for years, and only that the ice went with the first flood averts a most disastrous freshet. The cellars of the Turnbull Co., Cowan & Co., and the axe factory are flooded, and the factories shut down. The postoffice, Merchants' Bank, Sloan's grocery and the Imperial Hotel are also suffering seriously, and the Imperial bowling green is covered. Residents on the east side south of Water street, below Main, are seriously inconvenienced, the water extinguishing the furnaces. Around Blair many acres of farm lands are inundated.

The auditorium is 62 by 85 feet, and the stage 35 feet wide and 15 feet deep. The orchestra pit will seat five players, with room for a piano. The stage furnishings cost $3,000. The house is provided with four exits. The dramatic section of Gonzaga College will formally open the theatre late in April.

FERGUS FARMER LOSES A FORTUNE

Guelph, March 22.—William McCallister, a well-to-do farmer of Fergus has had the distressing experience of losing a wad of $8,000 in bills, which so far, the Guelph police have been unable to find for him.

He was in the city on Friday afternoon with the money in the inside pocket of his fur coat. He thinks he dropped the small fortune somewhere between the Grand Trunk station and the Priory Hotel, and blames a hole in his pocket as the cause. Taking a room in the Priory he went to sleep on his overcoat, serene in the belief that the money was in the inside pocket. In the morning he found he was "stony broke."

The police were notified and a reward offered, but as the money is nearly in $50 and $100 Trailers and Imperial Bank bills, and as he does not know the numbers of any of the bills, it is considered he has only a mere chance of recovering it.

MR. FIELDING CANNOT MAKE ANNOUNCEMENT ON TARIFF

Gives it to be Understood, However, That the Outlook is Hopeful for an Avoidance of the Threatened War Between the United States and Canada.

Ottawa, March 22.—Hon. Mr. Fielding brought back with him from Albany yesterday no announcement as to the details of his conference with President Taft on the tariff question beyond a repetition of the statement that the whole question is still one of "friendly negotiations." It is learned, however, from sources in close touch with the situation, that behind the passing clouds of threatening tariff war there is already visible a clear sky, promising better trade relations between Canada and the United States than have obtained for over a quarter of a century past. Instead of mutually disastrous tariff reprisals there are now growing indications of a coming reciprocity in trade between the two neighboring countries in which there may be a mutual lowering of the tariff barriers to the exchange of the products which each country needs, and which will convert a situation ominous with injury to mutual trade interests and to neighborly good feeling into a situation from which each country will derive profit, and which will insure harmony for years to come.

Hon. Mr. Fielding stated to-day that by agreement with President Taft, pending some definite conclusion of the negotiations now under way, all the details as to the proposed solution of the difficulty must be regarded as confidential, and that an announcement could not be expected for some days yet.

While the danger of a tariff war after March 31st is not yet avoided, it can be stated definitely that the outlook in Government circles here is now regarded as distinctly hopeful.

President Taft's message to the Canadian people, in which he makes the statement that he will endeavor to promote "in such ways as are open to us better trade relations between the United States and Canada than at present exist," is held to be tantamount to a promise that he will urge upon Congress a special law giving Canada freer access in the American markets for her natural products, such as farm and dairy exports, cattle, lumber, etc., for which this country unsuccessfully contended in the reciprocity negotiations of 1874, 1888 and 1897. His message was the most conciliatory and friendly official statement from Washington in the matter of trade relations which has been received for many years, and practically marks a turning point in the relations which for years past have been decidedly strained.

A reciprocal trade arrangement between the two countries cannot, of course, be made off-hand. It will probably take weeks or perhaps months of negotiations. But the way has been paved. The discussion of the past few weeks on both sides of the line as to the evils which would result from a tariff war has served to emphasize some of the anomalies of the present situation in regard to the restriction of the natural courses of trade between the countries. The campaign of education has had a good effect.

Two references in regard to the tariff negotiations between Hon. W. S. Fielding and President Taft at Albany, N.Y., were made in the Commons yesterday afternoon.

One of those references was the voice of a Sunday observer, for Haughton Lennox (South Simcoe) asked the Finance Minister if the invitations of President Taft, which was accepted by the Government, was for a Sunday conference at Albany.

Said Mr. Fielding: At the invitation of the President of the United States, I visited Albany, and had the honor and the pleasure of meeting that gentleman on both Saturday and Sunday. We discussed matters which, I trust, will work for the peace, order and good government of these two nations. There could be no better Sunday work.

Dr. Sproule (East Grey) enquired if Mr. Fielding had any information to give as to the negotiations with Mr. Taft over tariff matters.

Mr. Fielding: I can only say to my hon. friends that I do not think that the good purpose that he has in view, and that we all must have in view, would be advanced by making any statement at the present time.

"The matters in dispute remain as matters for friendly negotiation, and beyond that it would not be expedient to make a statement at this moment.

"At an early date I hope to give the House fuller and better information."

A strong impression prevails amongst the members of Parliament here that matters are shaping themselves towards a reciprocity treaty between Canada and the United States.

MR. SIFTON'S IMPROVEMENT

Everyone must have noticed the remarkable improvement that seems to have taken place in Hon. Clifford Sifton. While Minister of the Interior he certainly did not conserve the natural resources of Canada. His administration of that Department was notorious on account of land deals and timber deals that enriched Liberal favorites at the expense of the Canadian people, but since he has ceased to be a member of the Laurier Government, and especially since he became chairman of the Conservation Commission, which was created with a view to preserving the natural resources of Canada, he seems to have been endeavouring to make a new record.

His speech at the opening meeting of the Conservation Commission was admirable. He is opposing the scheme of American promoters to grab the water power of the great St. Lawrence River, which the Laurier Government tried to force through Parliament without even allowing members to examine the plans, and he has strongly condemned Canada's canal scheme to grab water powers between Port Arthur and Lake Winnipeg.

Apparently Mr. Sifton is trying now to make some amends to the Canadian people for his failure to guard the natural resources of the country in the people's interest, when he was Minister of the Interior in the Laurier Government.

A TARRIFF MISSIONARY

Rev. J. A. Macdonald, chief editor of the Toronto Globe, has been in Washington and Albany trying to prevent a tariff war between Canada and the United States. On Sunday he telegraphed to the Globe from Albany a long dispatch setting forth the friendly attitude of the President towards Canada and stating that it is his deliberate purpose to promote better trade relations between Canada and the United States. Mr. Macdonald reports President Taft as saying:—"I am profoundly convinced that these two countries touching each other for more than three thousand miles have common interests in trade and require special arrangements in legislation and administration which are not involved in the relations of the United States with countries beyond the seas."

In conclusion, Mr. Macdonald says: "My own hope is that a solution will be found, with better things to follow."

The idea seems to be that in return for the good will of President Taft, Canada should make tariff concessions to the United States and hope for better things to follow. Judging from editorials that have appeared in the Toronto Globe from time to time Rev. J. A. Macdonald's idea of "better things" is different from that of Canadians in general. He would like to see American manufactured goods and farm products coming freely into Canada. He thinks that even our present low duties against United States imports are too high.

The Toronto Star, a Liberal newspaper, gives some information about the Rev. Mr. Macdonald's pilgrimages to Washington and Albany. It appears that he first went to Washington, saw Mr. Taft and volunteered to go to Ottawa and try to induce Sir Wilfrid Laurier to go to Washington to see the President. On reaching Ottawa he found that Sir Wilfrid Laurier could not go, but succeeded in getting Mr. Fielding to visit Albany for the purpose of having a Sunday conference with President Taft on the tariff situation. Rev. Mr. Macdonald was present at the meeting and the President immediately after being introduced to Mr. Fielding, turned to the editor of the Globe, slapped him heartily on the back and said, "Well, I see you brought us your man all right."

If Rev. Mr. Macdonald succeeds in persuading the Canadian Government to make tariff concessions to the United States, President Taft will certainly have reason to be grateful to him, but the people of Canada will not pass a vote of thanks.

The fact is Canadians in general no longer want closer trade relations with the United States. They have come to the conclusion that it is wise policy to keep our money in circulation at home by buying goods made in Canada and that if we can't get what we want at home we should buy within the British Empire.

Canadians have expended enormous sums of money in constructing railways running east and west through our own Dominion. Our Governments, Dominion and Provincial, have guaranteed the bonds of railways running east and west and an immense amount of public money has been invested in the Intercolonial Railway and the Government section of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. The three great transcontinental railways of Canada, the Canadian Pacific, the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Canadian Northern, will all have steamship lines of their own to carry Canadian products across the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

Such trade relations between Canada and the United States as Rev. Mr. Macdonald and President Taft would like to bring about would take the traffic away from our own railways and steamship lines and turn it into channels running north and south. Some of our railways would become bankrupt and Canadian taxpayers would have to pay the interest on bonds guaranteed by the Dominion and Provincial Governments. Many Canadian workmen would be thrown out of employment and extra employment would be given to workmen in the United States. Our farmers would be deprived of a profitable home market for their products and have to depend upon the distant markets of the United States. Our commercial independence would be destroyed and we would become dependent upon the whims of the Government at Washington.

Rev. Mr. Macdonald had better return to his regular editorial duties on the Toronto Globe.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The naval debate in the Canadian House of Commons is over, but the Canadian people should not allow the question to be dropped. Australia and New Zealand will both have dreadnoughts that can go into the front line of battle in case of war. Canada will have ships useful only as auxiliaries, which will have to be protected by the dreadnoughts of Britain or the smaller colonies. Canadians should not rest content until Canada is placed at the head of the British colonies in this regard, as it is in population, wealth and natural resources.

Canary as Memento.

A great yachtsman and equestrian, the Earl of Dudley, Governor-General of Australia, has been on a visit to Ceylon. His lordship, who was on Lord Roberts' staff during the South African War, has had several narrow escapes from drowning. He has ridden his own horse to victory at the Leopardstown races, toured round the world, and studied the outposts of Empire at close quarters. Lord and Lady Dudley are both extremely fond of animals and pets, and they have a canary which came into their possession in a decidedly curious fashion. Several years ago Lord and Lady Dudley spent an evening with a party of friends at a certain London variety theatre. One of the performances was that given by some Japanese jugglers, in one of whose tricks a pretty canary was employed. The canary appeared to be in a reckless mood this particular evening, and, escaping from its masters, fluttered away to alight on Lady Dudley's lap. Lord Dudley, unable to resist the appeal, offered to buy it, but the manager of the theatre gallantly requested her ladyship to accept the bird as a memento of the evening. Lord Dudley ingeniously constructed a temporary cage out of a program, and the canary was borne off in triumph to its new home.

Exporters.

George Campbell bought for Morris & Co. of Chicago 850 cattle, all for export, as follows: Steers, at $6 to $6.75; heifers, $5.75 to $6.25; bulls, $5 to $5.75.

A. McIntosh bought 42 exporters, at $6.40 to $6.75.

Butchers.

Choice Easter cattle sold from $6.50 to $6, but only one brought the latter price; loads of good, $5 to $5.35; medium, $5.50 to $5.80; common, $5 to $5.40; cows, $3.50 to $5.35 per cwt.

Milkers and Springers.

Veal Calves.

The general run of calves sold at $5 to $6 per cwt., but a few Easter calves brought $9 to $10 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs.

Prices were higher all round; sheep, ewes, $4 to $5.50 per cwt.; rams, $5 to $4 per cwt.; yearling lambs, $6.50 to $8.25 per cwt.; spring lambs, $7 each, and good lambs would bring more money.

Hogs.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, March 21.—(Special.)—At the Montreal Stock Yards, West End Market, receipts last week were 2265 cattle, 350 sheep and lambs, 3475 hogs and 1675 calves, while offerings this morning were 1000 cattle, 200 sheep and lambs, 1500 hogs and 500 calves. The weather was fine and the Easter trade one of the most satisfactory ever held here. The quality of the cattle was all that could be desired, the bulk consisting of choice Ontario stall-fed steers and heifers, and, considering the supply, the prices demanded were not out of the way, when the state of trade for the past two months is considered, and the fact that American buyers have been thru the best sections of the country bidding 6½c to 7c per lb., for export stock in the barns. Prices show an advance of ¼c to ½c per lb.

The attendance of local buyers was large and there were also several good butchers from Quebec and Ottawa. Choice steers and heifers sold at 6½c to 7c; good at 6¼c to 6½c; fairly good, 5¾c to 6c; fair, at 5½c to 5¾c; medium, at 4¾c to 5c, and common at 4c to 4½c per lb.

There was some demand from exporters for cattle and a few head were picked up to complete shipments at from 5c to 6¼c per lb.

Hog prices show a further advance of 40c to 50c per cwt, due to continued small supplies. According to what drovers say it is now difficult to secure any in some sections of the country, and the indications are that they will go to the $11 mark. Sales of selected lots were made to-day at $10.75, weighed off the cars.

The market for small meats was strong and prices are steadily working higher. A feature was the good demand for calves, at 5c to 8c per lb., and lower grades at from 4c to 4c. There were a few very choice spring lambs offered, which met with ready sale at from $12 to $15 each, and smaller ones at $8 to $10. A few small lots of sheep were sold at 5½c to 6c per lb.

The Giant's Strength

...By...

BASIL KING,

Author of "Let Not Man Put Asunder," "The Steps of Honor," Etc.

Copyright, 1909, by Harper & Brothers.

"No, anybody won't accept money, strange as it may seem. There are people—we may not know many of them—but there are people who put money a long way after pride. I've got a good mind to tell you something that George and I have always kept from you. It would show you."

Paula looked her interrogation.

"It's about your father."

"Do tell me, Laura, please."

"Well, the beginning of it was a long time ago, when we lived in Turtonville, Wis. It was ages before I ever imagined I should marry one of the Traffords. Your father at that time had some trouble out there with a man named Marshall. I don't know exactly what it was, but it was something like what we were talking of last night."

"Not the Winships?" Paula cried painfully. "There wasn't another case like that? Tell me, Laura!"

"No; it wasn't a bit like that. It was just something in the same line. What I'm coming to is this: Marshall was the rich man of Turtonville. He had something to do with coal, of course, and he had four daughters, all very plain. One of them was an old maid from the time I can begin to remember. Well, when the trouble started your father began pushing Marshall and pushing him and pushing him till at last he pushed him out of business altogether. Then Marshall shot himself."

"Oh, Laura, don't tell me any more!"

"It was all Marshall's fault, dear. Your father didn't make him shoot himself. That was perfectly gratuitous on Marshall's part. But it's about the old Miss Marshalls that I want to tell you. After their father died and they were so poor they had to turn their hands to anything for a living. They did sewing and made cake and put up pickles and painted doilies—"

"Oh, how dreadful, Laura!"

"And they did pretty well till the eldest one fell ill. That was the very summer I was married, and one day, in the winter after, I happened to mention them to your father."

"Oh, I'm so glad! I know he was good to them."

"Yes. He sent them a thousand dollars anonymously through their minister. He gave strict orders that his name was never to be known, but when they had spent a couple of hundred of it the foolish clergyman told them. That was enough. The sick one got up out of her dying bed and went to work. It was as if her pride had healed her. For two years they toiled and saved till they had got together as much as they had spent. Then they returned the full thousand to your father. He told me about it, and I know it cut him to the quick. He's forgiven them, though great heart that he is. And he's asked me several times to do what I can for them."

"And you've done it, Laura?"

"Indeed, I have. I couldn't send them money, of course, after their treatment of Uncle Trafford. Besides I never run the risk of pauperizing any one. What I've done has been to give them work. They sew beautifully, and I've managed to let them have all the house linen both for Newport and Tuxedo without a suspicion on their part that it was for our family. Naturally I had to do it through a third person, for they wouldn't have touched it if they had known. Their work is really exquisite, and I find that, even after paying the express charges, it is cheaper than it would be in New York. Now, the third person of whom I spoke, if you must know who it is—it's that Miss Green who works in the College settlement in Bleecker street. She wants me to take a lot of their painted doilies, but I feel that I must draw the line at that."

"I'll take them," Paula said instantly. "I'll take as many as they can paint if they go on painting all the rest of their lives."

It was this sort of impulsive generosity that contradicted all Mrs. Trafford's well thought out principles of benevolence. It lacked the element of the practical good of both parties as well as the sense of the responsibility of wealth.

"Then you'd be making a mistake," she said bluntly. "You'd be wasting both your own money and their time. There are three useful things that they can do—they can sew, they can make cake, and they can put up pickles. Why on earth should they want to do painting?"

"But painting is a useful thing," Paula interrupted, a little warmly.

"Exactly. And that brings me right to the thing I came in to say. I know what's been on your mind ever since last night. I know it, because it's been on my mind too. I always feel for those cases where there's been a previous connection with the family, so to speak. I know it's Uncle Trafford's wish that we should make things as easy for them as we can. Now, why shouldn't you have this Mr. Winship paint your portrait?"

"Oh, Laura, I couldn't!" the girl cried, flushing.

"Couldn't? Of course you could. It's the thing to do. He could paint you and the duke and me and our little Paul, and perhaps I might even get George to sit to him. I suppose Aunt Trafford never would. Anyhow, he could do all of us, and we'd pay him very good prices—nothing fabulous, mind you, nothing of that kind, but what for him would be generous prices. Just think of all it would mean to him! It wouldn't be only the money, though that, of course, would be a great deal. It would be the reclame, the advertisement. It would pose him before the world. It would set him up for life. Then we should be rid of the worry of thinking about him. Of course I can see it would be a bore to you," she added as Paula still seemed to hesitate, "but people like ourselves, with the responsibility of wealth upon them, can't stop at a duty merely because it's a bore."

"You're a wonderful woman, Laura," Paula said at last, her eyes suffused with that Celtic softness which is midway between smiles and tears. "You've such good ideas and such sound ones I won't say that I'll do it, but I'll think it over. But if I come to it," she went on, stammering slightly, "you-mustn't think—that it is because I have any doubt of—of—father."

As she uttered the last words there came a sharp rap at the door and Paul Trafford himself entered.

CHAPTER IV.

He strode in with his characteristic air of command, and Paula, springing up, threw her arms about him. The two were always expressive in their affection for each other, but this morning there was in Paula's "Oh, papa!" a variety of emotions of which she herself could have given but a confused account. It was as if she had received him back again after the nightmare of having lost him. He clasped her to him, looking down at her with that kind of impressive kindness for which very strong faces alone have the capacity.

It was no wonder that she was proud of him—this handsome giant of over six feet three, before whom all the fast barred gates of life had yielded. Even age seemed powerless to lay more than the lightest hand upon him. His sixty-five years had deepened the lines on his rocklike face and brought a little gray into the mustache that, curving upward, revealed the set of the close lips, but they had done little more. The hair was scarcely silvered, and the eyes still had the vivacity of an eager, stern faced boy. They were the Trafford eyes—blue with black lashes and in his case with heavy, overhanging brows.

Paula slipped from his embrace, and they exchanged the usual morning greetings. Trafford kissed his niece and inquired for George and little Paul. It was clear to the two women accustomed to observe the slightest signs of his wishes, that he had come on some special errand, so Laura, after reminding Paula that she and the duke were to lunch with George and herself at Ciro's, made some excuse for running away.

Paula resumed her seat, while her father moved about the room with an unusual restlessness.

"That's a pretty thing you've got on," he observed, coming back to her side. "Aren't you looking a little pale today?" he continued, stroking her cheek. "What's all this?"

He turned over with a toss the letters of petition she had opened and with characteristic attention to small details ran his eye over them.

"You might send something here," he advised, "and there. I wouldn't pay any regard to that. You might inquire into this one, and of course you must see that that poor little French girl has what comfort you can give her. I'm going to Vienna," he finished abruptly.

"Oh, no, papa!" she pleaded. "Not now, not just now!"

"I must, dear. I've tried to get out of it, but there are very large interests at stake, and I'm obliged to go."

He drew a small chair toward her and sat down. With his arms folded on the table he looked across at her. Before that gaze her own glance fell. It was as though the mingling of strength and adoration in it were too much for her to support without flinching.

"Yes, dear, I'm obliged to go," he repeated. "I'm sorry it has to be now—just now. You know why, don't you?"

She lifted her eyes and let them fall again.

"I suppose I do, papa."

"I don't want to hurry you," he went on with what for him was curious timidity, "and I wouldn't on my own account, not for a second. But, darling, we ought to think of—of him, oughtn't we? Don't you think he's been very patient? It's over a month now."

"I find it very hard to decide, papa."

"Could you tell me why, dear? I might be able to help you."

"You'd like it very much, wouldn't you, papa?"

"Yes, but that isn't a reason for you," he answered promptly. "I want my little girl to marry to please herself, not me."

"And yet I can't help taking what pleases you into consideration—into deep consideration. And I've wondered a little, papa," she continued, looking up at him, "why you've been so anxious about this one when you've been so indifferent, if not opposed, to the others."

"I'll tell you, darling. I'll give you my point of view. But, mark you, it can't be yours; it mustn't be yours. From the very nature of things you and I approach this subject from different angles. First of all, I have to remember that I'm no longer a young man and that I have a great treasure to leave behind."

"But, papa, darling, I'd rather not think of it in that light."

"No, but I must. There's the difference of angle at once. If one of your brothers had lived or even one of your sisters, perhaps I shouldn't feel so keenly about it as I do. But you're all that's left to us"—

"Then why not keep me with you as long as possible?"

"We're not going to lose you. We shall never be far away from you at any time. Your mother and I have quite made up our minds to that. Life wouldn't be worth anything to me if I couldn't see my little girl when I wanted to—that is, within reason."

She leaned across the table and laid her hand on his, smiling into his face with shining eyes.

"And so, dearest, since my treasure is so great it would be a comfort to me as I go downhill to know that it was in safe, in very safe, hands. In the first place, he loves you. Of course you know that."

She nodded and let her eyes fall again.

"Then I think my little girl has, to say the least, a very sincere regard for him."

She nodded again, still with eyes downcast.

"And then he's not a man who would love today and forget tomorrow. He is essentially good, kind, loyal and devoted. Your mother and I would have none of that wretched uncertainty of parents who say to each other, 'Oh, I hope he will be good to her!'"

"Papa, darling," she broke in, with a choking of the voice, "couldn't I stay with you always and not marry any one?"

"Certainly, dear. There's not the slightest reason why you shouldn't be an old maid if you want to. But in the meantime let me go on. Wiltshire is not only a good man who loves you, but he's a very rich man."

"I shouldn't think that mattered," she said, lifting her head suddenly.

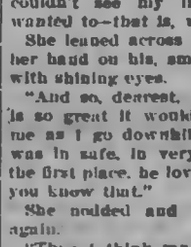
WANTS HER LETTER PUBLISHED

For Benefit of Women who Suffer from Female Ills



Minneapolis, Minn.—"I was a great sufferer from female troubles which caused a weakness and broken down condition of the system. I read so much of what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had done for other suffering women I felt sure it would help me, and I must say it did help me wonderfully. My pains all left me, I grew stronger, and within three months I was a perfectly well woman.

"I want this letter made public to show the benefit women may derive from Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. JOHN G. MOLDAN, 2115 Second St., North, Minneapolis, Minn.

Thousands of unsolicited and genuine testimonials like the above prove the efficiency of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which is made exclusively from roots and herbs.

Women who suffer from those distressing ills peculiar to their sex should not lose sight of these facts or doubt the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health.

If you want special advice write to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. She will treat your letter as strictly confidential. For 20 years she has been helping sick women in this way, free of charge. Don't hesitate—write at once.

A BIT OF ADVICE

First—Don't Delay; Second—Don't Experiment

Mrs. W. Huycke, of 311 Louis St., Peterborough, Ont., says:

"Mr. Huycke frequently suffered with backache. At times the pains in the small of the back would become so severe that he was unable to straighten himself up without much suffering. He could not stoop or lift anything of consequence, and his general health had been run down for some time. He had tried a number of different remedies, but didn't find relief until on advice of a friend he procured Booth's Kidney Pills at Wm. Medill's pharmacy and commenced treatment. He soon found relief. The pains left this back and he strengthened. He has had no return of the trouble since, and speaks very highly of Booth's Kidney Pills."

If you suffer from backache; headaches or dizzy spells; if you rest poorly and are languid in the morning; if the kidney secretions are irregular and unnatural in appearance, do not delay. The kidneys are calling for help. Slight symptoms of kidney trouble are but forerunners of more serious complaints. They should be given attention before it is too late.

Booth's Kidney Pills cure kidney trouble. They are recommended by thousands. Can Peterborough residents desire more convincing proof than the statement of a Peterborough citizen.

TENNYSON AND HIS FAMOUS POEMS

Last night the Young People's Guild of Knox church enjoyed a literary evening. Mr. Roy Laing was in the chair, and Mrs. H. J. Keith gave an interesting talk on Tennyson and his work. Tennyson, she said, was a deeply religious man, and some compared him to Milton. "Crossing the Bar" was written by him after the death of a very dear friend, Arthur Hallam. The poem was recited by Mrs. Keith, and several other famous works of Tennyson were dealt with.

At the conclusion of the talk a vote of thanks was tendered Mrs. Keith. Next Monday night a social evening will be spent, and the arrangements are in the hands of Mrs. W. A. Parker.

No Floods This Year

Citizens who reside along "Town" creek are congratulating themselves on the absence of floods this spring. Very few cellars have water in them, while last year a good deal of damage was caused in this way. As the bulk of the snow is now gone, it is not expected that there will be any flooding in the city.

STOLEN JEWELRY WAS HIDDEN AT JACKSON PARK

Strong Evidence Against Larry Kelly and He Was Committed for Trial—Pleaded Guilty Before Judge Huycke This Morning.

A strong line of evidence was produced by the prosecution against Larry Kelly at the seven o'clock session of the police court last night, and Magistrate Dumble committed the prisoner for trial.

This morning Kelly and his counsel appeared before his Honor Judge Huycke, and pleaded guilty to the charge of having stolen a quantity of jewelry from the sample room of the Oriental Hotel on the night of Wednesday, March 9. He will be further dealt with by Judge Huycke on Saturday afternoon.

According to the evidence, Kelly was enabled to open the door of the sample room with a key given him by George Venorman, at one time an employee at the hotel. The two men had been chumming together. Venorman was arrested at Indian River and brought here to give evidence. After the lockets and watch cases were stolen the two took them and hid the bag containing the articles at Jackson Park. It was Vanorman who told P. C. Newhall of the hiding place and took him to the spot, where they were recovered.

Kelly pawned one of the watches and gave an assumed name. This watch and the remainder of the jewelry was identified at the police court last night by a member of the firm of the Knox Co., Toronto, and the traveller from whom they were stolen.

TWO TENDERS FOR MARKET TOLLS FOR CURRENT YEAR

Property Committee Decides to Accept that of Walter Fisher Who Offered $855—Other Tenderer Offered $650—More Revenue for the City

If the recommendation of the Property Committee is adopted by the City Council, the market will this year be let to Walter Fisher, 493 Water street, who offers $855 for the privilege of controlling the market for the year commencing April 1st.

The tenders for the market were opened at a meeting of the Property Committee yesterday afternoon. Only two were received—Walter Fisher's at $855, and Dan McMillan, 569 Bolivar street, at $650. George Ball, who has been market clerk under the municipal control system, did not put in a tender.

The city clerk read a statement of the receipts and expenditures of the market for the year ending March 1st. The receipts were $1,315.65, and the total expenditure $860.81, leaving a profit of slightly over $450. The expenditure consisted of the clerk's salary, about $50 spent for cleaning the cattle pens, and about $15 spent on the scales, for testing and repairs.

On motion of Ald. Morgan and Bradburn, it was decided to accept the tender of Walter Fisher.

Ald. Duncan remarked that he thought Mr. Fisher would be a good man for the position.

Those present at the meeting were Ald. Duncan, chairman; Mayor Morrow, Ald. Batten, Ald. Bradburn, and Ald. Morgan.

SECRETARY OF BAND ASKS COMMITTEE FOR BANDROOM

57th Band Musicians Notified to Leave Armories—Property Committee Discusses Question and Makes Recommendation

At a meeting yesterday afternoon the Property Committee passed a resolution recommending to the City Trust Commissioners that the 57th Regiment Band be given the use of the band hall in the city building, on Simcoe street, and also the use of the adjoining rooms that are not required for storage purposes.

Mr. J. A. Harper, secretary of the band, and Mr. R. Mein, another member, waited on the committee, and Mr. Harper, who acted as spokesman, asked that the band be again given the use of the old band hall. The band had been notified by the regiment to vacate the band room at the armories, and Mr. Harper stated that no matter what agreement was reached between the regiment and the band, the band would never again go back to the quarters at the armories. They had been ordered out of a public building built by the people's money, although they had not been guilty of any insubordination or disobedience. In view of this Mr. Harper did not think the band had been given a square deal.

Mr. Harper also drew attention to the fact that the floor of the band hall required painting, and the walls re-papering.

On motion of Ald. Morgan and Ald. Batten, it was decided to recommend to the City Trust Commissioners that the request of the band be granted.

The question of making the improvements asked for was discussed by the committee.

PUNT UP-ENDED IN EDDY; ALMOST A DROWNING ACCIDENT

A drowning accident in the eddy above the new waterworks dam was narrowly averted yesterday afternoon about two o'clock. The Peterborough Lumber Company had sent up a gang of men in charge of Mr. John Thompson, to do some work in connection with the big drive of logs which have been held there since last fall, and while Alex. Long and Joe Graham were at work in a punt it up-ended, and Long was the first to find himself in the cold water. He made for the shore, but before reaching there Graham, too, had been thrown into the water and was about to go down for the third time when he managed to get hold of the end of a rope, which Long had thrown to him, after landing on the shore. Although there was a large number of men about at the time, none appeared to regard the affair seriously at first, and it is no doubt owing to the quick work of Mr. Long that Graham was brought to the shore a live man. Both men walked back to the city for a change of clothes, and were soon none the worse for their experience in the water.

INTERESTING MISSION TALK BY MRS. AIKENHEAD

To the Epworth League of George St. Methodist Church —An Appeal to Young People to Consecrate Their Lives to the Service of Christ

Before a large attendance, at the Epworth League meeting at George street Methodist church last evening, Mrs. (Rev.) Aikenhead, of Barrie, spoke interestingly, and with an earnestness that could not fail to make an impression on her listeners. The simple and eloquent manner in which she told of her early life's work in the wilds of Parry Sound, not for her own glory, but for the glory of Him who had called her, when only nineteen years of age, to take the message to those who were without it, may in the future meet with the purpose of the speaker—that of some young man or woman offering himself or herself for the missionary cause.

In introducing her subject, Mrs. Aikenhead explained that she had not been appointed to do missionary work by the Methodist church, but had been appointed by God. She had not made any study of theology, but the call came, and although her parents protested her mind was made up, and she had always been thankful to God for the opportunity to work for Him. In narrating the incidents in connection with the trip to the place which was to be her home, Mrs. Aikenhead told of how she rode in a stage from Gravenhurst to Bracebridge crowded with French-Canadians, and of how she found a friend amongst these rough men by catching sight of a copy of Pleasant Hours in a pocket of one of the passengers and speaking to him. From Bracebridge to the settlement in which she was to take up her work, she travelled in a cart driven by oxen. While making this journey she prevailed upon the driver to allow the animals to refresh themselves in the river. This was about four o'clock in the afternoon, and as a return for the kindness shown them the oxen remained in the water and, despite all efforts made to coax them out, remained there till eleven o'clock at night. Speaking of her first sermon, in the log church, the speaker told of how her father had on the first Sunday of her arrival, ended the morning service by telling those present that his daughter would preach at the same hour next Sunday. She told of how she had rebelled against doing this and of how she was so stubborn that her Bible remained unopened all that week, and of how the motto which hung in her room with the words: "I can do all things through Christ, who strengtheneth me," had at last showed her her duty, and caused her to relent and ask for forgiveness. When the time for this service arrived, she decided to tell of how Christ's great love in coming to the world. She prepared her story and then left her home, hoping that there would be no one at the meeting. The first person who she met was a grey-haired old lady, who had at one time been a Christian, but of late had lived an ungodly life, and on entering the church she found the place crowded with people. Next she told of how, after asking for a volunteer to help her with the Sunday school, a young man had offered to help her and he brought his cornet and led in the singing. For two months she preached to the people without any conversions. They had given up many things, but had not given themselves to Christ. Finally she decided to send in her resignation, and it was while walking to the church on the next Sunday that a little German girl caught up to her and told of how the heavy burden had been lifted. The little girl consented to go to the meeting Wednesday and tell of her conversion, and it was while on her way to the meeting that the old grey haired lady met her and also told of her conversion, with a request that the preacher go and see her husband. At the meeting she asked all the children to come to the next meeting, which would be a song service, and to bring their parents with them. A large number came, the men bringing lanterns with them to light the meeting place, and after a fifteen minute song service she told them of the great disappointment she felt in their not accepting Christ. The result of that meeting was that many got up and asked for forgiveness, and promised to give their hearts to God. Mrs. Aikenhead next told of how a little girl's death had brought the father and mother to the throne of grace, and of how an intended dance had turned into a prayer meeting, and the men who had always tried to work against her gave himself to God. This man later became the superintendent of her Sunday school. The speaker then went on to tell of the progress made, in which churches and Sunday schools were built, and of her work with the lumbermen and Italians. In her concluding remarks she appealed to the young people to consecrate their lives to His service.

At the conclusion a vote of thanks was moved by Mr. G. W. Powell to the speaker for her addresses on Sunday and for her kindness in remaining over to speak to the league, and this was seconded by Mr. Melville McCarroll.

Crowded Aisles

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—I am not in the habit of finding fault and never criticize except when I think I am fully justified in doing so. But I would like to ask how can the inspector of local theatres reconcile the fact that the Peterborough picture shows frequently have patrons standing at the back of their houses and in the aisles when the law calls for them to be kept clear? In case of a fire or panic one would be liable to serious injury with such a congestion as one frequently sees in local theatoriums.

Yours truly,
CITIZEN.

Peterborough, March 22nd.

The Dog Nuisance

To the Editor of the Review.

Dear Sir,—I was pleased to see by the reports of one of the committees of the Council, as published in your paper a night or two ago, that they were going to recommend to the Council that a by-law be passed to prevent dogs from running loose on the streets. Now to my mind, Mr. Editor, if the council will pass this by-law, and then see that it is enforced they will earn the gratitude of the vast majority of our citizens. To many of us it has been a wonder why this matter was not taken up long ago. That dogs running at large are a nuisance must be admitted by everyone. There is, I believe, a by-law which prohibits cows, horses, pigs, etc., to be on the streets unless under control, and yet all these years the dog, which is more of a nuisance than all the others combined, has up to the present been allowed to do on our streets and public places, what if any other beast, or even a man or woman did, they would be impounded or sent to jail. If any man wants to keep a dog, by all means let him keep it, but keep it on his own premises.

CLAY CLASSED AS ROCK

Ottawa, March 2.—The Conservatives last week succeeded in extracting some remarkable information regarding the National Transcontinental. For one thing, it has cost so far, up to the end of 1909 ,no less than $67,890,000; and there is an enormous amount of work yet to be done. Not much over half of the grading has been done, and about one-third of the track laying.

The serious thing is that there is over-classification on all the line, on all of its 1,800 miles. The Minister of Railways gave information with regard to the progress in the 21 contracts into which the line has been divided. In every one of these there is exhibited a shrinkage of the earth, no common excavation. In nearly all of them the rock estimated have been enormously exceeded, though the work is anything but completed. Here are two examples:

No. 5, commonly known as the Willard Kitchen contract, is 73.6 per cent. completed. The government engineers estimated that this would be as follows:—

Solid rock, 252,893 yards, costing $378,810; loose rock, 371,224 yards, costing $349,928; common excavation, 1,224,284 yards, costing $293,825; total, $1,016,567. Although the work is not three-fourths done, the returns show:—Solid rock, 801,189 yards, costing $1,193,771; loose rock, 543,817 yards, costing $192,085; common excavation, only 163,828 yards, costing $39,318, total $1,425,176. Already there is an excess of $415,000 above the estimate, and there is much work yet to be done.

Contract No. 10, Macdonell & O'Brien's, West of Quebec, is 87.7 per cent finished. The Government engineer's estimate was:—Solid rock, 276,161 yards, which would cost $1,-164,241; loose rock, 278,552 yards, costing $139,276; common excavation, 4,508,480 yards ,costing $946,780; total $2,250,296. The returns so far show 2,849,232 yards solid rock, $4,274,748; 1,351,519 yards loose rock, costing $675,759; and only 1,552,351 yards common excavation, costing $325,989; total $5,276,496. And there is over a million dollar's worth of work to be done before the contract will be finished.

The taxpayer should bear in mind that this sort of thing is going on all over the whole system, from end to end.

Now, how was this worked? The Lumsden enquiry is showing it, desperately as the Liberals are trying to burke it. Bear in mind that Mr. Lumsden could not dismiss the engineers who did wrong. Bear in mind that when he found fault with them the Commission rallied to their support and gave him to understand that the engineers must be supported. Bear in mind that Mr. Lumsden resigned his $6,000 a year position rather than approve it. Now, this is the sort of thing of which he complained, and which accounts for the enormous rise in the cost of the line. What follows is sworn evidence. Before three first-class engineers, Collingwood Schreiber, B.B. Kelliher, Chief Engineer of the G.T.P., and Mr. Lumsden:—

Division Engineer Bourgeois, District "B," was interrogated by Mr. Collingwood Schreiber thus:—

Q.—Did you or your Staff, in any one case under your instructions, classify solid rock by percentage?

A.—Well, every cut is classified by percentage, that is where there is solid, loose rock, or common excavation.

Q—Do you consider that in measuring rock, according to the specifications?

A.—Yes.

Q—Have you ever given any instructions to classify by percentage?

A.—Certainly, I have given those instructions.

Q.—Do you consider that measuring?

A.—Yes, that is measuring.

Q.—In looking at a cut, could you say, well, there is 20 per cent. of common excavation, 50 per cent. of loose rock, and 30 per cent. of solid rock? Is that measuring?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Is that measuring?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Is that the way you did?

A.—We have done so in a few places.

Q.—Have you done so in many cases?

A.—Yes, probably.

Q.—Do I understand you in a great many cases?

That means that Mr. Bourgeois did not have his men measure the rock, loose rock and earth, but ordered that the contractor be paid for so much rock and so much loose work, whether it were there or not.

Again Resident Engineer McHugh, Section F, swore that when he found pure clay or cemented gravel he called it loose rock; and that when still softer earth was frozen he allowed a percentage of it as loose rock.

Resident Engineer Phillips, Section E, swore in effect that he faked his note books to deceive Mr. Lumsden. He swore first that he arrived at the quantities of solid rock and boulders by percentage. Then he was asked why he indicated "assembled rock" on his cross-sections. He answered that he understood that he had to do this to "balance percentage."

"As I understand you," Mr. Lumsden asked, "this assembled rock was merely a percentage you believed to be in the cut?"

A—That is correct.

Interrogated by Mr. Kelliher as to his method of locating the boulders or assembled rock, the witness replied, "We had to put in a percentage, the same way, in that."

Q—You had to keep within his (the chief engineer's) instructions? He would not accept percentage; you had to show exact areas of the rock?

A—We had to show them in our cross-section sheets.

Q—How did you locate the exact position of assembled rock, which you had previously turned in as boulders scattered over the whole country.

A—We could not locate them.

A—Yes, sir, for assembled rock.

Q—Did you or did you not measure each boulder for the solid rock and boulders?

A—No, sir.

Q—Did you measure each boulder for the loose rock returned?

A—No, sir.

Resident Engineer Miller swore he turned in frozen earth as loose rock—paid 60 cents a cubic yard for what should have cost 30 cents. Resident Engineer Bell admitted on oath that the loose rock he turned in was generally clay. District Engineer Poulin who was over these last-named engineers, and who replaced Major Hodgins when he refused to over-classify, admitted that he knew that this robbery was going on. More than that, he instructed his engineers to put in false returns, which would give the contractors double the money to which they were entitled. "I take full responsibility," he said, "for telling my engineers to return frozen material as loose rock."

Saved by Fireflies.

The gigantic tropical fireflies which swarm in the forests and canebrakes of most of the low lying West Indian islands once proved the salvation of the city of Santo Domingo. A body of buccaneers, headed by the notorious Thomas Cavendish, had laid all their plans for a descent upon the place, intending to massacre the inhabitants and carry away all the treasure they conveniently could, and had actually put off their boats for that purpose. As they approached the land, however, rowing with muffled oars, they were greatly surprised to see an infinite number of moving lights in the woods which fringed the bayou up which they had to proceed, and, concluding that the Spaniards knew of their approach, they put about and regained their ship without attempting to land.

The Wonderful Banana.

Some people believe that the banana was the original forbidden fruit of the garden of Eden. In any case it is one of the curiosities of the vegetable kingdom, being not a tree, a palm, a bush, a shrub, a vegetable or a herb, but a herbaceous plant with the stature of a tree. Although it sometimes attains a height of thirty feet, there is no woody fiber in any part of its structure, and the bunches growing on the dwarf banana plant are often heavier than the stalk which supports them. No other plant gives such a quantity of food to the acre as the banana. It yields 44 times more by weight than the potato and 133 times more than wheat. Moreover, no insect will attack it, and it is always immune from diseases of any kind.

CRAWFORD IN KILTS.

The Novelist's Remark When He Saw Himself as a Child.

One of the best known guides in the capitol at Washington used to be Colonel Jasper E. Snow, formerly a Kansas City lawyer, who always sat in Republican conventions and voted for Blaine as long as there was a Blaine to vote for.

Colonel Snow used to tell this little story of the late Marion Crawford.

He had met Mr. Crawford in Florence, Italy, and when the novelist came to Washington Colonel Snow was the first person who showed him the doors made by the novelist's father, Thomas Crawford.

These are the senate bronze doors on the eastern portico. They represent scenes connected with the Revolution and the founding of the government.

The panel representing Washington's reception at Trenton when on his way to his inauguration in New York contains among the populace portrait figures of the sculptor, his wife, his three children and Randolph Rogers, the sculptor of the main doors of the capitol.

The novelist, who had never seen the doors before, quickly identified his mother and father.

"Yes," said he, "mother used to wear her hair just like that."

Then, gazing at the largest child, a Fauntleroyish figure in kilt, with long flowing hair, he added speculatively:

"But I wonder if I ever really did look like that."

A DUCK HARD TO KILL.

The Screaming Walloon is Something of a Diver Too.

The screaming walloon is a hard duck to kill. Its hide is very tough and is thickly covered with feathers and down. Besides, the bird is a great diver, one of the kind that used to "dive at the flash" when hunted with the old arm that flashed when fired. It is of very little value for table use, being so tough. The only way to manage it at all is to skin it and parboil it in a big pot with plenty of water. The negroes make caps of walloon skins.

"They are great ducks for diving," says a well known Tred Avon river progger. "They can dive quicker, go down deeper, remain under water longer and come up farther away than any other duck that frequents our waters. I remember once I succeeded in killing a walloon, and, being short of game for the table, I determined to cook my bird. I got a negro to skin it, giving him the hide for his trouble. After being cleaned we put it in a great pot full of water and under it kindled a hot fire. After awhile I wanted to see how the cooking of my duck progressed and lifted the top off the boiling pot, but there was so much steam escaping I could not see into the pot and struck a match over it. The blamed walloon, sir, dived at the flash of the match. It disappeared and has never been seen since."

To Start a Tight Screw.

Lots of folks have tried to remove a stubborn screw from a piece of wood, a screw that won't budge at all, and have in the end given it up as a bad job. Well, if such a thing occurs again don't give it up, don't lose your temper or exert yourself, but try this recipe for removing the screw: Heat a poker red hot and then hold it against the screw head for a little while; wait a few minutes for the screw to cool down, when it will be found that the screw can be removed quite easily with the same screwdriver that just previously would not perform the work. The explanation is quite simple. The red hot poker heats the screw, and the screw expands and makes the hole it is in just a wee bit bigger. The screw then cools down and resumes its original size, leaving the hole in the wood a size too large—and there you are.

Interesting For the Husband.

A titled lady warned her new gardener that her husband had an irritating habit of disparaging everything he saw in the greenhouse and of ordering in a reckless manner new plants to be bought.

"But on no account humor him," she said. "Whatever he says, throw cold water on him or he will ruin us with his extravagance."

At this point the new gardener turned on her a white and startled face.

"Ma'amm," he said, "if he orders me to pitch every plant in the place on the rubbish heap I shan't ever have the pluck to douse him in cold water. Won't it do as well if I get a drain of warm water out of the boiler and let it trickle gently down his neck?"—London Tit-Bits.

Very Thoughtful.

Catarrhozone

Cures Permanently

BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, CATARRH

Throw medicine to the dogs. At best they are unpleasant, often useless. You are suffering from some disease of the throat, nose, or lungs. Doctors call it Bronchitis, Asthma, or Catarrh, or it is a slight or severe cold. Germs cause these diseases—they have a common root.

Catarrhozone destroys disease germs, but it does more, it heals disease tissue.

CATARRHOZONE is little drops of healing carried by air to the exact place where Catarrh exists. Observe, Catarrhozone not only destroys the cause, but immediately repairs the result of diseased condition.

Catarrhozone means little drops of healing carried by air and placed over the lungs, throat, and nasal passages.

Catarrhozone is endorsed by doctors, druggists, and by thousands of Canadian people who have used it.

THE FIRST CLOCKS.

One at Padua That Was a Wander of Mechanism.

It was, we are told, in 1309 that the first clock known to the world was placed in the tower of San Eustorgio, in Milan.

The greatest astonishment and admiration were manifested by crowds who flocked to see the timepiece. In 1344 a clock was installed in the palace of the nobles at Padua. This was a wonder of mechanism indeed, for besides indicating the hours it showed the course of the sun, the revolutions of the planets, the various phases of the moon, the months and the fetes of the year.

The period of the evolution from the clock to the watch was seventy-one years—not so very long, all things considered—and the record of the first watch is 1380. A half century later an alarm clock made its appearance. This, we are told, was looked upon by the people of that age as "un instrument prodigieux."

The fortunate possessor of this clock was Andrea Alciato, a councilor of Milan. The chroniclers have placed on record that this clock sounded a bell at a stated hour, and at the same time a little wax candle was lighted automatically. How this was done we are not told, but it must not be overlooked that until about seventy years ago we had no means of obtaining a light other than the tinder box, so that the Milanese must have been centuries ahead of us in this respect.

Not much progress was made with the watch until 1740, when the second hand was added.—London Globe.

TEMPTED, HE ATE.

A Story of Heinrich Heine and a Toothsome Lyons Sausage.

Returning from a journey to the south of France, Heinrich Heine met a friend, a German violinist, in Lyons, who gave him a large sausage that had been made in Lyons with the request to deliver it to a mutual acquaintance, a homoeopathic physician, in Paris. Heine promised to attend to the commission and intrusted the delicacy to the care of his wife, who was traveling with him. But as the postchaise was very slow and he soon became very hungry, on the advice of his wife both tasted of the sausage, which dwindled with every mile.

Arriving at Paris, Heine did not dare to send the remainder to the physician, and yet he wished to keep his promise. So he cut off the thinnest possible slice with his razor, wrapped it in a sheet of vellum paper and inclosed it in an envelope, with the following note:

Dear Doctor—From your scientific investigations we learn that the millionth part of a certain substance brings about the greatest results. I beg, therefore, your kind acceptance of the accompanying millionth part of a Lyons sausage, which our friend gave me to deliver to you. If homeopathy is a truth, then this little piece will have the same effect on you as the whole sausage. Your Old Time English Elections.

In old time England each constituency gave its representative in parliament a horse to carry him to Westminister and also paid his expenses on the road. These expenses, together with an allowance for each day spent on duty at the house of commons, generally at the rate of 30 cents a day, were refunded in one lump sum when the member returned home at the end of the parliamentary year. Sir F. Delaval totaled seven votes in an attempt on Andover in the general election of 1708. An item in his election agent's bill is typical of the reckoning he had to pay: "To being thrown out of the George inn, Andover, to my legs being thereby broken, to sugeon's bill and loss of time and business, all in the service of Sir F. Delaval, £500." Lord Llandaff won Dungarvan in 1868. The item "£547 whisky," caused him to protest faintly. "Beggra," said his election agent, "if ye want to squeese a pippin like that ye'll never do for Dungarvan."

Real Sea Serpents.

In New Caledonia sea serpents are frequently seen and sometimes captured. They are curious creatures, the head being very small and scarcely distinguishable from the body and the tail being formed like an oar. In length they are generally between three and four feet. In the jaw there are tiny glands containing poison, but as the mouth is very small it is difficult for them to bite, and the natives handle them fearlessly. A European traveler witnessed an experiment at Noumea which shows that under certain conditions the sea serpent can do deadly work. A rat was caught in a trap, and its tongue was grasped by a pair of pinchers and placed in the mouth of a sea serpent. The serpent immediately bit it, and the rat died in four minutes.

Insurance Companies Lose About $125,000.00 by the Wreck at Spanish River

Double Liability for About Twenty-five Persons

A loss of somewhere in the neighbourhood of $125,000 is what the Accident Insurance Companies estimate the wreck at Spanish River bridge means to them.

They figure that about 25 of those who met death carried Accident Insurance, and the average insurance, according to the tables, is $5,000. In case of death in a railway disaster there is a double liability, making the figure $5,000, or $5,000 to be more conservative.

Their loss may total more than that, for the commercial travellers, a number of whom were killed, usually carry very heavy insurance. In addition, some of the companies make the policies payable on the death of the wife while travelling, though the policy is taken out in the husband's name. In such cases they pay the husband the same amount as they would have paid the wife were the husband killed.

The above goes to show the necessity of carrying Accident Insurance, as similar disasters happen almost daily.

QUEER INDIAN BELIEFS.

The Five Worlds of the Bella Coola Sun Worshipers.

There is an odd feature in the theology of the small Indian tribe of the Bella Coola which inhabit British Columbia in about latitude 52. They believe that there are five worlds, one above the other, and the middle one is our own world, the earth. Above it are two heavens, and under it are two underworlds. In the upper heaven is the supreme deity, who is a woman, and she doesn't meddle much with the affairs in the second world below her. The zenith is the center of the lower heaven, and here is the house of the gods, in which live the sun and the rest of the deities.

Our own earth is believed to be an island swimming in the ocean. The first underworld from the earth is inhabited by ghosts, who can return, when they wish, to heaven, from which place they may be sent down to our earth. If then they misbehave again they are cast into the lower of the underworlds, and from this bourn no ghostly traveler returns.

The Bella Coola are sun worshipers, for Semex, the sun, the master of the house of gods, who is called the father and the sacred one, is the only deity to whom the tribe pray. Each family of the Bella Coola has its own traditions and its own form of the current traditions, so that in the mythology of the tribe there are countless contradictions. When any one not a member of a clan tries to tell a tradition which does not belong to his clan it is like a white man trying to tell another's joke—he is considered as appropriating the property right which does not belong to him.

How a Woman Can Build Up Her Health

This Open Letter From Mrs. L. Hermann Will Be Interesting to All Women Readers.

The following letter written from her prettily situated home in Ossining, on the banks of the Hudson, gives Mrs. Hermann's experience with ill-health:

"I was never very strong.

"Thousands there are just like me, who have to pay double toll for every little extra effort or exertion. When the weather was fine, and I was able to get about, I enjoyed life and held my strength. But something always happened—a little too much done, or some small sickness would put me back, and I would drop into the most miserable despondent state, unable to sleep or enjoy my meals. I decided to take the most nourishing and strengthening tonic made, and was strongly urged to use 'Ferrozone.' After the first box I saw Ferrozone was doing me good, so I followed closely the 'Ferrozone Rules for Health,' and gained steadily. At first I didn't eat as well as I once did—I couldn't expect to. But there was a gradual improvement in my appetite, and this buoyed up my hopes, and convinced me Ferrozone was what I needed. It is less than a year since I commenced Ferrozone and already I am like a new woman. I eat more, sleep better, weigh more, am stronger, healthier, better looking than ever before."

ROADS IN CHINA.

They Are Narrow and Crooked and Edged With Ditches.

The Chinese road is private property, a strip taken from somebody's land. This is done much against the will of the owner, since he not only loses the use of it, but also still has to pay taxes on it.

One consequence is that it is wide enough for only one vehicle, and carts can pass one another only by trespassing on the cultivated land. To prevent this the farmers dig deep ditches by the roadside. As the surface wears away and the dust blows off it gradually grows lower, and after awhile it becomes a drain for the surrounding fields. A current forms in the rainy season, which still farther hollows it out, and thus has arisen the proverb that a road a thousand years old becomes a river.

Those whose lands are used for roads naturally prefer to have the roads run along the edge of their farms instead of cutting across them, and this accounts for the fact that Chinese roads are often so crooked that one may have to go a considerable distance to reach a place that is in reality but a few miles away. This always interests the stranger.

Only Pursuing His Profession.

A Brooklyn magistrate recently had four darkies who were caught in a gambling raid before him. The first of the lot to be brought to the bar was an undersized man, with a comical face as black as night. The dialogue between the magistrate and the prisoner created some merriment in the court.

"What is your name?" inquired the magistrate sternly.

"Mah name's Smiff," replied the darky.

"What is your profession?"

"I'e a lockamiff by trade, sah."

"What were you doing when the police broke into the room last night?"

"Judge, I was pursuin' mah profession. I was makin' a bolt for the door."

"Officer," said the magistrate, with a merry twinkle in his eye, "lock Smith up."

The Art of Overlooking.

Nobody can live long in the world and not admit that the words "nothing for nothing" contain a sad amount of truth. He is of course a fool who does not count the cost so far as the future is concerned, but scarcely less a fool is he who does not overlook past costs. If we have any good or delightful thing in this life, at all hazards let us not taint our enjoyment by considering what we gave for it. Was it more than we could afford? Never mind. We have afforded it; we have made our purchase. Let us take off the ticket with the price and burn the receipt. There are items in life's ledger which must be overlooked unless we would spend all our days in balancing closed accounts.—London Spectator.

How She Rules Him.

"Skingblint's wife certainly has remarkable success in managing him. I wonder how she does it."

"When he undertakes to deny her anything she really wants she threatens to sue him for divorce."

"Does he care so much for her, then?"

"Oh, no, it's not that, but he figures that it is cheaper to let her have her own way than it would be to either defend the suit or pay alimony."

A Bad Start.

"A man always looks foolish when he proposes," said the frank young woman.

"Yes," answered Mr. Meekton, "and I have evidently failed to overcome the absurd impression I made on Henrietta on that occasion."

Social Paradox.

"It's impossible for me to dress on $5,000 a year."

"Well, my love, you must wear less."

"Don't be silly! You know perfectly well that the less I wear the more it costs."—Judge's Library.

Common sense is instinct, and enough of it is genius.—H. W. Shaw.

Gladstone's Magnetism.

The magnetism with which Mr. Gladstone always seemed to invest his words is illustrated by the following curious little story. At Hawarden the conversation once turned to walnuts, and Mr. Gladstone, in a pause, said, in thrilling tones, "I have not eaten a walnut since I was a boy of sixteen"; and then added, in a cadence of melancholy dignity, "nor, indeed, a nut of any kind." "The auditor who told me the story," says Mr. Benson, "said that the remark was received like an oracle, and that he had for the moment the impression that he had been the recipient of a singular and momentous confidence, such was the magnetic force of the speaker. The effect, I used to think, was augmented by the forcible burr with which the letter "r" was pronounced, which gave a curious richness to the whole intonation."

A Well-Guarded Bank.

The Bank of England is considered to have one of the most nearly impregnable vaults of any bank in the world. It is sixty-six feet below the level of the street. Above it is twenty feet of concrete, holding seven feet of water, and below the same concrete barrier and depth of water. In this manner tunneling becomes impossible, while with the soldier guard posted every night the conservative Briton has reason to believe in the security of his "Old Lady of Threadneedle Street."

Through a Telescope

A Tragedy In the Alps That Was Seen by One Who Kept His Own Counsel.

By F. A. MITCHEL.

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

If you go to Interlaken it is quite possible you may see the man who told me this story. You will find him standing almost any day when the atmosphere is transparent and the glorious Jungfrau looms up beautifully in a notch between two of the foothills, standing beside the main street of the town, showing the mountain through his telescope to tourists at half a franc a "look." I do not mean to say that he put the facts at the bottom of his yarn together as a story. Nevertheless they are a story, and it is my part to arrange them in proper form. Here it is as he told it to me, with certain transpositions of mine necessary to its ready understanding:

One day a few summers ago I was standing here showing people the mountain when a party came along consisting of a young girl and two young men. The girl and one of the young men were Americans. The other young man, I judged from his accent, was French. The American man was a quiet, steady looking fellow. The Frenchman was handsome, with all the vivacity of the French people, while the girl was one of your American beauties. The names of all three I afterward learned, and I shall never forget them. The American man was Archibald Wallace; the Frenchman was Jean Le Verian; the girl was Alice Clark.

"Oh, there is a telescope!" exclaimed Miss Clark as she approached me. "Do let's have a look."

With her American impulse she put her eye to the eyepiece, while I made the adjustments.

"Isn't it wonderful?" she said enthusiastically. "What beautiful slopes! What awful gulfs! But it is fascinating. I'm crazy to go up there."

The very next afternoon I was standing here, as usual, waiting for people to come along and pay me for a look through my telescope, when, seeing a mass of snow on the mountain beginning to move, I put my eye to the glass. After witnessing an avalanche turning the glass about over the mountain I saw three figures, two men and a woman, not far above the snow line. My glass did not reveal their features, but I suspected they were the party who had been with me the day before.

I watched them for some time. After awhile I saw one of the men stroll away around a snow covered rock, where he was screened from the others, and look over a cliff. Then he went part of the way back and, I fancied, called—of course I could not hear him—to the other man, for the latter went around the rock and joined him, and the two stood on the edge of the cliff together looking over. Suddenly I saw one figure behind the other and the front one fall over the cliff.

There was a steep incline at the cliff's base of hard snow. The moment the figure that had fallen struck this snow I saw him glance, then shoot down on the surface. He passed behind a peak, and when he again appeared I saw him still sliding. Then he slid around a bend and disappeared.

As soon as I was convinced that I should not see him again I turned my glass back to the other figure. He was running toward the woman. When he reached her there was a pantomime which indicated he was telling her that the other man had fallen over the cliff. But I knew very well that he had pushed his friend—or enemy, as the case might be—over. While I could not distinguish the woman's features, I knew by her motions that she was terribly moved by the tragedy. She went with the remaining man to the cliff, and the two seemed to be looking down at its base to see if they could get a glimpse of their companion. Then they turned away and descended the mountain.

I was satisfied that one of the men had pushed the other over the cliff and that they were Wallace and Le Verian, though I could not tell which was the victim. I knew full well that the matter would soon be reported and resolved to keep my own counsel, curious to know in what form the tragedy would be made known.

The same night I heard that a terrible accident had happened to a young American stopping at the J. hotel. I went there and got the story from the concierge. He said that while a Mr. Wallace, an American, was looking over a cliff a crust of snow had given way under his feet and he had fallen 100 feet to the bottom. He had doubtless been killed. A party was being made up to go the next day to look for his body.

Making further inquiries, I learned that he had gone up the mountain side with a Jean Le Verian, a Parisian, and a Miss Clark of Philadelphia. While I was permitting people to tell me about what I knew much more than they, Le Verian passed me. He looked very somber, as one might be expected to appear who had witnessed the tragedy he had reported. I tried to detect the look of a villain in his face, but failed. Either he was not guilty, as I supposed, or he carried the consciousness of his guilt so well that it would not betray him.

The next morning I joined the party that set out to find Wallace's body, my object being to follow, if possible, the route he would be forced over and to determine whether he could have escaped with his life. Having reached the bottom of the cliff, the party were surprised to find no traces of the body, and we all followed the incline to the point where it had disappeared from my view. A short distance beyond this there was a fork in the possible route, one branch leading to a gradual rise, upon attaining which he would have soon stopped; the other leading to the edge of a crevasse into which he would have fallen to an unknown depth.

Every member of the party agreed that Wallace must have slid into the crevasse. As for me, I said nothing, thinking the chances either way were even. We returned to Interlaken, and the party reported the result of their investigations, with the opinion that the body, being in the crevasse, could not easily be recovered. I resolved to await developments. If Wallace had escaped we should hear from him with in a reasonable time.

A few days later an old gentleman came up to me while I was standing beside my telescope and asked me if the place from which the American had fallen was visible from where we stood. I assured him that it was and directed my telescope toward it. He put his eye to the glass and since it was in the center of the field of view seemed to recognize it at once.

"If any one had been looking through your glass at the time the accident occured, would he have seen it?" he asked.

"Certainly," I replied.

"Can figures and faces be distinguished up there through your telescope so as to know them?"

"Not surely."

"Could you see an act in which two figures were involved?"

"Not very clearly."

Something in the man's voice was familiar to me. As he turned and faced me I saw that he was "made up," as the theatrical people say. Then something suddenly burst upon me. Was it a droop of one shoulder? Was it the interest he had manifested in the tragedy? I could not tell, but I knew the old man was young Wallace disguised.

"I was loking through my glass," I said, "when that tragedy occurred."

I felt a grip on my arm, and the man was fairly glaring at me.

"Were you? What did you see?" he said, trying to master his emotion.

I told him what I had seen as I have told it here. He would not permit me to leave out the slightest detail. When I had finished I added:

"You are Mr. Wallace, and you were pushed over that cliff. I saw enough to convince me that what I witnessed was an attempted murder. Now tell me of the man's motive."

He told me that Miss Clark was an American millionairess; that he had known her at home and they had recently become engaged. In Paris Le Verian had been introduced to the girl, had joined the party with whom she was traveling and had been trying to win her. Doubtless recognizing that Wallace was the main obstacle in the way of getting her and her millions, he had attempted to put him out of the way.

Wallace had landed where I supposed he would land, being only shaken up by the glance he had made at the bottom of the cliff. Realizing that if he accused Le Verian of trying to murder him he would have no evidence of the fact, he had disguised himself and returned with a view to watching his rival without being known to him. He had not yet made himself known to Miss Clark, being desirous to discover how she felt toward his would be murderer. From what he had observed he feared that Le Verian was making some headway in his suit, but could not tell. His fiancee had been apparently much shocked.

Having learned that I would be able to testify, Mr. Wallace resolved to make himself known to Le Verian and Miss Clark. He came to see me the next day and described the scene as it occurred at the J. hotel. He had taken a private parlor and sent a message to Le Verian and Miss Clark that if they would come to the apartment they would learn something of George Wallace.

They came, the girl looking hopefully anxious, the man very much agitated. Wallace, who was dressed as an old man, threw off his disguise and stood before them as himself. The girl started toward him with a cry and fell in a swoon in his arms. The man stood looking like a serpent about to strike a final blow for life.

Wallace put out his hand and touched a bell. Le Verian stood trembling like a leaf. A waiter entered, and Wallace told him to call the proprietor. He came, and Wallace declared himself to be the missing American and denounced Le Verian as his would be murderer.

At that moment Miss Clark came to herself and heard his accusation.

I never learned what became of Le Verian. I heard nothing about a trial and inferred that Mr. Wallace and his fiancee shrank from prosecuting him. But the next summer while I was showing the Jungfrau to some tourists I heard a familiar voice say:

"Can you show me the cliff from which Wallace, the American, fell?"

I turned. There stood Mr. Wallace himself with the American girl on his arm.

"Mrs. Wallace and I would like to see the place," he added.

But the lady shrank away with a shudder, and her husband failed to induce her to take even a glance.

Yes; I made something out of it. Wallace had given me money before he left Interlaken and gave me more when he returned. I invested it in some American securities he recommended.

DEPUTATION URGES HOME FOR THE PROTESTANT POOR

At Meeting of Committee of Whole Council—Catholic Poor Would Want Catholic Home Says Rector of St. Peter's—Special Committee Appointed to Study Solution.

The principal business at the meeting of the Committee of the Whole Council last night was the discussion relative to the housing of the dependent poor of this city. A deputation consisting of Rev. Father McColl, Rev. H. J. Keith, Rev. Canon Davidson and Mr. J. B. McWilliams waited on the Council in regard to this matter and the question was very seriously and ably discussed by these gentlemen and the Council. A general house of refuge was not approved of by Rev. Father McColl, who stated that the Catholic poor would want a Catholic home where they could have the consolation of their religion. Even if a general house of refuge were built they would insist on going to the House of Providence.

Those present at the meeting were Mayor Morrow and Ald. Metheral, Duncan, Phelan, Duffus, Turner, Buller, Morgan, Hicks, Graham, Bradburn, Gillespie and Batten.

The Mayor announced that he had a visit Saturday from the wardens of Peterborough and Victoria counties concerning a claim for damages from S. Sherman, Verulam, Victoria county. Sherman lost a horse while driving over the bridge in a fierce snowstorm some time ago, as has been previously noted, the bridge breaking in the storm and the team falling into the lake. One horse was drowned and the other seriously injured. The city pays towards the maintainence of the bridge, which connects Peterborough and Victoria counties and it was held that Peterborough city would be liable for damages as well as Peterborough county and Victoria county. The city solicitor advised the committee that the city had no responsibility in connection with any accidents on the bridge which was under county control. The amount of damages asked was $180. The city was looked to by Sherman to pay $90.

On the strength of the City Solicitor's advice it was moved by Ald. Morgan, seconded by Ald. Graham, and carried, that no action be taken.

Mayor Morrow called on Mr. Keith to speak on behalf of the deputation. Mr. Keith said they were waiting on the Council to consider with them the poor problem of the city. They were there merely to help the Councillors by giving any information that might be of value in the solution of the problem. The speaker thought a by-law should be submitted to the people to get their opinion on the matter. He the matter. He felt that the Council should submit a house of refuge by-law to the city.

Mr. McWilliams expressed himself in favor of a house of refuge. The county house of refuge cost $23,000, which the Government furnished $4,000. Mr. McWilliams produced a letter from Dr. R. Bruce Smith in which it was stated that $18,000 or $20,000 would build a house of refuge for the city, with accommodation for fifty or sixty.

Mr. McWilliams' idea was to submit a by-law for $20,000 and get public opinion. In case of a city house of refuge the Government would not give $4,000, as it did for the county, but would give 7 cents a day for each inmate which would even be a more desirable proposition. There were only two courses to pursue and the other was to get legislation to maintain the Protestant Home and the House of Providence for twenty years.

Rev. Father McColl thought that with the co-operation of Protestants and Catholics that the problem could be satisfactorily dealt with. He said that it could be readily understood that he would naturally be opposed to a house of refuge for both the Protestant and Catholic poor. The Catholics had complied with regulations in building the House of Providence. A division of the taxes on the same basis in vogue in connection with the school taxes met with his approval in the matter of supporting a Protestant and Catholic home. He thought the Government could be relied upon to give legislation to this effect. He thought the matter was a simple one to arrange and approved of the second suggestion of Mr. McWilliams.

He thought the Catholic poor would not want to go to a general house of refuge as they wanted the consolation of their own religion in a Catholic home and he imagined the Protestants would be inclined the same way concerning themselves.

Rev. Canon Davidson said no great expense would be involved. The aged women could be housed at the Protestant Home and an additional home for for the old men could be built. His Worship explained that the Protestant Home was so lacking in facilities and improvements that the government grant had been cut off.

Ald. Hicks was not in favor of a house of refuge, but preferred a Protestant home similar to the House of Providence. A committee consisting of Ald. Morgan, chairman; Ald. Hicks, Bradburn and Buller was appointed to confer with the Protestant Home Board and report at a later meeting of the Council.

It was the general opinion of the committee that it would be unfair to ask the Catholic ratepayers to support a home for Protestants in view of their big outlay in the House of Providence.

SMOKELESS POWDER.

It Came Through Experimenting For High Explosives.

The idea is very general that smokeless powder in being practically smokeless achieves its greatest end, but as a matter of fact its smokeless feature is incidental and was an accident.

When the idea of modern long range guns was conceived it was at once apparent that the old black powder lacked explosive force, and thousands of experiments were made with various chemicals to procure a powder of high explosive properties, and this was at last accomplished.

When the new powder was tried, much to the surprise of every one it was found that practically no smoke followed the explosion, though this could of course have been predicted had the question ever arisen. The volume of smoke from black powder is due mainly to the quantity of charcoal in the powder, an ingredient not found in the smokeless explosive.

Smokeless powder, though a great boon to the sportsman, is of questionable value on the battlefield, so far as its smokelessness is concerned. The smoke clouds of old days were frequently most advantageously used to cloak movements of troops and batteries and really interfered with the enemy much more than with the troops creating the smoke.—Exchange.

BASEBALL

Nothing doing yet in the line of a baseball meeting. There is nothing like getting a good start. Experience in the past has shown that it takes more than one meeting to get things going, and it is to the interests of all clubs to get up the right dope on what is going to be doing here this summer.

One thing that is certain is that the Midland League trophy rests with us, and is looking for a job. The lakeside towns apparently are afraid of a Peterborough team, and are against the idea of sending an application form this way. Well, we only played them at their own game two years ago and beat them, so they are hollering along the wrong fence. We won't say that we don't want to play in their old league anyway, but we might venture to say that this same league, with the same teams, and the same rules of a few years ago, would be a success in the season of 1910.

Still, there are many in this city who are of the opinion that there is not sufficient material to represent a nine which would amount to anything in the Midland League. Them wise guys, of course, are always to their own mind, "in right," but there are others who hold a different opinion, which is just the opposite.

In case it was found not advisable to form such a team, the next resort is to give all attention to the City League. It was a partial success last year. The question of how many teams should compete is a difficult one to answer. There were four last season, but faster ball would have been played had the players been represented in three teams.

There are a great many points which could be discussed, and which would have a beneficial effect. It is up to the heads of the different clubs to get busy, as it is up to them to say whether or not the game is going to advance or go to the bone yard.

INDOOR BASEBALL

To-night at the armories two indoor baseball games are scheduled to be played. No. 8 Co. meets the 24th Field Battery and the bugle band plays No. 7.

St. John's Church

At St. John's church Easter Sunday there will be:—Holy Communion 7, 8, and 12.15. Matins, 11; Choral Evensong, 7.

The special children's Easter service, when the Sunday school scholars present their Lenten mite box, is on Easter Sunday at 3 p.m. A special invitation to parents.

The choral selections by the choir will be from Handel's "Messiah," concluding the evensong on Easter Day with the "Hallelujah" chorus.

The special preacher for Easter Sunday will be the Ven. Archdeacon Warren, of Toronto.

The Palm Sunday services were well attended. At evensong the Rev. Canon Davidson preached on the subject of the Holy Communion, earnestly exhorting all Anglican churchmen to a regular attendance at that great service.

The choir gave a splendid rendering of the services, especially the hymns, and Mr. H. Merrifield sang "The Palms" and "Jerusalem" in good voice and with great expression.

Mr. Comber, B.A., of Bobcaygeon, read the lessons in the morning and Mr. R. Sutcliffe at night.

The Synod of Huron meets on June 17th, a year earlier than usual.

A burglar broke into Comber post office and stole over $300.

THE LORDS PASS ROSEBERY'S REFORMS BY BIG MAJORITY

His Resolution Outlining Proposed Changes in Upper Chamber are Accepted by a Majority of 158—Mr. Asquith's Programme is Also Announced.

London, March 23.—The House of Lords yesterday by a vote of 175 to 17, passed the third and last of the resolutions introduced by Lord Rosebery, in furtherance of his program for the reformation of the Upper Chamber. The resolution declared that a necessary preliminary to the reform and reconstruction of the chamber, as provided in the first and second resolutions already agreed to, was the acceptance of the principle that the possession of a peerage in itself should no longer afford the right to sit and vote in the House of Lords.

Following are the three Rosebery resolutions:—

(1) That a strong and efficient second chamber is not merely an integral part of the British constitution, but is necessary to the well-being of the State and the balance of Parliament.

(2) That a second chamber can best be obtained by reforming and reconstituting the House of Lords.

(3) That a necessary preliminary to such reform and reconstitution is the acceptance of the principle that possession of a peerage shall no longer in itself give the right to sit and vote in the House of Lords.

Premier Asquith has given notice in the House of Commons of three resolutions bearing on the veto power of the House of Lords.

The first declares that it is expedient that the House of Lords be disabled by law from rejecting or amending a money bill, but that any such limitation shall not be taken to diminish or qualify the existing rights of the House of Commons.

The second declares that it is expedient that the powers of the House of Lords over bills other than money bills be restricted by law so that any such bill which has passed the House of Commons in three successive sessions, and has been rejected by the House of Lords in each of these sessions, shall become a law without consent of the House of Lords on royal assent being declared, provided that at least two years have elapsed between the date of the first introduction of the bill in the Commons, and the date it passes the Commons for the third time.

The third proposes to limit the duration of each Parliament to five years.

Asquith's resolutions, which make no provision for conferences of the two Houses in the event of a deadlock, are supposed to meet with Redmond's approval, and as it is quite certain that they will be rejected by the House of Lords, a general election may be expected in May. It is believed that in the meantime the Government will endeavor to pass a short bill to hold all the elections on the same day.

Finds Ancient Inscription.

Halifax, March 23.—Dr. Allan C. Johnson, a young Nova Scotian, has made an important discovery at Athens while pursuing his investigations on the Acropolis. While carefully examining the stones which were built into the retaining wall of an ancient cistern, he found on one of these stones an inscription which had previously escaped observation because of its having been built into the wall in such a way that no letters were visible. The stone was removed and the inscription was found to be an Attic decree of 303 B.C., enacted in honor of Nikon of Abydos, for having saved Athenians from drowning in the previous war. This valuable document, which is thirty lines in length, and contains historical information hitherto quite unknown, will be published by Dr. Johnson at an early date. It is worthy of note that his doctoral dissertation had to do with Attic decrees down to 300 B.C., and it must therefore be particularly gratifying to him to have made such an important contribution to the subject of his previous studies.

Dr. Johnson is a graduate of Dalhousie and Johns Hopkins Universities.

Tried to Blow Up Church.

Brantford, Ont., March 23.—What would seem to be deliberate plans for blowing up Grace Church, the leading Anglican structure in this city, were discovered yesterday morning, when the church was found to be filled with natural gas, sufficiently to wreck the entire building if only ignited.

Monday afternoon Caretaker Burnham found an unknown man hiding behind the furnace in the basement. He promptly ejected him. Yesterday morning when the gas was discovered a further search of the basement was made, showing that the gas main had been wrenched asunder at a point where it entered the cellar, thus allowing the entire flow to fill the building.

KICK ON HEAD WAS FATAL SAYS DOCTOR AT BULMAN MURDER TRIAL

Dr. McCoy Testifies to the Effect That Bradley, Who is on Trial for Causing the Death of George Bulman in a Fight, Might Have Easily Been Cause of Death.

St. Catharines, March 23.—The trial of William Bradley for the murder of George Bulman at Merritton, on New Year's afternoon, began before Chief Justice Falconbridge yesterday morning. The County Court house was crowded. Col. Gwyn, Dundas, assisted by Crown Attorney Brennan, is conducting the prosecution, while A. C. Kingstone of this city is defending Bradley. No verdict can be reached until some time to-day.

Bradley and Bulman, who was somewhat intoxicated, got into an altercation while riding on the back platform of a crowded radial car, Bulman having lurched against Bradley, who told him to keep to himself. Both soon began talking fight and Bradley pulled off his coat and started for Bulman, but the conductor interfered.

George Gass, a small boy of Thorold, swore he had looked out the car window, in response to a call by a woman that men were fighting. Near lock eight he saw Bulman with his hand against the back of the car. Bradley was facing him within about an arm's length. Bradley was then in his shirt sleeves. When the car stopped at lock nine Bradley got off and, as he was opposite the car step, hit Bulman with his fist somewhere in the face. Bulman fell backward having been getting off the car when hit. As Bulman fell Bradley went over and leaned down and punched him in the face, then stood up and kicked him on the left side of the head. He died in a few minutes.

Mrs. Betsy Ethridge saw Bulman fall, and was standing about three feet from Bradley when she saw him kick Bulman in the head.

Dr. S. H. McCoy swore that the blow was in such a delicate spot that it would cause almost instant death.

Mrs. Wills, who had been with Mrs. Ethridge, fainted while on the stand.

Thomas Hastings twice saw Bradley take hold of Bulman by the throat. When someone broke the prisoner's hold, he stepped down to a lower step and caught hold of Bulman's coat and endeavored to pull him from the car. He saw nothing of the Gass boy, and admitted that it would be hard for him to see the boy if the latter were there.

Bryan Cain also saw Bradley catch Bulman by the throat, but heard him say, "Now, you see, I could lick you if I wanted to."

Thomas Hogan claimed that Bradley had struck Bulman while he was lying on the platform of the car. Deceased then slid off and was kicked by the prisoner.

BODY OF B. F. RAPLEY WAS FOUND IN NAPANEE RIVER

Special to the Review.

Napanee, Ont., March 23.—The body of B. F. Rapley, the Montreal commercial traveller, who disappeared so mysteriously from the Campbell House here last fall, was found in the Napanee river this forenoon two and a half miles down stream. The body has been fully identified by the initials on the ring on one finger and cuff links, and also by the card case and order book which were in the pockets. The face is very much decomposed.

Mr. Rapley was very well known in Peterborough. He represented Brophy, Parsons & Roden, a Montreal wholesale dry goods firm, and used to come to the city about every month. He lived with his mother in Belleville.

TRIPLE TRAGEDY.

Three Women Are Drowned In River at Teeswater.

Teeswater, Ont., March 23.—A sad drowning accident occurred at Joseph Semple's farm, four miles from here, when Mrs. Semple, her daughter Crissie, and Mrs. Elliott, a relative from Liverpool, Eng., were drowned in the Teeswater River. Mrs. Elliott's daughter, Miss Elliott, was the only one of the party saved.

The river runs through the farm just below the house, and they had intended rowing up the river and crossing over to a neighbor's, but owing to the swollen condition of the river, and the strong current at this spot, the boat was swept down the river and overturned before they had taken hold of the oars.

The accident was seen by Miss Kate Semple, and she immediately called her brother, who managed to rescue Miss Elliott as she was being swept around a bend in the river. She is still in a critical condition.

The bodies of Mrs. Elliott and Mrs. Semple were recovered at Grant's bridge, half a mile away.

Navy Building on Lakes.

Washington, D.C., March 23.—The Navy Department has reported to the House that it knows no reason why all types of vessels cannot be built on the great lakes. The report is in the nature of a reply to a resolution asking for the navy view on that point and Secretary Meyers' opinion is based on the assumption that the only "obstacles"—a term used in the resolution—are physical ones, and that a sufficiently deep waterway from the seaboard can eventually be constructed.

The limitations of the Bush-Bagot treaty are ignored.

Canadian Land Speculators.

London, March 23.—The Canadian Associated Press understands, with reference to the sale of 200,000 acres in Alberta by the Western Canada Land Co., that the area was purchased by two Canadians, with the object of retailing to settlers. The price paid equals that wherewith the company purchased its 500,000 acres a few years back.

British-American land profits for 1909 were £25,449.

THE NEWS AS TOLD IN DESPATCHES

Says Ministers Libelled Him.

Butler, Pa., March 23.—Warrants were issued yesterday upon informations made by Rev. Claudius Freeman, pastor of the Lutheran Church for the arrest of six local ministers of several denominations, charging them with criminal libel.

It is alleged the defendants are members of the Ministerial Association, and at a meeting in February, passed a resolution charging that "a candidate for school director shipped to Mars, Pa., the date before election, a barrel of beer for the purpose of influencing votes." Freeman in his information declares he was the candidate referred to in the resolution, and charges the ministers with libel in passing the resolution, and causing it to be printed.

Child Ate Pills and Died.

Windsor, March 23.—Edith, the five year-old daughter of James Scholes, of this city, discovered a box of pills on the cupboard shelf yesterday morning and the child devoured half the contents of the box. She was immediately seized with convulsions, death resulting in half an hour.

Daring Hold-Up In Cobalt.

Cobalt, Ont., March 23.—In close proximity to a crowd on Cobalt square, hold-up men seized a Chinaman, named Lee Sung, hurried him into a back lane, gagged him and took $105 and a gold watch and chain from him. Then they left him in a stable and got clear away.

Navigation Insurance Delayed.

Detroit, Mich., March 23.—According to the terms of the insurance policies in force this season, vessels can not start before April 15. This is about ten days later than in previous years.

Peace, But Not Yet.

New York, March 23.—The President of the United States spoke in the cause of world-peace last night before a brilliant assemblage at the Hotel Astor. He was the honor guest at the banquet of the Peace and Arbitration League. International peace was the keynote of every address, but no speaker advocated the immediate disarmament of nations. On the contrary, all agreed that armies and navies were necessary until a more Utopian universe shall have come about.

On this point President Taft said: "Because we are in favor of universal peace and in favor of arbitration in order to secure it, we stand together that we are not in favor of one country giving up that which we now use for the purpose of securing peace, to wit, our navy."

Tremendous applause greeted his declarations. He added: "Personally I do not see any more reason why matters of national honor should not be referred to a court of arbitration any more than matters of property or matters of national proprietorship."

Trying to Settle Strike.

Philadelphia, March 23.—The committee of ten, the Rapid Transit officials and State Senator J. P. McNichol, are now in conference at the residence of G. H. Earle, jr., discussing plans for the termination of the street carmen's strike.

The first big break in the general sympathetic strike came yesterday when the journeymen bricklayers, numbering 2,200 men, notified the master bricklayers that they were ready to return to work. The masters will act on the matter to-day, and it is expected work will be resumed to-morrow.

LUMSDEN COMMITTEE TO MAKE REPORT TO THE HOUSE

Geoffrion Thinks Better of His Action of Monday—Hon Mr. Oliver's Immigration Act Amendments are Discussed in Committee.

Ottawa, March 23.—The Lumsden investigation committee thought better of their action of Monday evening in deciding not to report the evidence taken to the House and Victor Geoffrion, the chairman, yesterday reported to the Commons both the proceedings and the evidence.

Haughton Lennox moved that the whole question of the Lumsden inquiry be taken upon March 31. This was agreed to.

A. H. Clarke (South Essex), stated that the Ontario Government had leased to a Detroit concern the right to take sand from the St. Clair River for a period of five years. People who had been accustomed to take sand from the river were indignant that they should have to pay a royalty to this concern.

Hon. Wm. Pugsley said that if the soil rights belonged to the province, the Public Works Department could not take any action unless operations interfered with navigation, which was likely.

In committee on Hon. Mr. Oliver's bill to amend the immigration act, Clarence Jameson (Digby) suggested that tuberculosis be added to the list of disease debarring entry.

Mr. Oliver said, that while recognizing the necessity of excluding patients, it had been thought best not to mention the disease by name.

Dr. Paquet suggested that immigrants should be examined as to their moral fitness and Mr. Oliver said that while it might be possible in European countries, where the records of all individuals are kept, it would not be possible in Great Britain, without unnecessarily hampering the emigration of desirable people.

Uriah Wilson (Lennox and Addington) having expressed the opinion that Canada was getting little good from the system of paying a bonus for agricultural classes, the Minister said that the homestead entries show a large increase of British birth.

Mr. Oliver said that in the west the British born were more inclined to stay on the farm than were Canadians.

Mr. Oliver did not hold out any hope that the Government would consent to go in for a policy of assisted immigration.

Robert Bickerdike (Montreal) described some of the pathetic scenes which occur when families are separated on the docks on this side by immigration officers. It would be much better, he thought, for undesirable members of a family to be picked out before departure from the other side.

Mr. Oliver said that everything possible was being done to minimize this difficulty. It would be quite impracticable to place inspectors abroad.

Mr. Jameson took exception to the clause of the bill, which provides that tourists should have a certain amount of money in their possession. If tourists were in danger of being held up, it would decrease the traffic.

Mr. Oliver argued that it was fair to expect a tourist to have as much money on him as an immigrant. He pointed to the lack of complaints on the Canadian border as an evidence that Canada did her business in a better way than the U. S. inspectors.

According to present probabilities, Canada will, in order to secure the continuance of the present U. S. tariff until such time as a reciprocal tariff can be negotiated, be asked to remove the duties on such articles as watch springs, cotton seed oil, cement, silks, and certain fruits, extending to them the intermediate tariff.

The Washington authorities hold out the hope that, this done, Canadian cattle, lumber and farm dairy produce will later be admitted free.

TAFT POLICIES FAIL.

Boston Democrat Wins In Fight at a Bye-Election.

Brockton, Mass., March 23.—The national political weather cock turned Democraticward in Massachusetts yesterday, when the old colony section, one of the Republican strongholds of the state, placed Eugene R. Foss of Boston, a Democrat, in the Congressional seat of the late Wm. C. Lovering of Taunton. Mr. Foss accomplished what is regarded as almost a political miracle, turning a Republican plurality of 14,250 into a Democratic victory of 5,640. His opponent was Wm. R. Buchanan of Brockton, Republican.

The result is considered of more than state-wide importance, for Foss stumped the entire fourteenth district on national questions. Where the two cities and every one of the 44 towns in the district gave Republican majorities only four months ago at the state elections, a scant dozen remained loyal to the Republicans yesterday.

It was the first contest to be decided by the voters since the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill became operative and had a peculiar interest on that account. Foss, who has figured in several campaigns, first as a Republican, and later as a Democrat, with moderate protectionist leanings, is well known in the northeastern states and in Canada as a champion of Canadian reciprocity, an issue which led him to leave the Republican party last year and become the Democratic candidate for lieutenant-governor. He failed by only 8,000 votes to carry the state at that time.

Niagara Falls Protests.

Niagara Falls, Ont., March 23.—Claiming that the tariff war between the United States and Canada would ruin the large volume of business between the two cities on Niagara River, Niagara Falls, N.Y., Board of Trade has passed a strong resolution calling on Representative Simmons and President Taft to maintain the present trade relations.

Letters of protest from big manufacturers who have Canadian branches will also be forwarded.

Another One.

North Tonawanda, N.Y., March 23.—The Board of Trade yesterday adopted resolutions pleading against a tariff war with Canada. The President and Secretary of State are urged to do everything in their power, consistent with the dignity and honor of the Government to continue in effect the present tariff.

Congressman Is Hopeful.

Detroit, Mich., March 23.—Congressman Denby of this district telegraphed as follows yesterday afternoon:

"After a conference with the Secretary of State yesterday, I feel greatly encouraged to hope for a favorable outcome of the Canadian situation. Negotiations are proceeding in the most friendly spirit and all parties are hopeful."

Disaffection on British Warship.

London, March 23.—The battleship Irresistible has been isolated at Portland Roads since March 12, owing to disaffection among the crew.

The sights of the big guns were thrown overboard on the night of March 12, and the most rigid investigation has failed to reveal those responsible.

Finger Print for Dominion Police.

Ottawa, March 23.—The supplementary estimates of the Department of Justice, which will shortly be presented to Parliament, will contain provision for the establishing of a criminal identification bureau in connection with the Dominion police branch of the service.

START WORK AT BLAIRTON

Drilling for Iron Will be Commenced at Once Outlook is Bright

Special to the Review.

Havelock, March 23.—Work is to commence once more at drilling into the iron mines at Blairton, situated about six miles east of here on the Marmora road. The Hamilton Steel & Iron Co. have secured an option on the property, and drilling will at once commence, and if it shows that the mine can be run on a profit operations on a large scale will be conducted during the summer.

The contract for drilling has been given to the Diamond Drill Co., of Sudbury, and their manager, Mr. Smith, was in town on Tuesday making arrangements for installing operations at once.

The engine and drill will arrive within the next few days and drilling under the supervision of Mr. Pagnet will commence.

If it is shown by analysis of the ore that iron is present in quantities large enough to be mined profitably a spur line will likely be built from the C.P.R. line into Blairton, a distance of three miles, to transport the ore.

Forget Buys Some More Steel.

Montreal, March 23.—Rodolphe Forget yesterday purchased 3,000 additional shares of Nova Scotia Steel, and should now have at least 34,000 shares under his control.

He stated that he certainly would not go to New Glasgow without being sure of sufficient proxies to secure absolute control of the situation.

LATE TICKS FROM WIRES

Earl Grey is spending a week's holidays in New York.

Fort William Chinamen are raising a big fund to defend one of their number, who is charged with killing an Irish lumber-jack there.

Hon. Geo. E. Foster is still confined to his residence in Ottawa with an attack of neuralgia and muscular rheumatism. He hopes to return to the House after Easter.

John Foster Reece, a farmer near London, dropped dead while dressing.

Nine out of nineteen Chinese laundries in Quebec have been officially declared unsanitary.

After May 1 the price of gas for lighting will be reduced by the Montreal Light, Heat & Power Co. to $1.05 per thousand feet. Competition is the cause of the reduction.

Dr. von Bethmann Hollweg, the German Imperial Chancellor, who is in Rome on a mission of courtesy, was received by King Victor Emmanuel yesterday. He conveyed a cordial message from Emperor William, and in return was made the bearer of like sentiments.

Beginning next Monday every newsboy in the Province of Manitoba will be required to report to the superintendent of neglected children for a badge permitting him to sell papers in public. No badge will be issued to anyone under 12 years of age, and they must have some education.

THE CLAY ROAD TO WEALTH

Suppose that two contractors, one a Conservative and the other a Liberal, were tendering for excavation work on the Government section of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. They would be shown the estimates of the Government engineers as to the quantity of solid rock, loose rock and common excavation there would be, and would be asked to state their prices for solid rock, loose rock and common excavation, respectively. Then the commissioners would be expected to figure out which of the tenders would be the lower for the whole work. But suppose that the Liberal contractor received a hint from the commissioners that hard clay would be classed as solid rock he could make his tender apparently much lower than that of the other contractor, who would suppose that rock meant rock. But when the work was done the Government would pay for clay as solid rock, and the successful contractor would receive an enormously greater amount than the other contractor would have done the work for.

The lucky contractor could well afford to make a very large contribution to the Liberal campaign fund, and he would be expected to do so.

The clay road to wealth is an easy one for Liberal contractors.

A NEW CANAL SCHEME

It is announced that the Laurier Government will construct a canal from some point opposite the city of Montreal to Lake Champlain, but Hon. Mr. Pugsley is said to be uncertain whether to have it start from St. Lambert or from Longueuil. The canal will be a straight cut of about eighteen miles, and will be about 72 miles shorter between Montreal and St. John's than the present route by way of Sorel and the Richelieu River. Mr. Pugsley has also announced that it is the intention of the Government to deepen the Richelieu River.

It would seem to be wise policy to complete the Trent canal before starting any new canal projects. For many years this work has been pottering along with little advantage to the country. The same amount of money quickly spent in completing the canal would have brought returns to the country for the money expended. The cheapening of transportation would have been the same in effect as reducing the cost of production in all the sections which this canal will serve. It would have aided in the development of Central Ontario, both from an agricultural and manufacturing point of view, and thus would have added to the wealth of the country.

When a number of canal projects in different parts of the country are dragged along for many years, the money expended on them is tied up and unproductive. By rapidly completing first one and then another, the Government would get more satisfactory results. Of course, if there is so much money in the Treasury that several projects can be rapidly pushed to completion at the same time so much the better.

WE CANNOT LIVE ON WATER ALONE

The Review said on Monday: "The city cannot afford to give away power below cost, but on the other hand, it would not be wise to try to make a large profit out of it in selling to manufacturers. The aim should be to make an arrangement that, while not burdening the taxpayers, will add to the importance of the city as a manufacturing centre and largely increase its population."

We publish to-day a letter from Mr. W. H. Moore, objecting to this statement. He apparently believes that the only thing the city council and the water commissioners should take into account is the amount of revenue that may be obtained from the power that can be generated at the waterworks dam. If the people of Peterborough lived on water alone that would unquestionably be the only sensible way of looking at the question. But, while the people must have water, they need some bread and butter, too, and would like to have many other things besides.

Nearly the whole population of Peterborough get their bread and butter and other necessities and comforts of life directly or indirectly through the existence of manufacturing industries in the city. Any recession of population must come through the extension of our present industries or the establishment of new industries. If any of our large industries should move away, almost every citizen of Peterborough would lose money by the removal, and if any new industry of importance should locate here nearly all our citizens would get some profit from it, for the money paid out in wages goes into general circulation. If a ratepayer saved fifty cents in water rates and lost five hundred dollars through the decline in business as a result of arrangements made he would not thank the water commissioners.

It is conceivable that the water commissioners might receive an offer for the purchase of power from someone who wished to corner all the power in the vicinity of Peterborough with a view to charging a high price for power. Such a purchaser might not utilize the whole of the cornered power. A high price for a part of the power might yield as large a revenue as a low price for the whole of it. There are several sources of power in the vicinity of Peterborough, and anyone controlling all of them might dictate terms to manufacturers. This would not be in the interest of the city, and yet if revenue from power is the only matter that should be taken into consideration, such an offer should be more acceptable to the city than a slightly lower offer from a manufacturing company which would agree to expend a large amount of money in buildings and plant and use the whole of the power for manufacturing purposes in such a way as to give employment to a large number of workmen, who would have their homes in the city.

On the other hand, the city should not jump at the first offer received from a manufacturing company without considering whether it is the best arrangement that can be made for the disposal of the power, and the price fixed should not be so low as to impose any burden upon water consumers.

Mr. Moore says that it is out of the water rates that the cost of construction of the power works will be met. We think the aim should be to arrive at some arrangement by which it will be unnecessary to charge the water rates with the cost of power used for manufacturing purposes.

EDITORIAL NOTES

What is the difference between rock bottom prices and rock prices? The Liberal contractors along the line of the Government section of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway can answer this question.

The Ottawa correspondent of the Montreal Star states that it is alleged that the wealthy American capitalists, who are trying to get control of the St. Lawrence water power have set aside two million dollars "for promotion." Does this explain why the Laurier Government is so determined to push the scheme through? Do they expect to get a large part of that huge sum for the Liberal campaign fund?

The Montreal Witness assumes that a tariff war would mean that American coal would be shut out of Ontario by a prohibitory duty, and that the people of this province would have no fuel. This is nonsense. Our Government will not be obliged to place a prohibitory tax on articles which we really need to get from the United States, but it can shut out the articles that can be produced just as well in Canada.

Newspapers which represent that the Conservative party is opposed to a Canadian-built navy are deceiving the people. Robert L. Borden, the Conservative leader, has again and again expressed himself as strongly in favor of a Canadian navy built in Canada, but he believes that while we are getting ready to build our own navy, we should pay for two dreadnoughts, to be constructed in England, in order that no time may be lost, and that our ships should on all occasions co-operate closely with the British navy.

The Zion Farmers' Club will hold an open meeting on March 31, when Mr. H. B. Cowan, of 'Farm and Dairy' will be present and deliver an address. A good programme is also expected.

The members of the club would like to see a large number present, as it promises to be one of the best meetings of the season. A pleasant and profitable time is ensured.

BASIL KING,

Author of "Let Not Man Put Asunder," "The Steps of Honor," Etc.

Copyright, 1908, by Harper & Brothers.

"Only in this way—that in our position it's a guarantee. He's one of the rich men of a rich country. There's no possible reason why he should marry any woman for any other object than herself. Mind you, I'm far from saying that if you married a poor man it might not be for love—love on both sides. But I'll go as far as this—there's no poor man you could marry for whom, however much he loved you, your wealth would not be an overpowering consideration. The very change it would bring into the daily circumstances of his life would oblige him to give his mind to it, perhaps more than to you. I must keep repeating, dear, that that's a point which weighs with me, though I shouldn't expect you to give it undue importance."

"I don't think I could," she said, with a wistful smile.

"All right. So much the better. Now for one thing more—Wiltshire is not only a good man and a rich man, but he's a man of very high rank. He can give his wife one of the best positions in the world as the world counts positions."

"I thought our own was very good as it is."

He raised himself and laughed.

"You're quite right," he returned. "It is a good position. But it's rather like that of the Bonapartes—good as long as you can keep it. It's a position that depends upon a strong man and requires a strong man to maintain it. And I want my little daughter to have the best of everything without the hardship of the struggle. If you were a boy I should feel differently, but as it is I want to see you in a place that will be based on something broader and solider than the mere possession of money. I want you to be where criticism and accusation can't touch you. You've never known to what an extent I've been assailed by them, and not only I, but every one with whom I have had much to do. We've kept you out of it as far as possible, but we couldn't do so always. They've struck at your mother and George and Laura and even at my friends. Very soon they will begin to strike at you simply because you are my child."

"I should be proud of it," she declared, throwing back her head with something of his own flashing of the eye.

"You wouldn't be proud of it long. The press of our country is perfectly pitiless on those who rise an inch above the general mediocrity. It spares no feeling and respects no sanctuary. The mere fact that you are Paul Trafford's daughter will make you a target to that great section of the public that has never ceased to pursue me with the most relentless hostility."

"But what could they say against me?"

"Nothing against you, darling—nothing against you. They could only ride the privacy of your domestic life and besmirch you with a hundred vulgarities. You might not perceive it, but it would be madness to me. It's only over here that we have some respite from that kind of thing, and therefore it's over here I should like to see you find a refuge. If you were like some women—like Laura, for instance—I mightn't hesitate to expose you to it; but, being what you are, I should like to see you so far removed from it all that even the echo of slanderous curiosity couldn't reach you. There," he broke off; "I think I've had my say."

She rose from her place and came slowly to him round the table.

"Thank you, papa," she said simply, slipping her arm over his shoulder and bending down her cheek against his brow. "Whatever I do you'll love me just the same, won't you?"

For answer he drew her slim white fingers to his lips. It vexed her that at that very instant George's words of last night should have returned to her memory like the refrain of some hideous song:

"Your father was obliged at last to club her down."

CHAPTER V.

"COULDN'T you take me somewhere?" Paula asked, turning with a smile to the duke as they pushed back their chairs after lunch at Ciro's. "Laura and George are going to Cap Martin, and I have nothing to do."

"We might motor over to Eze and see Alice," he suggested.

"No; let's walk up to Monaco. I've never been there, and you know you promised to take me."

The duke was radiant—or as near radiant as any one could be with so little power of facial expression. As they traversed the Galerie Charles III. on their way out he bumped into people and overturned chairs, with a joy in walking with his mistress like that of an affectionate dog. From the hotels and restaurants the crowds were sauntering toward the Casino, and there were so many salutes and greetings to exchange that only the most broken remarks were possible till they neared the sea wall. Paula knew they offered a topic of conversation to passersby, strangers and friends alike, and again she was conscious of the utterly foolish wish that he had been taller and that in his springlike attire and soft gray hat he had less the air of a prosperous grocer on the stage. If she had not known that he was only thirty-eight, looking it up for herself in Debrett, she would certainly have put him down as fifty.

"Have you seen your friend Mr. Winship today?" she summoned up courage to ask as they ascended the brick paved footway that leads up the face of the cliff to the old town of Monaco.

"Yes, for a minute this morning. He's over at Eze spending the day at Alice's."

Paula caught herself up before she could regret not having accepted the duke's suggestion after luncheon.

"They know each other very well, I think you said."

"Oh, very well. You must come over and see Alice's little place some day too. I fancy she's only been waiting for some definite"—

"Oh, I'm out of breath!" Paula exclaimed suddenly, turning round. "Do let us wait a bit. What a glorious view!"

The level of the Condamine lay beneath them in the foreground, a cluster of yellowish brown houses roofed in ocher red. On the height behind Monte Carlo, with its hotels and villas terraced one above another, sloped steeply down toward the sea.

They fell to discussing Monte Carlo. Paula sighed softly to herself as they moved on and after passing through an old gray gateway vaulted with yellow arches came up into the Place du Palais.

At the western edge of the terrace the duke explained where the different points of interest lay.

"This is what we come to Monte Carlo for," he said. "It isn't to be in the tide of fashion. It's because nature seems to have chosen the principality of Monaco as the single point of vantage from which to behold all her beauties in one glance. We soon tire of Monte Carlo, but this"—

With a gesture that was not without dignity he indicated the vast panorama of sea and sky, of headland and town, of blossoming gardens and snows on the hills. Paula thought she saw another faroff opening and carefully pointed her remarks toward it.

"How much you enjoy beauty—I mean beauty for its own sake. There are so few people who do. Now, I take only a secondhand interest in it. I like to have seen Egypt or Switzerland or California in order to be able to follow with some intelligence what others say about it. But with you it's different. So it is with your sister—or it seemed to me so the few times I've seen her."

"Oh, Alice is all right. She really knows about it, and I don't. She lives for art and artists."

"And I'm sure she does a lot of good. I thought what you said about her last night was so charming—I mean about her taking that poor blind lady, Mrs. Winship, to stay with her at Edenbridge."

"Oh, you'll like Alice when you know her well. She's got queer ways, like any old maid with ten thousand a year, but her heart is sound."

"Tell me about them—the Winships."

He turned to her with a faint smile.

"Haven't we something else to talk of first?"

"No, not first—afterward. Couldn't we go somewhere—out of the sun—and sit down?"

"We should be likely to find seats over there."

"I wanted to ask your advice about something," she ventured timidly as they entered the wonderful garden that clambers over the cliff and goes down, down, down till it almost meets the sea.

"Here's a good place, don't you think?"

He pointed to a bench in a nook formed by giant cacti of every sinister shape, massed in with pink and red geraniums growing like tall shrubs. Overhead there was a shade of cedar, cypress and pine, while far below the blue green sea broke with a monotonous rumble.

"I want you to tell me about the Winships," she began, looking down at the tip of her parasol, with which she traced aimless lines in the sand. "How did you come to know them?"

"Oh, it was a long time ago. Let me see—ten, eleven, twelve—yes, it must be quite fifteen years ago. After my mother died and Alice was free she went to Paris for a year or two to study art. In the atelier where she worked she fell in with Marah Winship."

"Is that the sister of the man I saw last night?"

"Yes, an older sister—a good deal older. She must be somewhere about Alice's age, not far off fifty."

"And does she paint too?"

"Yes, poor thing!"

"Why do you say poor thing?"

"Because she's had such a hard life. She had only the smallest kind of talent, if she had any at all, and yet she made herself a painter by sheer determination and pluck. You see, their father was dead, and they had lost all their money. There was a mother to be taken care of—a splendid, majestic creature when first I knew them, but already growing blind. Then there was this brother"—

"But he's a man."

"I'm speaking of fifteen years ago. He was only a lad then. The sister thought he had it in him to become one of the great portrait painters of the day, and so she brought him to Paris to give him the best chance. By love, she's been a plucky one! I've never seen anything like it. She has not only worked like a slave, but she's done the impossible. She's turned herself into what nature never meant her to become, and she's made a living for them all—a poor living, it must be admitted, and one of great privation, but a living all the same, and somehow they've managed to pull through."

"Do you know why they've been so poor?"

It was more the tone than the question that astonished Wiltshire.

"No," he replied rather blankly.

"It's because we took their money and their mines and everything they had away from them."

"We? Who?"

"Our family—my father. Oh, duke, I didn't know anything about it till last night, and today I feel as if we were a band of robbers. When I think of the way we've lived and the way they've lived"—

"Tell me about it," he said soothingly as she broke off, choking.

"I don't think I can. There's so little to tell and yet so much. It's all so dreadful, and it's—it's my father, duke."

"For that very reason you shouldn't be in a hurry to judge"—

"I know, but I can't help it. It's like a kind of jealousy in me—a jealousy for his honor that I thought so far above attack."

The duke's mouth twitched with a queer, significant expression, while a look of pity stole into his dull eyes.

"This Miss Winship's father was my father's competitor, and my father crushed him and ruined him and killed him. He died in the middle of all sorts of lawsuits, and then my father ruined the widow, the poor lady who, you say, is blind. Everything they possessed came to us. I can't exactly tell you how, but my cousin George would explain it if you asked him."

"I can guess."

"Yes, because you understand about business. But it's all so cruel, duke. I spend a great deal of money, but I can't spend it fast enough. I don't know what to buy that I haven't bought over and over again, and yet the money heaps itself up in spite of me. And now when you tell me of that poor Marah working against the grain trying to achieve the impossible and doing it"—

Her tone rose with a sharp, nervous inflection till she found herself unable to go on.

"There's one thing we must never forget," Wiltshire said kindly. "We're the inheritors of the past; we're not the creators of it. All sorts of complicated situations come down to us, and in them we can only grope our way.

"I want you to tell me about the Winships."

To be Continued.

Publish My Letter The World Over

The Words of Harold P. Bushy, Who Was Permanently Cured of Chronic Lumbago by "Nerviline."

"Three years ago I discovered that a man subject to lumbago might just as well be dead as alive." These words open the sincere, straightforward letter of H. P. Bushy, a well-known man in the plumbing and tinsmithing business in Portland.

"One attack came after another, and lumbago got to be a chronic thing with me. I could scarcely get in a day's work before that knifing, cruel pain would attack my back. I used a gallon of liniments; not one of them seemed penetrating enough to get at the core of the pain. I read in the Montreal Witness about Nerviline, and got five bottles. It is a wonderful medicine—I could feel its soothing pain-relieving action every time it was applied. When I got the disease under control with Nerviline, I built up my strength and fortified my blood by taking Ferrosone at meals. This treatment cured me permanently, and I urge everyone to give up the thick, white, oily liniments they are using, and try an up-to-date, penetrating, pain-destroyer like Nerviline.

"Please publish my letter the world over. I want all to hear of Nerviline."

Don't be cajoled into receiving anything from your dealer but "Nerviline." Large bottles 50c, trial size, 25c. Sold everywhere or The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ont.

PLANT WILL BE OPERATED

Lakefield Not to Lose Its Pet Industry—Letter Received from Canada Coment Co.

Special to the Review.

Lakefield, March 23—At the last meeting of the Town Council a communication was received from the Canada Cement Co. stating that they would carry out in letter and in spirit the contract made by the Lakefield Portland Cement Co. with the village of Lakefield. The company anticipate considerable difficulty in being able to operate the Lakefield plant in the future to full capacity on account of the local market not being as large as that of their other plants and also, on account of the higher cost of manufacture due to the high cost of coal.

Their intentions to operate to the fullest possible extent, consistent with good management have been further complicated by the issue of March 12th, of a writ of summons in an action brought by the Cavendish Lumber Co., Limited, and the Skilling-Whitney and Barnes Lumber Company against the Lakefield Portland Cement Co., Limited, and the Canada Cement Co. for damages, and an injunction to restrain them from operating their plant in Lakefield. The company would be glad to know whether the people of Lakefield generally regard this action as well founded.

A motion was also passed to introduce a by-law to establish fire limits within the village and to prohibit the erection of buildings, other than first-class, according to the underwriters' classification, without the consent of the council.

Industrial Commissioner for Lindsay

H. J. Lytle writing to the Lindsay Post, proposes that Lindsay should have an industrial commissioner and suggests that Mr. J. D. Flavelle might be induced to accept the position as he recently disposed of his business.

Arthur Craig's house at Presque Isle Point was destroyed by fire.

Alex. Scott, of Winnipeg, was ground to pieces by a fly-wheel in the Manitoba Cold Storage plant.

STENOGRAPHERS MAKING MUSIC

Novelty Musical Act in "The Girl Question" at the Grand on Good Friday

A genuine novelty of "The Girl Question," the delightful musical play by Hough, Adams and Howard, which comes to the Grand Opera House for two performances on Good Friday is the musical typewriter number, which opens the third act. The chorus girls represent stenographers and are seated at machines, and as they operate the keys, chimes operated by electricity and placed all over the house chime in accompaniment to the words of their song. The audience is always mystified at this number and invariably demand a dozen encores.

MAGNATES IN A LAUGH TRUST

Referring to the appearance of Florence Gear in "Fluffy Ruffles," the Pittsburg Leader, of March 15th says: Florence Gear and her company in "Fluffy Ruffles" proved at the Lyceum last night that they are all magnates in a laugh trust. There has not been a show in Pittsburg this season that has received a better reception than that accorded Miss Gear and her clever cast.

"Fluffy" is a society reporter, who is trying to run down a near-elopement. In order to keep close to the firing line "Fluffy" hires out as a maid to the wife of the man who has the eloping bee in his Knox. In this capacity she has a chance to cut in on all sorts of clandestine love scenes, wine breakfasts and such. There are two other reporters on the story, and "Fluffy" is unfortunate enough to fall in love with one of them and agrees to marry him. The last curtain left them engaged, but "Fluffy" acted as if she had to be "showed." Miss Gear has a pair of good right and left-hand men in Harry Roche and John J. McCowan. McCowan has a line of slang talk that makes a volume of George Ade look like a Chinese grammar. Roche got a great number of recalls on his song, "Old Man Noah." Victor Le Roy sang a couple of songs that took well.

The chorus was good, the scenic effects splendid and the lines bright.

PROPOSED SEWAGE SYSTEM CONSIDERED

The report of Willis Chipman, C.E., on the proposed sewage system for the south-western part of the city, was considered at the meeting of the Board of Works last night. The chairman read the report, which is a somewhat lengthy one, and it was decided to secure some more information on one or two points before taking action.

His Honor Judge Huycke lectured on "The Legend of the Holy Grail," at the Y.W.C.A. last night and delighted a large audience. The address showed deep thought and careful study and proved exceedingly interesting. Mr. T. F. Matthews was chairman. The proceedings opened with a piano solo by Miss Kathleen Burzette, followed by a vocal solo by Miss Kathleen Martin. Both were much appreciated. At the conclusion of the lecture a hearty vote of thanks was extended Judge Huycke.

Lecture on Joan of Arc

During the second week of April a rare treat is in store for the lovers of good literature in Peterborough, when in the interests of the Girls Auxiliary of St. John's church, the Rev. Dr. Lloyd, of Toronto, will deliver a lecture on "Joan of Arc."

Those who were privileged a fortnight ago to hear the Vice-Provost of Trinity preach in this town, will need no urging to avail themselves of the opportunity of again listening to his eloquent words, but to the many to whom Dr. Lloyd is still a stranger, we might suggest that this is a chance of hearing a man (who is a scholar and a thinker, whose subject will be well presented, and who is a master of English diction. Remember Joan of Arc, surely an opportune theme in this militant age.

COMMENDABLE ENTERPRISE OF PETERBOROUGH IMPRESSARIOS

In Their Organization and Direction of Local Talent to Represent City in Earl Grey Trophy Competition—Madrigal Club and "The Geisha" Should Both Acquit Themselves with Distinction

"Interest in the Earl Grey dramatic and musical trophy competition extends from Quebec to Winnipeg, several individual competitors having entered from those cities, and the smaller places in Ontario, such as Peterborough and Waterloo, have shown their courage and ambition by entering musical companies to compete with the best Toronto has." So said the Toronto Globe last Saturday, and to those who do not know it, be it known that the praise is due to Mr. Gliddon and Mr. R. J. Devey, who have entered the competition for the Earl Grey musical trophy, and accompanied (each leader) by about fifty voices propose to take Toronto by storm. Both companies will be heard here, the "Geisha" company in the Grand Opera House, on March 31st and April 1st, and the Madrigal Club in the Conservatory Hall on April 4th. A message has come from Col. Denison, Toronto, stating that Dr. Vogt will come to Peterborough to give the entries from here a preliminary hearing, in the course of the next few days, an honor quite unexpected by either of the Peterborough entrants. The caste for the Geisha is a strong one, and as many enquiries have been made about it, the members are given here:

O Mimosa San, Chief Geisha—Miss Lavina Hallihan.

Juliette Dament, a French Interpreter—Miss Lilian Dean.

Wave of the Sea, an attendant—Miss Leila Beach.

O Kiku San, Chrysanthemum—Miss Josephine Delaire.

O Hana San, Blossom—Miss Ruby Quartermaine.

O Kinkoto San, Little Violet—Miss Agnes Horsefield.

Komuraski San, Golden Harp—Miss E. Primeau.

Lady Constance Wynne, an English visitor in Japan, travelling in her yacht—Mrs. J. E. Firth.

Miss Marie Worthington, Miss Daisy Wood; Miss Ethel Hurst, Miss Shannon; Miss Mabel Grant, Miss Stella Collinson; Miss Molly Seamore, Mrs. R. J. Devey.—English ladies, guests of Lady Constance.

Reginald Fairfax—Mr. Geo. Chandler.

Dick Cunningham—Mr. John King.

George Grimston—Mr. Hickey.

Arthur Cuddy, Mr. R. Suteliffe.

Tom Stanley, Muddy.—Cyril H. Devey.

Officers of H.M.S. "The Turtle."

Captain Katana, Governor's Guard—Mr. Lee.

Takemini, Sergeant on Guard—Mr. Stacey.

Wun Hi, a Chinaman, proprietor of Tea House.—Mr. MacLaren.

The Marquis Imari, Chief of Police, Governor of Province—Mr. Nat Greenhalgh.

A splendid chorus supports the above strong cast. A few pointers about the play may be of interest. No less than twenty-six numbers have to be committed to memory in the short space of two months. This play ran for nearly three years in Daly's Theatre, London, England. In the first act are three numbers containing unaccompanied part singing, not of the easy variety, and the farewell solo in finale act 1 with vocal accompaniments are gems famous the world over. There is not the slightest doubt of the ambition of Mr. R. J. Devey and his company in undertaking a work of such magnitude from the staging point of view. But what of the financial end? The mere fact of presenting it in the Grand Opera House necessitates no small expense, and the Toronto end nearly doubles that. Special costumes, props, make up, and a hundred things all swell the expense, but a liberal patronage by the public at the forthcoming performances will bring a balance on the right side.

CEMENT TO COST CITY GOOD DEAL MORE THAN IN 1909

Best Quotation to Date is $1.65 per Barrel While 1909 Supply Was Secured for $1.25—Board of Works Decided to Use Electric Motor to Operate Stone Crusher

The city has not yet let the contract for the supply of cement for 1910. It is going to cost a good deal more than last year as the price has gone up since the 1909 supply was contracted for. Last year the cement cost $1.25 per barrel, with three cents per barrel more for testing and storage. The 1909 supply was contracted for in the fall of 1908. At the meeting of the Board of Works last night a letter was received from the Peterborough Hardware Company offering the 1910 supply of cement at $1.65 per barrel, F.O.B., or cars at Peterborough. Testing and storage will be six cents more. Sacks will be charged extra with rebate when returned to factory in good condition. Last year the city purchased about 3,800 barrels of cement.

There was a good deal of discussion as to what should be done regarding the cement contract for 1910. Some of the aldermen were in favor of closing with the Peterborough Hardware Co. at the price quoted. It was pointed out that the price might go up, and it was also pointed out that it might go down. In view of the fact that the cement is not required for two months it was decided to let the question stand for a few weeks to see what will happen.

Those present at the meeting were; Ald. Hicks, chairman; Mayor Morrow, Aldermen Metheral, Duffus, Gillespie, Phelan, Duncan and Graham and Street Commissioner Evans.

TO USE MOTOR.

A letter was received from the Peterborough Light and Power Company in regard to supplying an electric motor to be used for crushing stone. The company offered to supply a thirty horse-power motor to be used in the yard at Townsend street for $12 per week, which would include the power used. The city would be expected to pay the cost of installation. If the company paid for the installation the price would be $15 per week. If the machinery were placed in the bed of the Otonabee river later in the season, the price would be $12 per week.

Ald. Duncan moved and Ald. Phelan seconded, that the offer of the company be accepted and that the chairman and street commissioner make the necessary arrangements.

The engine which has been used to run the crusher in the past is in bad shape and a considerable sum would have to be spent on it to make it of use.

Mr. E. F. Mason, waited on the committee in connection with a request for a sewer on Antrim street between Water and George streets. It would not be necessary to build the sewer all the way to George street.

On motion of Ald. Phelan and Ald. Metheral, the engineer was instructed to report on the sewer asked for and that it be put in the advertised list if the engineer reports favorably.

A claim of $150 was received from Ruddy and Burnham, acting for Miss Phelan, who was the tenant of a house on London street, where it is alleged damage was done when a sewer connection was being blown out a few weeks ago. S. Edwards, proprietor of the tenement, has a bill for $52 in connection with the same matter. The City Solicitor reported that the city might be liable for a part of the claim of Mr. Edwards.

On motion of Ald. Phelan and Gillespie, the chairman and mayor were instructed to try to make a settlement.

The City Solicitor reported on the claim of Mrs. Tadgal, who alleged that her well had been contaminated by sewage. The city engineer reported that there was no contamination from sewage. Acting on this, the solicitor reported that the city was not liable. On motion it was decided to take no action.

In connection with the claim of the Cameron Septic Tank Company in regard to infringment of patent, Dr. Hodgetts, Toronto, notified the city that the company would settle for five per cent of the cost of the septic tank, which was $3,000. This would make $150. On motion of the mayor, seconded by Ald. Duffus, it was decided to write Mr. Chipman and find out if he would advise a settlement on the basis specified.

Ald. Morgan was present and asked that a sidewalk be built on Mark street between Sophia and Maria streets, and on Rogers street in front of the House of Providence and St. Joseph's hospital.

These walks will likely be built.

Ald. Morgan also asked about a water fountain for Hunter street east that would be in commission all the year round. The present fountain is only in use in the summer.

The city engineer's report on the matter showed that the present fountain could not be changed into one of the kind asked for by Ald. Morgan. It was decided to have the engineer ascertain what a new fountain would cost. Ald. Morgan said he would see that it was kept in condition.

MR. R. GIBBS GOT SUM SUED FOR

Yesterday morning in the Division Court the suit of R. Gibbs vs. George Stevens, for $4 cab fare, in connection with the hiring of cabs at the time of the Hartley celebration, was decided in favor of the plaintiff. The case was heard by Judge Huycke, and Mr. Geo Hatton appeared for Mr. Gibbs, and Mr. R. E. Wood for Mr. Stevens.

LAUNCH OWNERS HAVE THE FEVER

Are Eagerly Awaiting for the Opportunity of Making a First Trip Down the Otonabee

These fine days of spring are not without an effect on those who have during the past few summer seasons found employment in wiling away their spare time on and in the vicinity of the Otonabee river. Owners of launches and smaller craft are eagerly awaiting an opportunity of taking the first trip of the season and Rye's boathouse is the objective point of many an enthusiasts stroll. Last Sunday a large number found their way to this place and one of those present was Mr. T. Meredith, who with Messrs. George Osborne and Robt. Wright, made a trip down to Devil's Elbow and back, one year ago. The river is now almost entirely cleared of ice and it will not be long before the season is again in full swing.

The finest "first aid" is Zam-Buk for many reasons. It is antiseptic—kills the poison in any wound. It ensures any wound, or skin injury, or disease against poison-germs in the air which are always ready to enter a sore place and set up poisoning and putrefactive change. Immediately they enter Zam-Buk they are instantly killed.

While certain ingredients in Zam-Buk are thus protecting you against external dangers, the rich healing herbal essences in the balm penetrate the tissue, stimulate the cells, and bring about perfect healing. Nothing like it! Watch it work!

PROOF FROM THE HOMES.

Mrs. Halliday, of Wroxeter, Ont., says:—"I have found Zam-Buk a most reliable household remedy. I have used it for cuts, sores, and various skin diseases, and have found it an effective cure in every case. I would not be without a box of Zam-Buk in the house in cases of emergency, and I recommend all mothers to keep a box handy."

Mrs. H. B. Levy, of Hackett's Cove, N.S., says:—"Eczema broke out very badly behind my baby's ears, and, despite treatment, got worse and worse. I was advised to try Zam-Buk. It proved effective from the first, and in a very short time it cured the eczema completely."

CHAMPIONS BANQUETED AND PRESENTED WITH TROPHY

Members of St. Andrew's Church Hockey Team the Guests at An Enjoyable Affair Held in Their Honor

That a deep interest is taken in the young men of St. Andrew's church was evidenced last night, when the members of the champion hockey team, twice winners of the Church Hockey League, were the guests at a complimentary banquet tendered to them in the school hall, by the Ladies' Aid Society, and at which the Burnham trophy was presented to the team, by the donor, Mr. J. H. Burnham. St. Andrew's church may well feel proud of its representatives in the hockey game. With a record of only one defeat in two years, the players have always conducted themselves in a highly creditable manner, both to the church which they have represented, and themselves. The pleasant affair last night was an occasion of much interest and enjoyment for all those present, and the kindness of the ladies was the subject of much deserredly favorable comment. The many good things which they had prepared on the prettily decorated tables for the guests of the evening, were dispatched with a relish that bespoke of their high standard of excellence, and it was a contented looking gathering that responded to the call for attention from Mr. P. Kerr, who acted in the capacity of chairman, while the following toast list was carried out:—

THE KING.

CANADA.
proposed by Mr. N. Rutherford.

THE CHAMPIONS.
proposed by Mr. J. H. Burnham.

THE CHURCH HOCKEY LEAGUE.
proposed by Mr. W. Richardson.

THE PRESS.
proposed by Mr. G. McDonald.

The toast to the King was honored by the singing of the National Anthem, and Mr. G. A. Cornish, B.A., made an able response to the toast to Canada. In accepting the trophy and responding to the toast to the champions, proposed by Mr. Burnham, the captain of the team, Mr. Harry Clarke, made a graceful reply. Mr. H. Reed, secretary of the league, responded to the toast to the Church Hockey League, and the toast to "The Press" was responded to by representatives.

The entertainers of the evening were Messrs. C. Coleman and J. Johns, and their numbers were given in their usual pleasing manner. In the course of a brief speech, Rev. Mr. Potter moved a vote of thanks to the ladies, and Mr. J. Johns seconded it.

The singing of God Save the King brought the banquet to a fitting close.

BUGLE BAND CHAMPIONS OF INDOOR BASEBALL LEAGUE

Defeated No. 7 at the Armouries by 19-15—Each Team Had Four Shut Outs to Their Credit and the Contest Was Interesting and Well Played

By winning last night's game with No. 7, the Bugle Band nine won the championship of the Indoor Baseball League, the schedule of which has been played at the armories during the past few weeks. The final score was 19—15, with the figures at the seventh innings standing 9—9, and the game liable to go to the credit of either team. Of the hitting and errors which followed, the Buglers had the better of the argument and were returned winners with four runs to the good. The game was probably the best played in the schedule. The fielding was clean and brilliant at times, each team getting away with four shut-outs. No. 7 had gathered together an aggregation which looked good to take the measure of the leaders, but although the team put up a great struggle the result went against them.

The line-up of the Bugle Band was: W. Sharpe, p; Butcher c; Weatherston 1b; East ss; Rew 2b; McWilliams ls; Drysdale 3b; Miller rf; Fitzgerald, lf.

Umpires—Sharpe and Ray.

In the contest between the 24th Field Battery and No. 6, the former team won out by the score of 24—17. In the seven innings played, a good article of the game was dished up, and the spectators present were well pleased with the exhibition. The umpires were Sharpe and Butcher.

Seventy-five young people were in attendance at the banquet held by the Junior Epworth League, of George street Methodist church last evening and all spent an enjoyable time. STRIPED BASS.

And an Interesting Note About the Skimmer Clam.

It requires more than "catfish skill" to catch and successfully land the king of salt water fish, the beautiful striped bass. On must be patient, have no grouch, fish long and quietly, have endurance of strength and good nature, and then there is a possibility of the hook breaking or loosening, the line parting, or it may be that day that luck will be on the side of the salt water king.

One of the essential things to remember in striped bass angling is that one must be as careful in the selection of grounds as is the fish itself for the larger and gamer bass select as homes or feeding grounds the great beds of skimmer clams along the coast, out on the ocean floor. While they have no "nutcracker" in their throats, such as the drumfish and sheepshead possess, they are able with their powerful jaws to break the rather slender shell of the skimmer clam and obtain their food supply. The smaller bass, being unable to break the shells, enter the salt bays and feed on bloodworms, shedder crabs and such other food as their jaws can manage.

The skimmer clam deserves more than passing notice. So let W. H. Ballou, who knows the striped bass and the skimmer clam, tell about it. "It does not belong to the edible foods of the human race," says Mr. Ballou, "although it has been found varying in weight from a quarter of a pound up to four pounds. The skimmer clam, like all other clams, has the fatal habit of walking on the ocean floor by suction—that is, it moves its hinge up and slightly opens its shell, thereby sucking its way along in the sand.

"The edible clam species have the same habit. But as they live and breed only in salt water bays there are no violent seas to drive them about. The skimmer clam, living on the ocean floor, takes his life in his hands, as it were, when he emerges from the sand and goes strolling over the bottom. Unable to resist great seas, tides and undertows grasp him in fatal grip and roll him over and over toward the beach, where he is landed high and dry at high tide. In the early morning small boys and anglers gather the juicy bait by the basketful. Thousands of seagulls likewise swoop down on the unfortunate skimmers, cracking their shells and gorging themselves on the big meats."

FELT ALL USED UP

A Business Man Escaped Breakdown.

"It needs only the additional strain following a slump in business world like 1907-8 to bring many business men to the very limit of their physical endurance. Things began to get tight with me early in August '07," writes Truman J. Harcourt from Wilmington. "Larger payments in connection with my contracts had to be made, and it took so much of my capital that I found myself on the ragged edge. I had worked very hard and had perhaps smoked too much, so when pressure demanded strength my nerves gave out. I lost my appetite, couldn't get to sleep before one or two, and it looked as if I were all in.

Ferrozone The Best Man's Tonic

"I was reading the Telegraph and noticed the wonderful work done by 'Ferrozone.' I read of a case of nervousness it had cured and decided to try it myself. I am not going to tell you of my ups and downs during the first three weeks—one day I would feel pretty well, the next day like thirty cents. In three or four weeks the effect of Ferrozone was manifest. I gained steadily—that's the best of a good medicine. All I gained I kept, and to-day I am as sound, strong and vigorous as a young boy."

When you feel all used up—tired out—lacking appetite, energy and ambition, these are the signs of thin blood and weak nerves. Ferrozone will cure—try one or two Ferrozone Tablets at meals. Fifty cents a box, six for $2.50, all dealers or The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Canada.

The Czar of all the Russias has never felt safe or at home among his subjects. To show the feeling of insecurity which was entertained by the Emperor Nicholas I., Bismarck used to tell the following story, which is one of Poschinger's collected "Conversations With Prince Bismarck:" The court physician had prescribed massage for some ailment of the Czar, who, however, was unable to find a single person in his household to whom he cared to intrust the task. At his wits' end, he at last applied to Frederick William IV. for a few noncommissioned officers of the Prussian guard. These were sent and after the completion of the rubbing cure returned to Berlin heavily laden with presents.

"So long as I can look my Russians in the face," said Nicholas, "all is well, but I will not risk letting them work-away at my back."

From Bad to Worse.

A gentleman was admiring his pigeons the other afternoon when he heard a curious "thud" and saw one of his birds drop from a window sill to the ground.

Turning round, the gentleman was just in time to see a small boy in the lane drop a catapult and run.

After a short chase the culprit was caught.

"You young scoundrel!" ejaculated the angry owner of the pigeon. "What do you mean by coming and shooting my birds?"

"Please, sir, I didn't mean to do it," whined the captive. "I—I didn't shoot at the pigeon."

"Come, come," said the gentleman, "don't make matters worse. I saw the bird fall, and if you did not aim at it how came you to hit it?"

"Please, sir," blubbered the boy, "the pigeon got in the way. I—I was aiming at the winder."—London Tit-Bits.

CURED BRONCHITIS

Mrs Hopkins Says Her Life Was Saved—Choked and Gasped for Breath

"Some five years ago I was taken with a bad attack of bronchitis. I was affected with a bronchial cough and cold, the cough was generally much more apparent at night, and I would wake up choking and gasping for breath, and there seemed to be a terrible stoppage in my throat and tubes. My throat was tender and irritable, and had an aching sensation, which was especially bad at times. I doctored and used several remedies, but received no permanent relief until I used Hyomei. This remedy is certainly infallible, and it saved my life, and I accord it the credit which it deserves. There is nothing too strong for me to say regarding Hyomei."—Mrs. Ada Hopkins, 8 Cutter Ave., Coldwater, Mich., August 22, 1908.

Why Lord Minto Was Birched.

Rev. Dr. Warre, the new Provost of Eton, was head master of the famous school for twenty-one years, and assistant master for nearly a quarter of a century. He is a fine type of the athletic scholar, and has always held that genuine athleticism is healthy and noble. He rowed in the Oxford boat for three years. Dr. Warre was once obliged to birch Lord Minto for "staying out" for the purpose of visiting Henley to see his school-fellows row in the Ladies' Plate. Lord Minto tells the story against himself, and says that the matter came to Dr. Warre's ears through him being "spotted" by an assistant master.

Caddie's Lapsus Linguae.

The Duke of Argyll has enriched the humor of golf with a new story. In opening the new club house at Helensburgh some time ago, in the presence of a large assemblage of spectators, the duke commented on the picturesqueness of the situation occupied by the club house. It recalled to his memory an incident that occurred to himself one day when he said to his caddie that, on a certain course, a very fine view could be obtained. "Yes," said the caddie, with his arms akimbo, "it is a very fine panama."

Insurance Companies Lose About $125,000.00 by the Wreck at Spanish River

Double Liability for About Twenty-five Persons

A loss of somewhere in the neighbourhood of $125,000 is what the Accident Insurance Companies estimate the wreck at Spanish River bridge means to them.

They figure that about 25 of those who met death carried Accident Insurance, and the average insurance, according to the tables, is $5,000. In case of death in a railway disaster there is a double liability, making the figure $6,000, or $5,000 to be more conservative.

Their loss may total more than that, for the commercial travellers, a number of whom were killed, usually carry very heavy insurance. In addition, some of the companies make the policies payable on the death of the wife while travelling, though the policy is taken out in the husband's name. In such cases they pay the husband the same amount as they would have paid the wife were the husband killed.

The above goes to show the necessity of carrying Accident Insurance, as similar disasters happen almost daily.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Review does not hold itself responsible for opinions expressed byits correspondents

To the Editar of the Review:

Sir,—The above is the heading of an editorial item in your issue of yesterday, in which you say the city cannot afford to give away power below cost, but that it would not be wise to try to make a large profit selling it to manufacturers, and you ask that the ratepayers should know what is proposed to be done about the matter. Your language suggests to me that you would support a proposal to sell with the waterworks power at cost. If so, I would like you to give your reasons for doing so.

I would point out that there is a by-law now before the ratepayers for $70,000, intended to be used, if passed, in the erection of a power house, and in its equipment for the development of electrical power from the surplus water at the new dam, and your article has, of course, reference to that project. It is estimated that there should be an annual net revenue of $6,000, and upwards from this power, after making provision for the yearly sinking fund and interest needed to meet the debentures. I would also point out that if you look at the by-law passed for the erection of the new dam you will see that it was to be expressly for waterworks purposes, and for no other purpose. The operation of the whole system of the waterworks is vested in the Water Commissioners, and so long as they continue to manage and control the system of water supply for the city, one would naturally think, I believe, that they should be the body to direct how the revenue from this proposed development should be disposed of. Of course, if they have lost the confidence of the people in their position as commissioners, the quicker others take their place the better. In the meantime their duty as commissioners seems to be perfectly clear, namely, to apply the full revenue that can be secured from the works in the interests of the water consumers, and their interests only, for it is out of their rates that the cost of construction will be met, and that any diversion of the income or any part of it, or neglect to obtain the full value of the power which the dam is capible of, cannot be justified, and I am confident will not be permitted. I view it that the commissioners, while they are such, are the trustees of the water users, and not the council, and I will not believe without assurance that the latter body will attempt to turn aside the income in question from its legitimate course. That course conclusively is to give the full profit that the works will provide, to the water users in reduction of their rates or in the erection of a filtration plant to purify the water, in the doing of which latter the whole income will be required. If the power should be sold at cost only, as you seem to suggest, there will not be a dollar to carry out the objects I advocate. Let me ask, therefore, if you think it is right or expedient that we should have neither of these benefits? And will you kindly deal generally with my proposition, and, I am sure, greatly oblige your readers, for I believe that what I suggest is of vital importance to the best interests of the city. You will understand I am expressing my personal opinion in this matter, and not speaking for the other commissioners, although I believe they will generally approve of my position. I may add that I trust the pending by-law will pass for the reasons I have given.

Acute Dyspepsia

Restoration of Stomach Power Comes Quickly With the Right Medicine.

"My food seemed to decompose in my stomach," writes Mr. Ralph Clemmons, of Newbridge, P.O. "I had a stomach that failed in some way to perform its work. Digestion seemed more or less arrested and I grew thin, yellow, nervous. The stomach became distended and impeded apparently the action of the heart, for often, at night it would do great stunts. At times I would vomit a mucous mass, and at these times my head ached most terribly. A friend, who had been cured of a similar condition, advised me to take Dr. Hamilton's Pills regularly, which I did. The result in my case was simply marvelous. Dr. Hamilton's Pills removed the cause, strengthened the stomach, excited the liver to normal action, the kidneys were released of excessive work. Health soon glowed within me. I can now eat, sleep, and live like a live man."

LAND HUNGER IN CITIES.

Increasing Desire to Get Out on the Farm and What Causes It.

The American people have always had land hunger. They have it yet, and the people of the cities have it in more acute form than ever before. Several things have conspired to develop the "back to the land" idea in our city population. The first is the increased cost of living in cities. The most economical and prudent man who works for wages in a great city today cannot save much money even if he is well paid. Thousands who make what would have been called high wages ten or twenty years ago have little more than enough to pay their current expenses. Other thousands are barely existing without the possibility of becoming independent of the uncertainty of employment and the certainty of the collector's calls.

The panic of 1907, which took employment from many people without reducing their living expenses to any great extent, caused thousands to think seriously of getting into some business in which "the bits to eat and the dud to wear" will not depend wholly on matters beyond their control, such as panics, rents and prices.

Another cause of the present land hunger in cities is the reading of articles and advertisements in the daily papers. Never before were about so many wonderful tales of success in farming—success achieved without experience and without capital, independence acquired in a short time, prosperity on a few acres following close after the lack of it in the city. Not all this literature is false, but much bears with it evidence of embellishment, and some tells of achievements that are clearly impossible. Of course the advertisements calculated to interest the city man in land turn toward him the bright side of the picture. It is their purpose to interest him to the extent of selling land to him, and, whether such advertising appears in type or in the form of exhibits, it does not and cannot be expected to show him anything but the attractive side of life on the land.

It is a good thing for the public to become deeply interested in farming, to study it and learn more about it. Anything that makes men do this will at last result in a better understanding between the city and the country people of this great nation. But it is deplorable that in all this there must be so much misrepresentation, such inflated expectations and at last so many losses and disappointments, for many who attempt to gain independence without sufficient capital, without knowledge and without experience must be disappointed even if they do their level best. It would be so in any business.

True friends of city people will caution them against rashly investing all they have in something they know nothing about, will show them the necessity of study and counsel them against rash steps. The savings of many of these land hungry city people have come hard, and they should not be lured into investments that mean loss.

OUR FIRST TOMATO.

Jailbird Brought Seed From Bermuda and Startled Pennsylvania.

Now that so much controversy is under way concerning the wonder berry, it is interesting to read the reception accorded the first tomato grown in the United States, for both belong to the same family, solanaceae.

In reality the wonder berry is simply a hybrid but edible nightshade. The crossing of two species gave a flavor superior to either of the parents, and when eaten raw the taste is much that of a tomato and fully as good. It is not at all bitter when ripe, yet in its greener stage it is not so bitter as a green tomato. The only way in which the two fruits cannot compare is in the matter of size.

The story is told that a good many years ago a man recently arrived from the Bermuda Islands was committed to a Pennsylvania jail. He had with him a few seeds, which he planted in the jail yard, but before the plants came to maturity he was discharged. The plants bore strange fruit, which, as it ripened, changed from green to red and was greatly admired.

The matron of the jail, sure that it was poisonous, cautioned all the inmates against eating the fruit, but as she desired to save specimens of it she planted some of the seeds the following spring, and just as the fruit was well ripened the man from Bermuda revisited the jail and asked to see the plant. He called for pepper, salt and vinegar and to the astonishment and horror of the spectators ate the fruit with a relish. Having finished, he told them that this strange fruit was a tomato, or, translated into English, a love apple, and that it was wholesome and nutritious.

The seeds were therefore carefully preserved and distributed among friends and neighbors, who cultivated the plant as a curiosity, but it was years before prejudice gave way to appetite and this now most popular vegetable came into general use. Even now many people remember it as an ornamental rather than a useful plant. Probably more tomatoes are canned than any other fruit or vegetable, as they can be served in so many ways, eaten raw, with salt, pepper and vinegar or with a salad dressing, or plainly stewed in sauces, soups, preserves and pickles. The tomato is ever ready for an emergency, and the provident housekeeper is sure to have it in reserve. At first it was a small fruit somewhat bitter in flavor. Who knows but the wonder berry, now in a crude state, may be improved in both size and flavor and in far less time than the tomato? Give it a chance.

PROTECTION FOR TREES.

Cornstalks and Wire Netting Shield Them From Vermin.

One of the most timely and useful bulletins seen in a long time is a recent pamphlet issued by the Ohio experiment station, Wooster. F. H. Ballou gives practical methods of protecting young trees from the attacks of mice, rabbits and other vermin. As all fruit growers know, these little animals often cause great loss by gnawing the bark from the base of the tree up. The damage is usually worse in hard winters, when the natural food of these animals is scarce. They have been known to work in open winters and to girdle completely some of our best young trees. Mice are worse, as the hunter puts most of the rabbits out of commission. There is more damage done in sod than in open ground, as the mice like to nest in the grass.

One of the surest ways to invite disaster is to leave a mulch close around the trunk of the tree. The mice will work under it. If there is a bare space for a few inches around the tree there is usually little danger, for the mice rarely cross a bare place to work at the bark. In an ordinary winter one finds a mound of earth or coal ashes almost a foot high at the base of the tree ample protection. With deep snow this often fails, as the mice sometimes work under the snow if there is a nest near by. With rabbits, of course, this mounding will not answer.

Mr. Ballou gives a number of plans for protecting the tree trunk. His pictures are so clear that little description is needed. The object is to put something around the tree trunk which will keep the vermin away. If rabbits abound this protection should be high enough to prevent their reaching over it when standing on their hind legs. Perhaps the simplest plan is shown in the first cut. Here ordinary cornstalks are used—cut to the proper length, placed around the trunk and tied with wire or string. Rabbits do not tear the stalks off. Mice would gnaw them, and to circumvent them a roll of wire netting can be used. This is put at the base of the tree outside the stalks.

Checkrein Abandoned.

When a horse stumbles he is far less likely to go down if his head is left free. In England, where they are far ahead of us in everything pertaining to horses, the checkrein has been abolished, the last surrender being that of the artillery and commissariat trains of the British army, the change having been made by Sir George Burgoyne, the late commander in chief, and he testifies to the beneficial results attending it.

Fifty-seven carloads of household effects and farm implements left London last week for the west.

POPULAR WEDDING GIFTS.

New Things to Vary the Monotony of the Butter Knife.

The most popular wedding present of the moment is miniature furniture of the Sheraton and Chippendale period, and little chests of drawers, armchairs, tables and bureaus, just big enough for a fair sized doll's requirements, are being diligently searched for in the old curio shops.

These pieces of furniture, handed down from the classic period of English cabinetmaking, are exquisitely made and finished and altogether perfect specimens of the maker's art.

The miniature chests of drawers and bureau serve as jewel cases, the small top drawers taking the rings and brooches and the bracelets and necklaces being safely stored in the larger drawers. Not so long ago they could be picked up for small sums, but now choice specimens command high prices, and as the price is likely to go up still further they are profitable investments.

Old silver is a favorite wedding present, and more than one bride this season has been given one of the beautiful old silver toilet services of the Stuart period. They are for only very wealthy brides, however, for the price runs sometimes into the thousands.

Old cut glass makes a handsome present, but it should be bought with care, for there are many spurious imitations.

But the present most prized by dainty brides is old lace, the price of which goes up and up each year. There are many societies and organizations acting as distributing agents for modern laces, and very beautiful many of these laces, reproductions of the old patterns, are, but old lace comes rarely into the market. Few dealers indeed specialize in it, and the old lace sales in a year can almost be counted on the fingers of one hand.

A quaint little present, also from the antique shop, is a little silver or enamel patch box.

Keeping Tally With Sticks.

Many correspondents have dug into their memories for the survival of the notched stick as tally, which the exchequer has now renounced. "While staying with some friends not far from Rouen," writes one, "I noticed that the baker brought with him a number of sticks tied together at one end, one for each customer. The customer had one also, and, producing the stick, the baker put it with its corresponding stick and notched it." So the accounts were kept. They are kept in a similar way by the tallymen in the Kentish hop gardens.—London Chronicle.

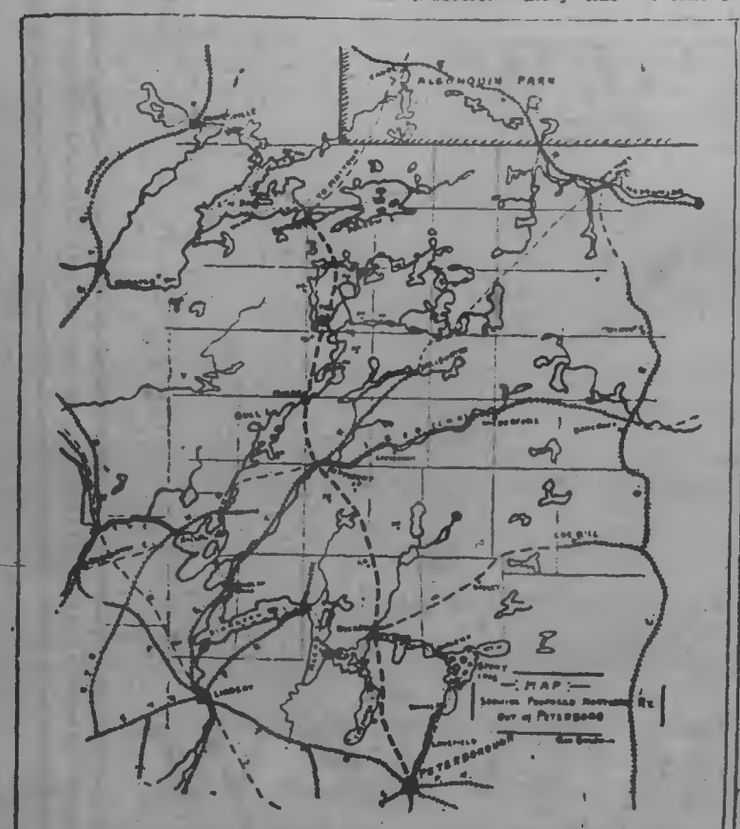
ANOTHER SUGGESTION REGARDING RAILWAY TO THE NORTH COUNTRY

Considerable interest has been aroused by the letters published in the Review regarding the feasibility and desirability of having a railway run north from Peterborough to tap a large section of country at present without railway accommodation. A in a map published in the Review on February 26th, which showed the proposed line touching Wilberforce and Whitney.

"Lindsay Citizen" writes as follows:

The chief objection I see in this Wilberforce-Whitby line is that it



Sketch prepared by Lindsay citizen showing what he considers a desirable location for the proposed railway from Peterborough to the north country.

Lindsay citizen writes to the Review, enclosing a sketch, showing where he thinks the proposed line should go. The route he outlines he considers is a more desirable one than that shown heads into a country already tapped by three lines, viz., the T.B. & O., the C.O.R., which is nearing Whitney, and the Haliburton branch of the G.T.R., which is surveyed out to Whitney.

There is also rumor of another line from Haliburton east, through Maynorth to Barry's Bay on the Ottawa division of the G.T.R. or the Canadian Atlantic. Moreover, back of Wilberforce the country is not settled. The line I propose runs all the way through a settled country, and one crying for railway connection. You will see that all the trade of the back townships of Peterborough County, which comes down the T.B. & O., will be caught up by this line at Kinmount. Then you have Minden, the county seat of Haliburton County, and the outlet of a rich farming and lumbering district. For probably a great many years the terminus of this line would be Dorset on the Lake of Bays, the newest and most popular tourist district in the highlands, and the gateway to the Algonquin Park. If the line were eventually extended to Mattawa, it would give the C.P.R. a direct line from Old Ontario to Cobalt via their Kippewa branch.

Therefore, you will see by looking at this map, that this line passes through the best farming districts in the back country, gives railway access to the best tourist districts, and at Buckhorn, Kinmount and Minden you serve all the lumbering districts.

From Buckhorn to Coe Hill I have shown a branch line to serve the Apsley settlement.

Hoping that this letter in connection with the one of Jan. 22nd. and enclosed may will cause this route to receive some consideration, I remain,

Yours truly,
LINDSAY CITIZEN.

ANNIVERSARY OF RIEL REBELLION

Second Rebellion Broke Out on March 23, 1885—Forty Volunteers Left Peterboro

To-day is the anniversary of the second Riel rebellion in Canada. It was on March 23rd, 1885, that Louis Riel took the step, which cost many lives, and also brought him in a short time to the gallows. Forty volunteers left Peterborough in the following month, in charge of Capt. Burke and Lieut. Brennan and these with other Canadians were under the command of Captain Williams, of Port Hope.

FUNERAL OF LATE REV. MR. STIRLING

Impressive Public Service in St. Andrew's Church—Large Deputation from Havelock

The services in connection with the burial of the late Rev. J. A. G. Stirling were held at St. Andrew's church at 10 a.m. to-day, and were of a very impressive character.

Mrs. C. S. McClelland, organist of the church, played appropriate selections as the mourners assembled. The Presbytery was well represented. The moderator, the Rev. D. A. McKenzie, officiated, and the following clergy were present: The Rev. Messrs. Brown, Thomson, Johnston, McDonald, Pogue, Keith, Dr. Marsh and Potter. The elders present were: J. R. Graham, J. S. Ferguson, J. C. Hook, Wm. Madill and J. W. Bennett. The chief mourners were the members of the congregation, a large number of them, both men and women, having come up by the morning train. The Rev. Mr. Holdsworth, Anglican clergyman, of Havelock, and the Rev. Mr. Balfour, Methodist clergyman, of Havelock, attended, and took part in the service. An interesting feature of the service was the expression of sympathy and sorrow expressed by Rural Dean Dr. E. A. Langfeldt, on behalf of the clergy of the Deanery.

The Rev. D. A. Thomson, clerk of the Presbytery, gave the address, basing his remarks on Philippians 1:21, "For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." Mr. Thomson's words were full of instruction and inspiration, and might be characterized as a timely call to all present to live more clearly the Christ life. The Rev. G. A. Brown led in the public prayer. The hymns sung were: "The Sands of Time are Sinking," "Forever With the Lord," "Jerusalem, My Happy Home" and "Christ, of All My Hopes the Ground."

Before the service closed the Rev. Mr. Keith referred to the closing days in the life of the late minister and paid a fine tribute to the qualities of head and heart enjoyed by Mr. Stirling. The Rev. R. Pogue closed with a brief prayer and benediction.

The floral tributes marked the esteem of the congregation and Presbytery.

The Rev. D. D. McDonald, of Keene, took charge of the services leaving the church edifice, and the pallbearers were Rev. Messrs. Johnston, Marsh, Pogue, Keith, Brown and Thomson. As the corpse was carried from the church the organ pealed forth the sounds of the Dead March in Saul.

The carriages were occupied by the members of the congregation of Havelock, and the clergy of the Presbytery of Peterborough.

At a special meeting of the Presbytery, held before the service, the Rev. Jas. G. Potter was appointed Interim Moderator of the congregation of Havelock, and was requested to hold a memorial service in the Havelock church next Sunday morning and to declare the pulpit vacant. The congregation will proceed at once to call a minister and the Rev. Mr. Potter will go to Toronto to-morrow to make arrangements for carrying out the will of the Presbytery.

HAVELOCK

Special to the Review.

Havelock, March 23.—The home of Mr. Andy Althouse, of Round Lake, with all its contents, was completely destroyed by fire on Friday last. The fire, which was caused by a defective chimney, started in the upper part of the house, and before noticed the building was a mass of flames. An attempt was made to recover some of the household effects, but those present were driven back by the smoke and fire so that there is nearly a total loss of house and furniture.

The meeting of the Junior Auxiliary of St. John's church was held in the basement of the church on Saturday afternoon of last week. There was a very large attendance of members and very encouraging reports for the past year were presented. Mrs. Thomas Cummings has been appointed president for the ensuing year, while Miss Made Curtis is treasurer, and Miss Berta Bryans, secretary. Meetings of the auxiliary will be held each Saturday.

Mr. W. Richardson, of Norwood, was in town on business on Tuesday.

CHINESE WARLIKE

Military Awakening in Great Eastern Empire—Arms for Everybody.

Berlin, March 24.—A genuine military awakening in China was foreshadowed in an interview given by Chinese Minister Yn-Tchang, who is about to relinquish his post in Berlin and return to Pekin to assume the Ministry of War.

"I intend to introduce compulsory military service in China," said the Minister, who added: "If we make all the available men join the military, we have such an enormous population—some 400,000,000—that we shall overshadow all other armed nations.

"The details of the plan have not yet been worked out, but we propose to make our young men soldiers, not only through drills, but by education. They must learn what a shame it is for the most ancient and, in population, the greatest nation on earth to be so weak.

"I shall have excellent assistants in the War Office, who have studied European military systems and will be of the greatest help."

TO ORGANIZE A LABOR PARTY

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., March 24.—After being in session all day, the executive council of the State Federation of Labor came to the conclusion that it would be inopportune to call a state-wide strike to aid the striking street car men in Philadelphia.

This decision was reached unanimously and it is said to have been hastened by the action of the textile workers of Philadelphia, who went out on a sympathetic strike and who on Tuesday night voted to return to work.

Instead of appealing to the state unionists to quit work, the council fell in with the movement started in Philadelphia Tuesday night to form a labor party in the state.

President Greenawalt was very positive in his statement that the only way the working classes in Philadelphia and throughout the state could get justice was through the ballot box.

HIS SPECULATION ENDED IN DEATH

Philadelphia, Pa., March 24.—Placing a revolver to his breast while an express train from Buffalo on which he was a passenger was pulling into the Reading railroad station yesterday, William H. Swanberg, aged 40, manager of a big Chestnut street department store, killed himself almost instantly.

Swanberg was returning from Chicago where he had visited his son. A letter to his wife stated that he had met with reverses in Wall street speculation.

HON. J. J. FOY IS MUCH BETTER

Toronto, March 24.—Hon. J. J. Foy, Attorney-General, was back at the Parliament Buildings yesterday, after an absence of nearly three weeks through sickness. He hopes to be well enough to attend the inter-provincial conference at Ottawa on March 29. Hon. Dr. Pyne expects to be back at his office next week.

VICTIM WAS A WATFORD MAN

Watford, March 24.—The man killed in Monday's wreck at Marshalltown, Iowa, was John Bambridge of Watford, Ont. He was on his way home from a trip to Saskatoon, Sask., and was to have stopped at Marshalltown, where a daughter, Mrs. (Rev.) Wise resides. The remains arrived here yesterday.

OLDEST MASON IS DEAD AT NEWPORT

Newport, N.H., March 24.—James Bellows McGregor, believed to be the oldest Freemason in the world, died at his home here yesterday, aged 108 years. McGregor remembered the war of 1812 and the receipt of the news of the French defeat at Waterloo. He joined a Masonic lodge at Salisbury, N.H., in 1825.

TORONTO WAS SUCCESSFUL

Ottawa, March 24.—It has been agreed that the Hamilton, Waterloo & Guelph Radial Railway will be given permission to cross over and under highways and easements of the City of Toronto, on plans to be agreed to between the city and the company engineers, the Railway Board to arbitrate if differences arise.

The company definitely agrees to the proposal of the city that lines are not to parallel streets, it being distinctly understood that the rights of the company as outlined above apply to the "crossing" of streets. Thus the city wins its main contention.

BAD MAN ON TRAIN

Shoots Conductor and the Pullman Car Porter—Battle With Police.

Wilmington, Del., March 24.—Three men were killed on a northbound Baltimore & Ohio Railroad train yesterday afternoon in a fight, which began at Newark, Del., and ended in a desperate battle between the police, aided by the firemen and citizens, and a murderer at Delaware Station here, following the arrival of the train at 5.17 o'clock. Several were wounded.

The dead are: O. E. Wellman of Philadelphia, conductor of the train; Sam Williams, colored, Pullman porter, whose home is said to have been in Jersey City; and J. H. Bethea of Dilton, S.C.

The triple tragedy was the result of an altercation between Bethea, who was a passenger, and Williams, porter on the Pullman.

The car was bound from Washington to Jersey City. Bethea, who had been drinking heavily, shot the porter through the heart, killing him instantly. When Conductor Wellman saw the porter and ran up, Bethea fired a second shot into the colored man's body. Then, without a word, he shot Wellman through the heart. The conductor fell dead in his tracks. Before the passengers could interfere the double murderer barricaded himself in the toilet-room of the Pullman car and threatened to kill the first person who approached. Meanwhile, the train reached Wilmington. When it came into the station a hurry call was sent to the police station.

When the officers arrived and called on Bethea to surrender, he opened fire on them with an automatic revolver. After a battle lasting an hour, the murderer was driven from his stronghold by firemen with hose, and continued his fight from the car platform, where he was at length shot down.

A tragic incident of the affair was that when Williams, the porter, was shot, he fell into a seat in the car. All through the battle the dead porter sat with the appearance of one looking from the window.

Was Wealthy Man, But Ill.

Dilton, S.C., March 24.—John H. Bethea, who yesterday killed two men on a Baltimore and Ohio train and was afterwards himself killed, was a well-to-do contractor of this place, and a member of a prominent South Carolina family.

He left here Monday for Johns Hopkins Hospital at Baltimore, where he had planned to have an operation performed in the hope of being cured of a disease which had troubled him for a long time. When he left here he seemed perfectly rational.

Bethea was about 40 years old and was unmarried.

LATE TICKS FROM WIRES

Victor J. Bubelka of Toronto was robbed of $2,000 by a woman in Pittsburg.

San Francisco has begun the collection of $5,000,000 for a Panama-Pacific world's fair in 1915.

Congress has passed the bill to raise the battleship Maine in Havana harbor and to inter the bodies of the sailors in Arlington cemetery with the wreck masts for a monument.

According to a verdict brought in by six men sitting as a jury in Morristown, N.J., "damn" is not an oath or "swear word," such as is prohibited by the Vice and Immorality Act of New Jersey.

Congress has passed a bill providing a penalty of not more than $1,000 fine on any proprietor of a place of amusement in the district of Columbia and the territories who may refuse admission to a soldier or a sailor of the United States because of his uniform.

Nichols, 28 years, a grocer, who has been missing from his home in Hiawatha avenue, East Toronto, since the beginning of January, was found floating in the bay in the Yonge street slip, yesterday, by Second Mate John McKeown of the Corona. It was taken to the morgue. No inquest will be held. He leaves a widow and four children. It is believed that death was accidental.

W. HURON MEMBER SAYS HOUSE IS ONE ON THE TARIFF ISSUE

Gives Parliament a Sensation When He Announces He is With Hon. Mr. Fielding on Tariff Situation, But Refuses to Pledge the Party to It.

Ottawa, March 24.—N. Lewis (West Huron) made the Commons sit up yesterday afternoon when he announced that the Opposition was behind the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance in the tariff difficulty with the United States. R. L. Borden, the Opposition leader, is in Boston, and Hon. John Haggart and Dr. Sproule are leading the Conservative party in his absence.

Mr. Lewis began by asking if the Government did not consider that it was due to the business community to give some indication as to whether they were to expect a tariff war or not.

Said Hon. Mr. Fielding:—"I am afraid that, with every desire on my part to inform the House of what they naturally desire to know in this matter, I am not in a position to give any statement in negotiations of the character which it is known are now in progress, it would be impolite in the highest degree to make any statement until a conclusion has been reached. At the conclusion of the conference, which I had the honor to hold with the President of United States at Albany, a brief statement was given out that "the matter remains as one of friendly negotiation." That was the condition at that moment, and that is the condition to-day.

"I am very hopeful that an early arrangement will be reached, but I do not think any good purpose would be served by our making any statement to-day."

Thereupon Mr. Lewis stated that the Opposition was behind the Government on this question, irrespective of party.

R. S. Lake (Qu'Appelle) asked: "Are you speaking for the whole party?"

"No, not for all the party," said Mr. Lewis, who was continuing his speech when the Speaker interrupted to say that he could not enter into a discussion.

Mr. Lewis: I want to say to the Minister that I am with him.

Hon. H. R. Emmerson: He'll feel better now. (Laughter.)

Haughton Lennox (South Simcoe) said that, before Mr. Lewis had propounded his question, he had proposed to ask him, and which he did not think would involve the disclosure of any state secrets. The question was:

"Having regard to the fact that Parliament is now in session, will the Finance Minister assure the House that he will not agree to admit the United States to participation in the intermediate tariff, or otherwise substantially to alter the tariff conditions between Canada and the United States, without first submitting the proposals to Parliament?"

Mr. Fielding replied that it would not involve the disclosure of any secrets, but it would involve one of policy, which he thought would embarrass the freedom of negotiations which all desired that the Government should have. He would ask both sides of the House to assume that the Government was thoroughly seized of the importance of the whole question, and was dealing with it in the manner conceived to be consistent with the best interests of Canada.

"I may say," concluded Mr. Fielding, "that if there are to be any guns in the matter, we will be exceedingly glad to have the member for West Huron along with us, behind the guns. But if we can avoid the use of guns at all, that will be much better."

Dr. Sproule (East Grey) enquired as to the probable duration of the session.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier replied that any additional program of business would be of a light character. There would be some supplementary estimates for the coming year, resolutions about dry docks, and possibly some other matters which at present he was not at liberty to disclose. On the whole there was nothing to prevent "very early prorogation."

Dr. Sproule asked if the Government intended to go on with the insurance bill and the banking bill.

Mr. Fielding answered that in his opinion the insurance bill was in such a good shape that it could be dealt with without much delay. However, he was beginning to despair of getting the bank act through this session.

Hon. Frank Oliver introduced a bill to amend the Irrigation Act. He said the bill was to give power to expropriate reservoir sites. It also would enable the Government to dispense with the filing of elaborate plans for minor schemes, drainage at present being assumed to be the responsibility of the provinces.

Hon. John Haggart remarked that the point arose as to whether the Federal Government had any right at all to legislate regarding irrigation.

Mr. Oliver introduced another bill to confirm and declare the rights of the crown with respect to water and water power and relating to the division, acquisition and use of water in the railway belt of British Columbia. The proprietory rights to water granted by the Provincial Government were in a state of uncertainty. The bill declared that the right to the water was vested in the Dominion and made provision for carrying forward the rights granted by the Provincial Government until a decision was given by the Privy Council. Development, meanwhile, would not be held up.

Hon. A. B. Aylesworth introduced a bill to amend the act respecting the National Battlefields at Quebec, to provide a more efficient means of expropriation by allowing the terms of the expropriation act to be exercised.

The House spent the afternoon on minor bills, and adjourned until next Wednesday.

HAS TARIFF BEEN SETTLED?

New York, March 24.—The Tribune, Republican organ, says to-day:

There was a report last night that the national Government had arrived at a definite arrangement with Canada on the tariff. It was said that this would be promulgated within a few days from Ottawa and Washington.

The conference at Albany, it was said, had not led to any definite understanding, but that since then there has been an interchange of communications with the President and the Canadian Government, which resulted last evening in the smoothing over of all difficulties."

The mother had left the house to do chores in the barn. The child was in a baby carriage playing with a ruler with a piece of string attached, a few feet from the stove. It is supposed the string became ignited, and the clothing caught fire.

The mother found the charred remains in the carriage.

Putney, Eng., March 24.—The Oxford crew won the championship eight-oared boat race with Cambridge yesterday by three and a half lengths in 21 minutes 14 seconds, official margin and time.

Oxford rowed true to form yesterday, and won the 67th struggle easily on the official course from Putney to Mort Lake, a distance of 4 1-4 miles, and after the first mile there was never any question as to the result. At the first mile, the lighter Cambridge men were a quarter of a length ahead, but they had shot their bolt in this early spurt and began dropping behind.

BORDEN IN BOSTON

He Tells Hub Citizens of the the Greatness of the British Empire.

Boston, March 24.—"The task which confronted George Washington and Alexander Hamilton, in the construction days following 1784, was not unlike that which confronts the statesmen of the British Empire at the present time," was the declaration made in an interesting address delivered before the Boston Canadian Club last night by R. L. Borden, leader of the Conservative party of Canada. He said, in part:

"The task of the British Empire to-day is one of surpassing greatness. You have great problems, but consider for a moment those of the empire.

"Double the area of your vast territory, divide it into a hundred fragments, great and small, and distribute them among the continents, and throughout all the seas.

"Consecrate three-fourths of your white population into an area of 250,000 square miles, and make it dependent on your overseas dominions for its food supply.

"Undertake the government of a distant alien population of 300,000,000 endowed—maybap encumbered—with very old complicated civilizations, embracing 50 jarring and jealous nationalities, a hundred religions, a thousand different castes, and still unpermeated by any real capacity for the task of self-government.

"Add to your responsibilities some fifty colonies and protectorates, scattered throughout the world, and governed by such diverse administrative methods as are best adapted to the requirements of their several peoples.

"Complicate this situation by the growth of great neighboring naval powers, tending to deprive you of that secure and open path across the seas, which would be absolutely essential to the integrity and cohesion of your empire.

"And commit the control of so vast an empire to a Parliament that is called upon to settle not only great imperial questions, but a thousand matters of purely domestic concern, which in the United States or Canada is largely left to state or provincial legislatures or to municipal authorities."

CLAIMS TOO MUCH FRENCH IS TAUGHT

Ottawa, March 24.—Archibald McFall of Lemieux, Russell County, a Roman Catholic, but a public school supporter, has laid a complaint that he cannot get his children taught enought English in the public school to fit them properly for the duties of Canadian citizenship. He claims that, though the school he pays taxes to and sends his children to is a public school, the larger part of the teaching is in French. The school is known as the Rose Corners school.

Water Commissioners

The water commissioners held a meeting yesterday afternoon and transacted routine business.

BRADLEY IS FREE

Judge, However, Thinks He Was Guilty of Manslaughter—Applause From Crowded Court Room.

St. Catharines, Ont., March 24.—The jury in the Bradley murder case returned a verdict of not guilty here last night, after about three hours' deliberation.

Chief Justice Sir Gwenholme Falconbridge, in addressing the prisoner, after the rendering of the verdict, remarked that he did not agree with the jury's decision.

"I would have found you guilty of manslaughter," said he. "I believe this man's death was attributable to you." His lordship's charge to the jury was along this line.

The court-room was crowded to the doors, and the verdict was received with an outburst of applause.

The evidence of the afternoon was mainly in rebuttal. Dr. McCoy contradicting Drs. Macdonald and Jessop as to whether the deceased could have so fallen as to have received the wound that caused death.

Bradley had got into a fight with George Bulman, on a radial car on New Year's Day, and, according to witnesses for the crown, had struck and kicked him in such a manner as to cause almost instant death. Defence witnesses gave evidence mainly to discredit the statements of those who had sworn to seeing the blows delivered.

Bulman was an Englishman, who had been in Canada about eighteen months, and was employed in a paper mill. He was married and left a year-old boy. Bradley has been a life-long resident of the locality, and has a wife and daughter. He has always borne an excellent reputation.

NAVAL AIRSHIPS

An airship costs less than a warship, and there is some reason to believe that a small airship may be able to destroy a large warship. It might be a good idea for Canada to have a few airships to protect her little navy against big warships.

The Germans and the French led the way in building naval warships, but Britain already has one and will have more. Sailors are already being trained to act as crews. The first British naval airship is to be used in patrolling the North Sea. It could carry twenty or thirty men, but the crew is limited to six in order to carry as much war material as possible. A special feature is a magazine for carrying explosives.

The progress made in the art of navigating the air during the last five years is wonderful. If equal progress is made in the future wonderful things will be accomplished during the next ten years.

It may be that the wars of the future will be fought largely in the air and that conditions will approach more nearly to those which prevailed in the days of sailing vessels. In the old days warships were not costly and battles at sea were won by the prowess of the men who manned them. Modern naval warfare is a contest between huge machines of enormous cost, and success does not depend so much on the valor of the men as in the old days.

WORK FOR NEXT SUNDAY

Rev. J. A. Macdonald, editor of the Toronto Globe, spent last Sunday in Albany trying to bring about a trade agreement between Canada and the United States.

We would suggest that it would be a good idea for him to spend next Sunday in Ottawa trying to persuade the Laurier Government to be honest. It is not honest to spend millions of dollars belonging to the Canadian people in paying contractors at rock prices for clay excavation. It is not honest to refuse thorough investigation of the charges of overclassification all along the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. There are many other dishonest acts of the Laurier Government that require investigation, but this one question should be enough to occupy Rev. Mr. Macdonald all day Sunday. If he could persuade the Government to abandon their corrupt methods and so administer the affairs of the country that they would not be afraid of a thorough investigation at any time, he could save the people of Canada more money than they would make by a trade treaty with the United States, however favorable it might be, and he would have the additional satisfaction of feeling that he had brought about a great moral reform and improved the tone of public life in Canada.

If he failed to persuade them to abandon their evil ways he might return to Toronto and devote the remaining six days of the week to denouncing their iniquity in the Globe as he would denounce it if they were his political opponents instead of being his political friends.

DON'T GET SCARED

The Toronto Sun, the only surviving Canadian advocate of commercial union, has been trying to alarm its readers with a scare article upon the dreadful effect of a tariff war with the United States. It says that one-half of Canada's foreign commerce is with the United States, and that a country cannot lose half its foreign trade at one blow without suffering the most [illegible] consequences.

As a matter of fact, the trade would not be lost. It would simply run in different channels. A good deal of it would turn into Canadian channels. Immense quantities of goods now made in American factories for Canadian consumption would be made in Canadian factories instead. The factories now in the country would run at their full capacity, and a great many American manufacturing concerns would establish branch factories in Canada if they thought the Canadian tariff against the United States would be maintained at a high level.

Each workman employed in the United States in manufacturing goods for Canadian consumption now consumes about ten cents worth of Canadian farm products annually. Workingmen employed in Canada doing the same work would get nearly all their food supplies in Canada. Thus if the manufacture of goods were transferred from the United States to Canada the Canadian farmer would at once have a better market for his products.

Then a large portion of the trade now running in American channels would be transferred to the United Kingdom, Germany, France and Belgium. Anything not obtainable in Canada could be easily procured from one of those great manufacturing countries.

If the United States imported no Canadian farm products the Americans would have less of their own products for export. At the present time the Americans send large quantities of farm products to the United Kingdom, where they compete with Canadian farm products. The British people would be compelled to buy more Canadian farm products if the supplies they are accustomed to get from the United States, were reduced.

Evidently neither our manufacturers nor our farmers would suffer severely from the cutting off of trade with the United States. But how about the railways? The Sun says that Canadian railways would suffer a body blow in the curtailment of traffic if there were a tariff war between Canada and the United States. The railway men are not alarmed. Sir William Van Horne once said that the best thing that could happen for Canadian railways would be the establishment of a tariff wall so high that not a thing could come into Canada from the United States. As already pointed out by The Review, most of the Canadian railways run east and west. The kind of trade they want is interprovincial trade that must of necessity go east and west, and trade with countries across the ocean, which gives traffic to their steamships as well as to their railway trains. When the trade runs north and south American railways get about three-fourths of the profit in handling it.

Evidently there is no reason for Canadians to get alarmed about reports of a tariff war. What would be much more alarming would be a confirmation of the report that a special reciprocity treaty may be arranged between Canada and the United States.

EDITORIAL NOTES

During the last ten weeks the Montreal food inspector has seized over 52,000 pounds of meat, fish, etc., unfit for human consumption. About 17,000 pounds were seized at abattoirs of the city and the remainder at markets and butcher stalls. In a great city, where food is brought from all over the country, there is much more danger of decaying meat being sold than in small cities and towns.

Those who think Canada could avoid the necessity of naval and military expenditure by independence or annexation to the United States, should note that the naval and military expenditures of the United States for the last eight years have averaged $155,400,000 annually. At the same rate per head of population Canada would have expended about fifteen and a half million dollars annually. However, Canadians have allowed British taxpayers to pay the whole cost of Imperial naval defence during the last eight years.

Sherbrooke Street Railway has just secured a franchise for 25 years.

Joseph Barling's house, at Spring Valley, Ont., was destroyed by fire.

Gen. Bell absolved the trolley car motorman from blame for the accident.

Blunder Costs $70,000.

Calgary, March 24.—A short time ago Mayor Jamieson and City Clerk Gillis went to Ottawa to arrange the sale of city debentures, money realized to take up two civic notes held at local banks. Through a blunder the bonds were not negotiable, when sent to London, Eng., and the notes here had to be renewed costing the city over $10,000 in extra interest. The clerk will likely be asked to resign.

Ordered to Leave Town.

Franklin, N.H., March 24.—To prevent a strike and possible rioting among the employes of the International Paper Co. here, the City Council yesterday summoned before it John H. Malin, president of the International Sulphite Pulp and Paper Mill workers, and requested him to leave town. The Council also ordered the city marshal to keep Malin under surveylance.

The Giant's Strength

...By...

BASIL KING,

Author of "Let Not Man Put Asunder," "The Steps of Honor," Etc.

Copyright, 1908, by Harper & Brothers.

You inherit the situation your father made for you, and Mr. Winship inherits that which his father made for him. You and I know too little to judge either side. We're too remote from all the conditions to apportion out the real rights and wrongs"—

"And therefore," Paula interrupted, somewhat bitterly, "we should settle down complacently to accept things as they are."

"Not quite that. But if we can't accept things as they are we mustn't try to force them into being what they can't become. We can only learn by degrees how to adjust what's wrong"—

"But you can adjust anything with money—that is, if you have enough."

"Not everything, unhappily."

"But I could adjust this."

"You mean that you could give the Winships money? Oh, no, you couldn't."

"I don't mean that I could give them alms or do anything with condescension. But couldn't I give them a great deal—as much as they ever lost—more than that? I have a great deal of money of my own—I don't know how much, but it must be a large sum—and I'd give it all to them. You could help me. You know them, and I could do it through you if you only would"—

"Softly, softly. You couldn't do anything of that sort. They wouldn't take it. Things aren't managed so directly as that in this complicated world. They'd be offended, you know. They wouldn't listen to me"—

"Oh, yes, they would! Everybody listens when it's a question of getting money. You'd beg it as a favor. You'd say it was not in pity for them, but in kindness to me. You'd put it that way. And they'd take it. I know they would. I've never seen any one refuse money—if it was enough. Oh, duke, do!"

She ended abruptly, with a quaver in her voice, like a little wail. Wiltshire sprang to his feet and took two or three turns up and down the gravel path. Returning, he resumed his seat beside her.

"You mustn't do anything rash in the matter," he said gently. "You mustn't have the air of seeming to judge your father."

"I don't," she answered quickly. "I know he didn't do anything wrong. I should never admit otherwise. Only"—

She did not finish the sentence, and Wiltshire, leaning toward her, laid his hand on hers.

"Dear Paula," he whispered, "could not we let it be until you and I could manage it together?"

She did not withdraw her hand from his touch, but the eyes she lifted toward him were full of the mute appeal of an animal begging to be let off.

"You've never answered my question—my great question," he went on tenderly.

"I've been trying to," she managed to say.

"And you don't find it easy?"

She shook her head, letting her eyes fall again.

"But you've been making the effort?"

"Yes," she murmured, just audibly.

"And it's been a great effort?"

"Yes."

"So great, in fact, that you don't feel the strength to make it?"

"I'm trying to," she said hurriedly. "I want to."

"You want to? In what way?"

Again she lifted her appealing eyes to him.

"I—I—want to please father," she stammered, "and make you happy, and—and"—

"And sacrifice yourself?" he added.

"It wouldn't be a sacrifice if I could do those two things," she stammered on.

"That is," he corrected, "not so great a sacrifice but that you could make it."

She nodded her assent. A few seconds passed in silence when Wiltshire slowly withdrew his hand and sat erect.

"I've hurt you!" Paula cried, turning sharply toward him. "That isn't what I meant to say. You haven't understood me. I'm ready to be your wife if it will make you happy. Indeed, I'm ready. You don't know how I honor you, how good I think you, now"—

"Oh, yes, I do," he broke in, with a wan smile. "I only thought that perhaps it might be possible, after all, for a woman to do a little more than honor me and think me"—

"I'm sure it is," Paula insisted warmly. "Let me try, let me"—

"Oh, but you have tried. And such things as that don't come from trying. They come spontaneously or not at all. I'm not hurt. I know you far too well to think you would hurt anything that breathes—and still less me. But I'll tell you something. We've always been good friends, haven't we—that is, for three or four years past?"

"Very."

"And I've rather spoiled things between us by bringing up this subject, which I might have known from the first was impossible. Suppose we go back to what we were before. Suppose we blot all this out, as if it had never happened. Wouldn't that be a relief to you?"

"Yes," she said in an unsteady voice.

"Then we'll do it. I won't undertake to give up hoping. No one could to whom you hadn't absolutely said no. But I shan't bother you with my hopes, and if in the end I have to bury them—why, then, we'll see."

"How good you are!" Paula said softly, two big tears falling in spite of her efforts to keep them back.

"Don't say that," he protested. "You ask of goodness only because you don't know—love. But you're tired," he added, rising. "Wouldn't you like me to take you home? I dare say we shall find a fiacre in the place that will take us down by the carriage road."

Late that evening, when Paul Trafford kissed his daughter to say good night, she twined her arm over his shoulder and detained him.

"I've seen the duke," she whispered, "and he wouldn't have me."

"He"— Trafford began in a puzzled voice.

"He thought it was a sacrifice on my part," she explained, looking up at him with glowing eyes, "and he wouldn't let me make it. It's all over."

"And would it have been a sacrifice?" he demanded, with shaggy brows drawn together.

"Not if I could have pleased you."

His face cleared as he bent low and kissed her again.

"Then I shall only keep my little girl the longer," was all he said.

CHAPTER VI.

"I'M going to do it, Laura," Paula whispered as they approached the luncheon table. "I mean the portrait. I've got his address, and I'm going this afternoon."

There was no time to say more, for Mrs. Trafford entered the room, followed by George Trafford and little Paul.

There had been several reasons for their return to Paris in the early days of February. The protracted absence of Mr. Trafford in Germany and Russia was the one they spoke of openly. The duke's silent departure from Monte Carlo, taking the spirit out of their little band, was a subject they mentioned to one another only when Paula was not there. The sudden anxiety of Mrs. Trafford about her own health and her haste to see a doctor in Paris were matters that they dared not discuss at all.

"Where's everybody going this afternoon?" Mrs. Trafford demanded a half hour later with a briskness which her courage enabled her to maintain.

Paula knew the moment had come and nerved herself to reply in her usual tone.

CHOIR LEADERS AND EASTER MUSIC

Choir leaders who would like to have their Easter music published in Saturday's Review, are requested to send in their copy as early as possible. It will be received up to noon Saturday, but if possible send it in sooner. The Easter music in the churches of Peterborough will be unusually attractive this year.

MANY ENTRANTS IN COMPETITION

Toronto, March 24.—One of the main topics of discussion here, and indeed in other cities and towns of Canada, wherever amateur singers or actors gather, is the forthcoming festival of amateur events for the Earl Grey competition trophies. Toronto is to be the centre of this all-Canadian contest this year, and the various entrants will appear on the boards of the Royal Alexandra theatre during the week of April 4th. His Excellency will be present with his suite, and the social as well as artistic prominence of the event has already drawn to it a big share of active interest.

In almost every class the entries far surpass the lists of last year. Though Toronto is heavily represented in the dramatic companies, yet Montreal, Ottawa, Peterborough and London are out for the trophies with strong musical and dramatic societies, which promise to give this city a tussle for championships.

In the absence of Sir John Hare, the distinguished English actor, was to have presided as dramatic judge, a board of three Canadians has been appointed:—Bernard K. Sandwell, of Montreal; Hector Charlesworth, of Toronto, and Ernest Beaufort, of Winnipeg. The musical judges will be:—Vocal, Dr. Vogt and Dr. Albert Ham; piano and quartettes, Messrs. Frank Welsman and W. O. Forsyth, all of Toronto. The eminent composer, Mr. Howard Brockway presides as judge of the musical compositions. The interest in the contest is shown by applications from Quebec and Winnipeg. No less than 74 soloists have entered for the individual medals.

Waterworks Dam

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—I notice that an error occurred in typewriting my letter to the Review yesterday. I certainly did not intend to say the cost of development of power at the new dam would come out water rates. Nothing could be farther from my mind. It is out of such rates that the cost of the dam comes, but the cost of the proposed power would come out of the revenue derived from the sale of power, none of the rates being used for such purpose. The net surplus from the power, in my estimation, would be sufficient to provide a filtration plant, or could be used in reduction of the water rates. Probably the filtration scheme would be most appreciated. Encouragement of extended or new industries is all very well, but surely good health may fairly be claimed as a nation's or city's greatest asset. No element contributes more to this end than a pure water supply.

Are Your Children Puny?

A Suggestive Letter to Parents.

Nature is not often at fault.

Stupidity and thoughtlessness of parents are responsible for many of the half-dead men and women we meet.

Their fathers and mothers did not supply the aid that would have set their body activities into full force to develop vitality and rugged strength.

Mrs. Timothy Bristow writes a letter that should set thousands of parents thinking: "My boy and girl, fourteen and sixteen years old, looked pale and puny. They seemed not to care for play like neighbors' children. They were too effeminate and lacked something. I would have liked to see them possess. I don't know what put it into my head, but I gave up making cookies and sweet dishes, and it didn't take me long to see they were eating more of the right kind of food. I just thought I would give them some of my own tonic, 'Ferrozone,' and was delighted with the result. Such an appetite it gave them! They grew fairly fat and had a lovely pink color. I think when such a good tonic as Ferrozone is available there is no excuse for delicate children. Certainly lots of nourishing food, and Ferrozone will give a child a great chance to grow up hearty and strong."

FERROZONE Makes Health

And Ferrozone is a good tonic for old folks, too—it's full of nutrition and blood-building properties and makes the weak strong very quickly. Try one or two tablets with your meals. Fifty cents per box, six for $2.50; all dealers, or The Catarrhozone Co, Kingston, Canada.

WEDDING BELLS

HARVEY—NORTHEY

Special to the Review.

Lakefield, March 24—The marriage took place here last evening at six o'clock of Miss Bella Northey, daughter of Mr. John Northey, of Lakefield, to Mr. Bernal V. Harvey, of Smith. The marriage took place at the home of the bride, Queen street, and the ceremony was performed by Rev. J. Bedford, in the presence of the immediate relatives and friends of the contracting parties. Beulah Northey and Verda Northey, nieces of the bride, were ring-bearer and flower girl respectively. The bride was given away by her father and her dress was of silver crepe de Paris over silk. The little girls wore pretty costumes of point d'esprit over silk (pink and blue). The bride carried a bouquet of roses and maiden head ferns, and the ring-bearer and flower girl carried baskets of flowers. The ceremony was performed under an arch of evergreens, palms and Easter lilies, and the house was prettily decorated in the same manner. The wedding march was played by Mrs. R. Northey. The groom's gift to the bride was a gold watch and chain, and to the ring-bearer and flower girl gold bracelets. Mr. and Mrs. Harvey have the best wishes of a host of friends. They will reside at "Maple Grove," Young's Point.

HURL—LEE

The marriage took place at the Murray street Baptist church on Wednesday, March 23rd, of Miss Alice Celia Lee, of Otonabee, and Mr. Stanley Jos. Hurl, of Peterborough, Rev. J. R. Webb, officiating.

WILL MAKE DEBUT AS SOPRANO

Mrs. W. A. Greenslade, of Peterborough, has been a pupil of Edward Barton at the Conservatory of Music for the past season and will make her debut at Association Hall, Toronto, on March the 30th. It is news to learn that Mr. Barton has recognized in our local singer, musical talent producing a contrary result vocally. Mrs. Greenslade was known as a contralto singer of merit and when Mr. Barton tested her voice, and ability, he pronounced her a genuine soprano and is convinced that she will make a successful debut at his concert in Toronto.

CHASE AWAY THE TIRED FEELING

Dodd's Kidney Pills Will do it Quickly and Naturally

It is Caused by Sluggish Circulation Brought on by Deranged Kidneys Failing to Strain Impurities Out of the Blood

Stayner, Ont., March 23.—(Special).—In the Spring the Kidneys always need attention. They have additional work in straining the winter's accumulation of impurities out of the blood, and if they are at all out of order, it is sure to tell on them. It is only a question of the best method of treating them, and Ernest Colwell of this place, adds his testimony to the great mass of proof that the one sure cure for sick Kidneys is Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"Some time ago," says Mr. Colwell, "I had severe pains and soreness in the small of my back, and sometimes noticed a brick dust sediment in my urine, so of course I knew my Kidneys were afffected. I procured some of Dodd's Kidney Pills which readily cured the pains and soreness and restored the urine to its natural color. I always recommend Dodd's Kidney Pills."

Everybody needs medicine in the Spring, and the medicine they need is Dodd's Kidney Pills. They clear the blood of impurities, and by giving the blood free circulation, speedily and naturally chase away that tired feeling. It is caused by sluggish circulation and Dodd's Kidney Pills always cure it.

The Giant's Strength

...By...
BASIL KING,
Author of "Let Not Man Put Asunder," "The Steps of Honor," Etc.

Copyright, 1908, by Harper & Brothers.

You inherit the situation your father made for you, and Mr. Wiltshire inherits that which his father made for him. You and I know too little to judge either side. We're too remote from all the conditions to apportion out the real rights and wrongs"—

"And therefore," Paula interrupted, somewhat bitterly, "we should settle down complacently to accept things as they are."

"Not quite that. But if we can't accept things as they are we mustn't try to force them into being what they can't become. We can only learn by degrees how to adjust what's wrong"—

"But you can adjust anything with money—that is, if you have enough."

"Not everything, unhappily."

"But I could adjust this."

"You mean that you could give the Winships money? Oh, no, you couldn't."

"I don't mean that I could give them alms or do anything with condescension. But couldn't I give them a great deal—as much as they ever lost—more than that? I have a great deal of money of my own—I don't know how much, but it must be a large sum—and I'd give it all to them. You could help me. You know them, and I could do it through you if you only would"—

"Softly, softly. You couldn't do anything of that sort. They wouldn't take it. Things aren't managed so directly as that in this complicated world. They'd be offended, you know. They wouldn't listen to me"—

"Oh, yes, they would! Everybody listens when it's a question of getting money. You'd beg it as a favor. You'd say it was not in pity for them, but in kindness to me. You'd put it that way. And they'd take it. I know they would. I've never seen any one refuse money—if it was enough. Oh, duke, do!"

She ended abruptly, with a quaver in her voice, like a little wail. Wiltshire sprang to his feet and took two or three turns up and down the gravel path. Returning, he resumed his seat beside her.

"You mustn't do anything rash in the matter," he said gently. "You mustn't have the air of seeming to judge your father."

"I don't," she answered quickly. "I know he didn't do anything wrong. I should never admit otherwise. Only"—

She did not finish the sentence, and Wiltshire, leaning toward her, laid his hand on hers.

"Dear Paula," he whispered, "could not we let it be until you and I could manage it together?"

She did not withdraw her hand from his touch, but the eyes she lifted toward him were full of the mute appeal of an animal begging to be let off.

"You've never answered my question—my great question," he went on tenderly.

"I've been trying to," she managed to say.

"And you don't find it easy?"

She shook her head, letting her eyes fall again.

"But you've been making the effort?"

"Yes," she murmured, just audibly.

"And it's been a great effort?"

"Yes."

"So great, in fact, that you don't feel the strength to make it?"

"I'm trying to," she said hurriedly. "I want to."

"You want to? In what way?"

Again she lifted her appealing eyes to him.

"I—I—want to please father," she stammered, "and make you happy, and—and"—

"And sacrifice yourself?" he added.

"It wouldn't be a sacrifice if I could do those two things," she stammered on.

"That is," he corrected, "not so great a sacrifice but that you could make it."

She nodded her assent. A few seconds passed in silence when Wiltshire slowly withdrew his hand and sat erect.

"I've hurt you!" Paula cried, turning sharply toward him. "That isn't what I meant to say. You haven't understood me. I'm ready to be your wife if it will make you happy. Indeed, I'm ready. You don't know how I honor you, how good I think you, how"—

"Oh, yes, I do," he broke in, with a wan smile. "I only thought that perhaps it might be possible, after all, for a woman to do a little more than honor me and think me"—

"I'm sure it is," Paula insisted warmly. "Let me try, let me"—

"Oh, but you have tried. And such things as that don't come from trying. They come spontaneously or not at all. I'm not hurt. I know you far too well to think you would hurt anything that breathes—and still less me. But I'll tell you something. We've always been good friends, haven't we—that is, for three or four years past?"

"Very."

"And I've rather spoiled things between us by bringing up this subject, which I might have known from the first was impossible. Suppose we go back to what we were before. Suppose we blot all this out, as if it had never happened. Wouldn't that be a relief to you?

"Yes," she said in an unsteady voice.

"Then we'll do it. I won't undertake to give up hoping. No one could to whom you hadn't absolutely said no. But I shan't bother you with my hopes, and if in the end I have to bury them—why, then, we'll see."

"How good you are!" Paula said softly, two big tears falling in spite of her efforts to keep them back.

"Don't say that," he protested. "You ask of goodness only because you don't know—love. But you're tired," he added, rising. "Wouldn't you like me to take you home? I dare say we shall find a fiacre in the place that will take us down by the carriage road."

Late that evening, when Paul Trafford kissed his daughter to say good night, she twined her arm over his shoulder and detained him.

"I've seen the duke," she whispered, "and he wouldn't have me."

"He"— Trafford began in a puzzled voice.

"He thought it was a sacrifice on my part," she explained, looking up at him with glowing eyes, "and he wouldn't let me make it. It's all over."

"And would it have been a sacrifice?" he demanded, with shaggy brows drawn together.

"Not if I could have pleased you."

His face cleared as he bent low and kissed her again.

"Then I shall only keep my little girl the longer," was all he said.

CHAPTER VI.

"I'M going to do it, Laura," Paula whispered as they approached the luncheon table. "I mean the portrait. I've got his address, and I'm going this afternoon."

There was no time to say more, for Mrs. Trafford entered the room, followed by George Trafford and little Paul.

There had been several reasons for their return to Paris in the early days of February. The protracted absence of Mr. Trafford in Germany and Russia was the one they spoke of openly. The duke's silent departure from Monte Carlo, taking the spirit out of their little band, was a subject they mentioned to one another only when Paula was not there. The sudden anxiety of Mrs. Trafford about her own health and her haste to see a doctor in Paris were matters that they dared not discuss at all.

"Where's everybody going this afternoon?" Mrs. Trafford demanded a half hour later with a briskness which her courage enabled her to maintain.

Paula knew the moment had come and nerved herself to reply in her usual tone.

To be Continued.

CHOIR LEADERS AND EASTER MUSIC

Choir leaders who would like to have their Easter music published in Saturday's Review, are requested to send in their copy as early as possible. It will be received up to noon Saturday, but if possible send it in sooner. The Easter music in the churches of Peterborough will be unusually attractive this year.

MANY ENTRANTS IN COMPETITION

Toronto, March 24.—One of the main topics of discussion here, and indeed in other cities and towns of Canada, wherever amateur singers or actors gather, is the forthcoming festival of amateur events for the Earl Grey competition trophies. Toronto is to be the centre of this all-Canadian contest this year, and the various entrants will appear on the boards of the Royal Alexandra theatre during the week of April 4th. His Excellency will be present with his suite, and the social as well as artistic prominence of the event has already drawn to it a big share of active interest.

In almost every class the entries far surpass the lists of last year. Though Toronto is heavily represented in the dramatic companies, yet Montreal, Ottawa, Peterborough and London are out for the trophies with strong musical and dramatic societies, which promise to give the city a tussle for championships.

In the absence of Sir John Hare, the distinguished English actor, was to have presided as dramatic judge, a board of three Canadians has been appointed:—Bernard K. Sandwell, of Montreal; Hector Charlesworth, of Toronto, and Ernest Beaufort, of Winnipeg. The musical judges will be:—Vocal, Dr. Vogt and Dr. Albert Ham; piano and quartettes, Messrs. Frank Welsman and W. O. Forsyth, all of Toronto. The eminent composer, Mr. Howard Brockway presides as judge of the musical compositions. The interest in the contest is shown by applications from Quebec and Winnipeg. No less than 74 soloists have entered for the individual medals.

Waterworks Dam

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—I notice that an error occurred in typewriting my letter to the Review yesterday. I certainly did not intend to say the cost of development of power at the new dam would come out water rates. Nothing could be farther from my mind. It is out of such rates that the cost of the dam comes, but the cost of the proposed power would come out of the revenue derived from the sale of power, none of the rates being used for such purpose. The net surplus from the power, in my estimation, would be sufficient to provide a filtration plant, or could be used in reduction of the water rates. Probably the filtration scheme would be most appreciated. Encouragement of extended or new industries is all very well, but surely good health may fairly be claimed as a nation's or city's greatest asset. No element contributes more to this end than a pure water supply.

Are Your Children Puny?

A Suggestive Letter to Parents.

Nature is not often at fault.

Stupidity and thoughtlessness of parents are responsible for many of the half-dead men and women we meet.

Their fathers and mothers did not supply the aid that would have set their body activities into full force to develop vitality and rugged strength.

Mrs. Timothy Bristow writes a letter that should set thousands of parents thinking: "My boy and girl, fourteen and sixteen years old, looked pale and puny. They seemed not to care for play like neighbors' children. They were too effeminate and lacked something I would have liked to see them possess. I don't know what put it into my head, but I gave up making cookies and sweet dishes, and it didn't take me long to see they were eating more of the right kind of food. I just thought I would give them some of my own tonic, 'Ferrozone,' and was delighted with the result. Such an appetite it gave them! They grew fairly fat and had a lovely pink color. I think when such a good tonic as Ferrozone is available there is no excuse for delicate children. Certainly lots of nourishing food, and Ferrozone will give a child a great chance to grow up hearty and strong."

FERROZONE
Makes Health

And Ferrozone is a good tonic for old folks, too—it's full of nutrition and blood-building properties and makes the weak strong very quickly. Try one or two tablets with your meals Fifty cents per box, six for $2.50; all dealers, or The Catarrhozone Co, Kingston, Canada.

WEDDING BELLS

HARVEY—NORTHEY

Special to the Review.

Lakefield, March 24—The marriage took place here last evening at six o'clock of Miss Bella Northey, daughter of Mr. John Northey, of Lakefield, to Mr. Bernal V. Harvey, of Smith. The marriage took place at the home of the bride, Queen street, and the ceremony was performed by Rev. J. Bedford, in the presence of the immediate relatives and friends of the contracting parties Beulah Northey and Verda Northey, nieces of the bride, were ring-bearer and flower girl respectively. The bride was given away by her father and her dress was of silver crepe de Paris over silk. The little girls wore pretty costumes of point d'esprit over silk (pink and blue). The bride carried a bouquet of roses and maiden head ferns, and the ring-bearer and flower girl carried baskets of flowers. The ceremony was performed under an arch of evergreens, palms and Easter lilies, and the house was prettily decorated in the same manner. The wedding march was played by Mrs. R. Northey. The groom's gift to the bride was a gold watch and chain, and to the ring-bearer and flower girl gold bracelets.

Mr. and Mrs. Harvey have the best wishes of a host of friends. They will reside at "Maple Grove," Young's Point.

HURL—LEE

The marriage took place at the Murray street Baptist church on Wednesday, March 23rd, of Miss Alice Celia Lee, of Otonabee, and Mr. Stanley Jos. Hurl, of Peterborough, Rev. J. R. Webb, officiating.

WILL MAKE DEBUT AS SOPRANO

Mrs. W. A. Greenslade, of Peterborough, has been a pupil of Edward Barton at the Conservatory of Music for the past season and will make her debut at Association Hall, Toronto, on March the 30th. It is news to learn that Mr. Barton has recognized in our local singer, musical talent producing a contrary result vocally. Mrs. Greenslade was known as a contralto singer of merit and when Mr. Barton tested her voice, and ability, he pronounced her a genuine soprano and is convinced that she will make a successful debut at his concert in Toronto.

CHASE AWAY THE TIRED FEELING

Dodd's Kidney Pills Will do it Quickly and Naturally

It is Caused by Sluggish Circulation Brought on by Deranged Kidneys Failing to Strain Impurities Out of the Blood

Stayner, Ont., March 23.—(Special).—In the Spring the Kidneys always need attention. They have additional work in straining the winter's accumulation of impurities out of the blood, and if they are at all out of order, it is sure to tell on them. It is only a question of the best method of treating them, and Ernest Colwell of this place, adds his testimony to the great mass of proof that the one sure cure for sick Kidneys is Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"Some time ago," says Mr. Colwell, "I had severe pains and soreness in the small of my back, and sometimes noticed a brick dust sediment in my urine, so of course I knew my Kidneys were afffected. I procured some of Dodd's Kidney Pillsm which readily cured the pains and soreness and restored the urine to its natural color. I always recommend Dodd's Kidney Pills."

Everybody needs medicine in the Spring, and the medicine they need is Dodd's Kidney Pills. They clear the blood of impurities and by giving the blood free circulation, speedily and naturally chase away that tired feeling. It is caused by sluggish circulation and Dodd's Kidney Pills always cure it.

A COMPLAINT FROM NORTHENDER

George Street Resident Thinks Direction to Margaret Cox Home for Girls Should be Indicated by Signboards.

A citizen residing north of Smith street, on George street and in the vicinity of the Margaret Cox Home for Girls, called at the Review office to-day to complain against the absence of any sign boards, which would indicate the locality of the Home. He claims that he and others similarly situated are put to considerable annoyance by strangers, and also residents of the city, who are ignorant of the exact location of the institution, and call at the residences to be directed. He believes that it would be to the interests of all concerned should the matter of placing sign boards at conspicuous points be taken up and dealt with at once.

REMOVAL OF HATS APPRECIATED

A gentleman who attended the lecture by Mr. Herbert Booth at St. Paul's church last night said he was very much pleased to observe that the ladies removed their hats. "It made it very much more comfortable," he said "and the rule for removing hats in church shouldn't be confined to week nights alone. There is an agitation in the city to have the ladies remove their hats in church and personally I should like to see the example set at St. Paul's."

MISS GEAR IS A BORN COMEDIAN

Spontaneous and Natural Her Individuality Makes Her Especially Charming

Just as last season in her great success, "Marrying Mary," individuality is again the keynote of Florence Gear's work as a comedienne in the title role of the merry musical comedy, "Fluffy Ruffles," in which she will appear at the Grand on Tuesday next, March 29th. Even more convincingly than ever before, Florence Gear proves by her rare artistic gifts that she must be considered by herself alone. There is no other comedienne upon the stage with whom she can properly be compared. More beautiful than any of the others, divinely moulded along lines that are to-day considered the nearest to feminoine perfection, Miss Gear starts in where beautiful nature left off and brings to the part of "Fluffy Ruffles" an intelligence and inspiration that introduce new charms which are entirely her own. Everything that this consummate artiste does bears the stamp of marked individuality. In one respect she is absolutely unique. Here is a comedienne who can really and truly sing. She has a highly cultivated voice, sweet, pure, powerful. In just half a dozen words, there is only one Florence Gear. Local theatregoers are confidently counting upon being royally entertained next Tuesday evening.

9.35—"When Eyes Like Yours Look into Eyes Like Mine."
9.50—"The Imitation Blaze."
10.10—"I Hate to Work on Monday."
10.37—"The Phantom Chimes," introducing a musical novelty.

Bogus $5 Notes

A five-dollar Traders Bank bill bearing the forged signature of an officer of the bank at Winnipeg, has been successfully passed in a Toronto hotel. This is one of a bundle of $40,000 stolen between Ottawa and Toronto from an express car a year ago. Others have been passed in different parts of the province, and it appears they are still circulating.

LISTED MAN ARRESTED AND FINED A SECOND TIME

Although a blacklister, who was arrested at noon, and appeared before Magistrate Dumble this afternoon at three o'clock, characterized P.C. Newhall's evidence as a black lie, he was fined $10.00, and remanded to gaol till Saturday for safe keeping. It was a case of "it never rains but it pours" with him, for only this morning a fine of $12.60 was registered against him for indulging on Saturday, March 12th.

He had pleaded guilty to this charge, but License Inspector Stewart must have had a great assortment of persuasive salve, for the prisoner this afternoon showed himself to be anything but docile.

P.C. Newhall stated that at noon he met the prisoner coming down George street. He was intoxicated and staggering about the sidewalk. After being taken into custody violence had to be resorted to in the cells to permit of a search of his clothes being made.

whiskey passed my lips to-day."
er from the box. "Not a drop of whiskey passed by lips to-day."

That didn't let him out, however, for when he went into the witness box his conduct was such that the magistrate arrived at the conclusion that the witness was not altogether right then.

The defendant took the judgment of the court in a matter of fact sort of way, but vowed to have a day of reckoning with P.C. Newhall.

COLD WEATHER IN NORTHWEST

WEDDING BELLS

ROUTLY—BRANDON

A quiet wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Brandon on Tuesday morning, March 22nd, when their eldest daughter, Mabel May, was married to Mr. Wm. J. Routly, of Peterborough. Rev. H. V. Mounteer officiating. The bride, who was unattended, was given away by her father, and wore her travelling suit of taupe cloth with hat to match, and carried a shower bouquet of bridal roses. The groom's gift to the bride was a beautiful gold band bracelet, and to Miss Emma Brandon, sister of the bride, who played the wedding march, a pearl brooch. The bride was the recipient of a number of handsome presents, including a purse of gold from the Methodist church, of which she was a faithful member (for a number of years; also a cut glass spoon tray and rose bowl from her Sunday school class. After a dainty dejeuner Mr. and Mrs. Routly left for a short trip before settling in their new home in Peterborough.—Cannington Gleaner.

THIS MIGHT BE SUMMER TO-DAY

As Hot as it Frequently is in July —Overcoats Thrown Aside

Spring has come and gone and summer is here—perhaps. At any rate it is warm enough to-day to be the good old summer time and Peterborough has discarded its overcoat. It was expected that someone would appear in a straw hat, but up to the time of going to press the first "cow's breakfast" had not appeared.

Some thermometers around town registered sixty-five in the shade, which is as hot as it frequently is in July. And to-day is only the 24th of March.

MEETING OF SIGNALLERS

The signalling class of the 57th regiment met last night. Sergeant-Major McGowan and Bombadier Kelly of the Kingston regulars were present.

From Vancouver

"From Vancouver to Calgary," is the title of a particularly interesting and educational picture, or rather series of pictures being shown at the "Crystal" for the balance of the week. In all the many fine of natural scenery and landscape that have been shown at the local picture houses, one of the most magnificent areas in the world, in the matter of rugged and impressive scenic grandeur has been overlooked by the moving picture producers. A rich corner of the big stage setting of nature was neglected when this was done, and it remained for the C.P.R. to place the man with the moving picture camera on the rear of a fast-moving special train and reproduce the grand territory between Vancouver and Calgary.

And it is not the huge mountains and forests and streams alone that appeal to the auditor, but the striking transformation from primative nature to the busy modern cities of the west is also sure to interest and gratify all followers of Western Canada's wonderful growth and progress. It would take much more space than is available to enumerate the many outstanding features of the picture, all of which are of absorbing interest and are thoroughly explained by the well-informed special lecturer for the occasion, Mr. Chas. Wymard, of Harbeck Film Company, Cincinnati.

Stainer's Crucifixion

SPORTING

NO SPORTING EVENTS FRIDAY

Holiday Comes too Early for Local Sporting Clubs

There will be no outdoor attractions for the holiday to-morrow. Good Friday of other years has generally seen the opening of the baseball season in this city. But all will be quietness to-morrow in this branch of sport. One reason for this is the fact of the holiday coming earlier than usual, and another is that any grounds available are not in the proper condition. Of course, the small boy does not intend to be denied of the privilege of trying his arm—that is if it doesn't rain, but judging by the prophesies of the street corner weather prophets, it is going to be a damp day.

TWO BASKETBALL MATCHES ARRANGED

To-morrow night the intermediate basketball team will play the Senior Boy's team of Lindsay, in the Y.M.C.A. gymnasium here at 7.30 p.m.

On Monday the same local team will meet the Toronto Central intermediate team here. Both games promise to be good exhibitions of basketball.

SPORTING NOTES

In the first practice game of the Pittsburg National League baseball team, Wagner made the first run.

Jack Johnson spent five hours in the Tombs prison, New York, yesterday. The way of the prize fighter is a hard one.

Stanley Ketchel got the decision in a six-round bout with Frank Klaus at Pittsburg last night.

The members of the Collingwood Intermediate O.H.A. champion team were presented with gold watches, chains and lockets from the citizens, and medals and a cup from the O.H.A.

Building operations have begun on the property known as Boswell's field, and this means the loss of a play field for the young sports of that neighborhood.

St. Michaels will be the guests at a complimentary banquet in their honor next week. The date has not been decided.

The Renfrew hockey team has disbanded.

Lou Scholes, the winner of the Diamond Sculls in 1904, will again go after the honor this summer.

The manager of Acoose has bet $100 against $300 that his man will beat Longboat in the twelve-mile race Saturday night.

SWIMMING CLASSES AT THE Y.M.C.A.

Swimming lessons for non-swimmers and also advanced swimmers will be given in the Y.M.C.A. according to the following schedule:—

Monday—Senior Class, 9 to 9.30 p.m.

Tuesday—Junior School Class, 5 to 5.30 p.m.; Employed Boys, 9 to 9.30 p.m.

Wednesday—Senior School Class, 5 to 5.30 p.m.

Thursday—Senior Class, 9 to 9.30 p.m.

Friday—Junior School Class, 7 to 8 p.m.; Employed Boys, 8 to 9 p.m.

CAPITULAR RECOGNITION

Rt. En. Comp. W.H. Walkey, the Newly Elected District Superintendent Honored

The companions of Corinthian Chapter Royal Arch Masons, No. 36, at their convocation held last night surprised the newly-elected district superintendent, Rt. En. Comp. W. H. Walkey, by presenting him with a beautiful set of grand officers' regalia appropriate to his office.

The grand superintendent accepted the presentation in fitting terms, thanking the companions for this further mark of their friendship and esteem.

The presentation was made by En. Comp. H. R. H. Kenner, First Principal Z., after the grand officers' installation had been performed by En. Comp. J. G. M. Wilson, and En. Comp. W. R. G. Higgins, Past First Principals of Corinthian Chapter.

St. Luke's Church

The Lenten service last night was taken by Rev. Dr. Langfeldt in the absence of Rev. C. W. Holdsworth, of Havelock, who was to have been the special preacher, but could not come. Dr. Langfeldt exhorted the people to observe good Friday in a godly manner and not give themselves to frivolities unbecoming to godly people and the solemnity of the day.

The lecture to-night will be by Rev. H. J. Keith on "Indus," illustrated by limelight views.

Good Friday will be observed by the "Three Hour Devotions," commemorating the Saviour's suffering on the Cross. The service will begin at 12 and last till 3. Dr. Langfeldt will give the addresses and Rev. Mr. Keith will take part in the devotions. The offering will be for the evangelization of the Jews. Every twenty minutes opportunity is given for the people to leave or to come to the service.

At eight o'clock His Honor Judge Huycke will give a lecture on "The Holy Grail."

The Easter communion will be celebrated on Sunday at 7, 8 and at noon.

The friends of St. Luke's are requested to contribute flowers for decorating the Sanctuary for Easter.

AN AERIAL FLIGHT.

Up to Date Romance In Which a Flying Machine Plays a Part.

By IRA TEN BROECK.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

"But, Jack, dear, I wouldn't dare," chattered Molly in a flutter of excitement.

"Yes, you will, Molly," answered Jack Wyster impulsively.

"Just think of the novelty of an elopement in a flying machine. The Eagle is in tiptop shape, and there isn't a bit of danger, so make up your mind to go this afternoon. Be at the shed at 2 o'clock, dear. Goodby!" Kissing her playfully, he ran down the steps and in the direction of the field where he had been trying out a new aeroplane.

Molly Windon smothered an impulse to call him back and tell her headstrong lover that she could not go with him, but she hesitated, and in that instant Jack disappeared around the house. She sighed deeply to quiet her excited nerves and fell back languidly into the hammock. The very audacity of the idea frightened her. Certainly she loved Jack, but couldn't he find a safer way to run off to get married? To be sure, Colonel Windon, who was aware of the infatuation of his daughter for the young aeronaut, would be on his guard if he detected them going away together, while he would never suspect Jack's novel ruse. They were to ascend in the Eagle, cross the river to Rosseter, then jump into Jack's auto and run down to Terryville, where Will Boynton, his chum, would await them with a minister.

Molly was so nervous at luncheon that the colonel's curiosity was aroused, and he questioned her closely—so closely, indeed, that once or twice in her excitement she burst out into a hysterical laugh. Immediately afterward she excused herself on the plea of taking a nap and retired to her room to prepare for her journey. But the colonel's suspicions were now aroused, and the old gentleman took a position on the veranda, with a newspaper, to await developments.

SHE COULD FEEL THE MACHINE FALLING.

He had not been on the veranda long when his attention was attracted by the creaking of the side door, and he saw his daughter gliding furtively over the lawn, dressed in auto togs, in the direction of the trial field. Quietly he went into the house for his coat and followed her.

In a very few moments Molly arrived at the shed where Wyster's aeroplane was quartered. True to his word, Jack had everything in readiness for the escape and at once seated her in the frame, strapping her in securely. Both were so excited inwardly that they spoke only in monosyllables, while Jack prepared for the ascent with the methodical care of the trained aviator. Within a minute of the time Helen was seated the motor was throbbing, and the machine began to glide faster and faster over the field. Suddenly the earth seemed to fall, and she knew that they were rising. For a moment she closed her eyes and clung tightly to the narrow framework, but the exhilarating sensation of flying went into her head, and the madness of it all made her laugh in spite of her fear. Gathering courage, she looked down, and far below she saw her home as the machine circled over the field and soared toward the river. Suddenly her eyes were arrested by a figure in white running frantically from the field toward the boathouse. Jack saw it about the same time, and as he opened the throttle of the motor he shouted to her. All she could hear in the growing roar of wind was the word "colonel," but she caught his meaning. Windon was making for the river, and in a few moments the Comet, the colonel's racing launch, emerged from the boathouse. The colonel had divined their purpose and was endeavoring to reach the opposite shore before they could descend and escape.

By this time they were nearing the trees on the far side of the river, and Jack glanced at her reassuringly. The Comet was only halfway across the stream. Right ahead of them appeared a large field, and she could feel the machine falling as Jack worked at the levers and shut down the motor. Gliding slowly downward, they struck with a slight jar and ran on a few rods before stopping. Some one came running across the field. It was Tom, Jack's chauffeur.

Abandoning the Eagle, they raced across the field and climbed into the auto, and as the chauffeur threw in the high speed gear they shut down the road through the little village of Rossmere. Such a ride as it was! Molly wondered where the road officers were, but she did not see one or two who stepped into the road, waving their arms in a futile endeavor to stop the speeding machine. The last house of the village shot by, a streak of white, and with an added roar the big fifty shot out into the open country. The machine rode the hills like a bird. Luckily the road was clear, and Tom opened the throttle wide. It was glorious, maddening, thought Molly, holding tightly to her lover. Suddenly she heard a sharp report, and the car slowed down in obedience to the brakes. "Blowout!" shouted Tom as he brought it to a stop, and in an instant he and Wyster were out on the road stripping off the tire and putting on a new one. As they worked over the wheel Molly glanced back, and what she saw made her leap to her feet excitedly. "Jack!" she cried. "Hurry! Quick! Father is coming."

When Molly thought over the events that followed she resembled them to a moving picture exhibition with a nervous operator at the film. Jack and Tom literally jumped into the car, and Tom threw on the current, but the engines didn't even cough. As Tom leaped out to the crank Jack looked back, and there, not a quarter of a mile away, came the other machine, and the colonel was standing, waving his arm. In a second, however, Tom was again at the wheel, and the auto shot down the road.

In spite of Tom's best efforts the pursuing car gained steadily. Jack was almost wild with intense excitement. "Coax her, Tom!" he pleaded. "Coax her!" But it was of no avail. The colonel by this time was plainly visible in his white flannels, and Jack fairly groaned.

As usual, the unexpected happened. Something went wrong with the motor of the pursuing car, and Jack hugged his sweetheart in glee as he looked back and saw it stop, while the chauffeur leaped out and raised the hood. In a few seconds they were out of sight around a bend in the road.

Both Jack and Molly gave a great sigh of relief as they rounded the curve and the houses on the outskirts of Terryville came in view. Once or twice they narrowly escaped colliding with wagons, but in a few moments the machine slowed down and ran into a side street, coming to a stop in front of a modest little cottage. Will Boynton ran out to meet them.

"All ready, old chap," he said, "so step lively!" He almost hugged Molly as he helped her from the car, while Jack directed Tom what to do with the machine. "Come right in like sheep to the slaughter. The parson's waiting for you!"

As she entered the gate the seriousness of the step she was about to take came to Molly's mind for the first time. She felt inclined to run away, to hide, to think it over. She felt a pang of sorrow for the colonel. How kind he had been to her! How thoughtful always of her wishes! A lump rose in her throat as she thought how ungrateful she was to leave him this. Perhaps Wyster understood, or perhaps the serious end of the affair came also to his mind, as he touched her arm tenderly and said: "Come, dear. We're gone this far, and the colonel is apt to be here any minute, you know." With a sigh she walked into the neat little yard and followed Boynton to the door of the parsonage.

The minister met them at the door, and Boynton introduced them. They were ushered into the little parlor, with its musty air and quaint decorations, and before she fully realized it Molly was standing before the minister with Jack repeating the marriage vows. As the words were pronounced that made them man and wife there was a commotion at the door, and Colonel Windon rushed in.

"You—you rascal!" he sputtered. "You ingrate! You thievin', man hawk! You confounded"—

"Sir!" said Wyster, stepping forward, while Molly clung to his arm as if to restrain him.

The colonel waved him back. "What do you mean, you young rascals, by sneakin' off in this 'ere manner anyway!" He stopped for breath and mopped his face with a capacious handkerchief. "What do you mean, sir? Here I've fetched up my daughter for nineteen years, an' bless my soul if she don't run away without sayin' so much as 'by your leave.' Didn't even invite me to see her married after"—

"What!" said Wyster. "You mean"—

"Yes," puffed the colonel; "I mean I've chased you young scamps twenty miles to attend your wedding, and you wouldn't wait long enough to let me give my girl away. But," he continued, advancing toward them, "I shall have satisfaction. Confound me, but I shall!"

Molly caught a glimmer of a smile in her father's eye, and it gave her courage to speak.

"Father, dear, will you forgive me? I'm sorry if I've been ungrateful toward you, but I'm glad, too, because I have Jack. Will you forgive your little girl if she promises never, never, to do it again?"

"I'll promise that, too, if you will, colonel," said Jack. Windon's face was a puzzle. To look at it one would not know whether he was angry or happy, chagrined or amused.

"Well," he said after a pause, "seeing that you have gone and done it, I suppose I may as well resign myself to a son-in-law."

Insurance Companies Lose About $125,000.00 by the Wreck at Spanish River

Double Liability for About Twenty-five Persons

A loss somewhere in the neighbourhood of $125,000 is what the Accident Insurance Companies estimate the wreck at Spanish River bridge means to them.

They figure that about 25 of those who met death carried Accident Insurance, and the average insurance, according to the tables, is $5,000. In case of death in a railway disaster there is a double liability, making the figure $6,000, or $5,000 to be more conservative.

Their loss may total more than that, for the commercial travellers, a number of whom were killed, usually carry very heavy insurance. In addition, some of the companies make the policies payable on the death of the wife while travelling, though the policy is taken out in the husband's name. In such cases they pay the husband the same amount as they would have paid the wife were the husband killed.

The above goes to show the necessity of carrying Accident Insurance, as similar disasters happen almost daily.

We issue the BEST Accident and Sickness policy offered to the public.

A NEW OPERATIC STAR.

Countess Cassini, Niece of Former Ambassador, to Sing in Paris.

Since she first dawned on Washington society twelve years ago, at the age of seventeen, Marguerite Cassini, as she was then, has been a live wire in every community in which she has mingled. The announcement she is to make her debut shortly in grand opera in Paris serves merely to keep her as prominently as ever in the public eye. When Miss Cassini first went to Washington she found her position somewhat indefinite, for she was only the niece of the Russian ambassador, Count Arthur Cassini, and the ladies of the other embassies rather balked at yielding her precedence. These formal difficulties were cleared away, however, when the czar of Russia made Miss Cassini a countess in her own right.

The young countess was a close friend of Mrs. McKinley, and when Roosevelt succeeded to the presidency her intimacy with Alice Roosevelt, who was not then the wife of Nicholas Longworth, made her social standing in Washington still stronger. But when Count Cassini was transferred to Madrid, a change which many believe was due to the social jealousy entertained by the family of the British ambassador, Sir Mortimer Durand, against the young Countess Cassini, the situation became complicated grievously with the receipt of a quiet hint that the Spanish court, which is second only to that of Austria in exclusiveness, would not receive the Countess Marguerite. As a result Count Cassini went to Madrid alone, and the countess, his niece, has just completed a period of study in Paris which all who knew her in this country hope may lead her to the topmost heights of success on the operatic stage.

American Women.

"The American woman's intellectual characteristic is curiosity," says Marcel Prevost in Harper's Bazar. "One feels she would like to have ten pairs of eyes so as to see everything, ten pairs of ears so as to hear everything. When I sit down at table beside an American woman of Paris she immediately asks me: 'Have you seen such and such a play? Have you been to such and such an art exhibition? What do you think of this novel or of that philosophical or historical book recently published?' And I am forced to admit that I have not seen the latest play; that for more than ten years I have not set my foot inside the annual 'salons;' that I read slowly and carefully and am therefore forced to read but few books. And I know my American neighbor feels great disdain for my inculture. Still I have infinite sympathy for her charming and universal intellectual curiosity.

"There is consequently an abyss between the way most American women I have met conceive intellectual culture and my own way. Far from me to pretend that I am right. And I give thanks to heaven, which sends us in the American women of Paris the most wonderful public for books or theaters or lectures. But if I had the honor of being professor of French to young American girls I would begin with the following truthful anecdote:

"A compatriot of theirs, speaking to the poet Francois Coppee, asked:

"'Do you speak English, monsieur?'

"And Coppee answered modestly:

"'Non, madame. I am still learning French.'"

Tetrazzini Met Patti.

During her year as chatelaine of the Mansion House Lady Truscott, the lady mayoress of London, has acted as hostess to 25,000 guests.

"The most brilliant event of my year," says Lady Truscott, "was the great concert last May in aid of the National Society For the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, an organization in which I am deeply interested. A charming incident occurred in connection with this concert. Mme. Tetrazzini wrote to tell me that she had never heard Mme. Patti sing and would give anything to hear her. I invited Mme. Tetrazzini, and I had the great pleasure of bringing the two prima donnas together in my drawing room. Mme. Tetrazzini fell on her knees and kissed the hand of Mme. Patti, in homage, she said, to the greatest singer of the age."

Delicious Doughnuts
Good doughnuts are good food.
Made from the right flour they are not only a delicious treat but the combination of right flour with fat is distinctly nourishing.
You see I put special emphasis on right flour. For it is very important. It means the difference between light, flaky, crumbly doughnuts that melt in your mouth and are easy to digest, and tough, rubbery greasy wads of dough; heavy, soggy, indigestible.
Try making doughnuts from OGILVIE'S ROYAL HOUSEHOLD FLOUR. Notice how rich, soft, and flaky they are. Every one comes out of the kettle browned to a turn—appetizing, delicious, nutritious, sweet as a nut.
And the reason is that "ROYAL HOUSEHOLD" being richer in high quality gluten than ordinary flour resists the absorption of too much fat in cooking. It doesn't get rubbery, makes a lighter dough, absorbs just enough of the fat for nourishment, but not enough for indigestion.
And that is an important point—very important. The absolute uniformity of "Royal Household" enables you to get the same splendid results every time.
No matter how good doughnuts seem when made from ordinary flour you will find them much better and more healthful when made from "Royal Household"
Try it. Find out for yourself. All grocers sell it or can get it on short notice.

EVERY LITTLE BIT TAKEN FROM WHAT YOU'VE GOT LEAVES JUST A LITTLE BIT LESS

Horse, cutter, broncho, watch, chain and fifty dollars all melted like soft snow before the brilliant sun of a radiant spring day. The story for the above text is that a young man came to Peterborough from Ketchecoma, the other day, driving here with his mother's horse and cutter. While somewhat under the influence, rumor has it, he traded the horse for a broncho, giving a watch and chain to boot. While driving home the broncho bucked at the waterworks dam and, discouraged by the unwilling qualities of his new steed, the purchaser disposed of the pony and cutter for fifty dollars.

The conclusion of the chapter of unfortunate investments was arrived at in the expenditure of the fifty dollars, and "flat broke," to use a popular and expressive term, the young man returned home with his mother, who had come to the city to find out the reason of his delay!

ABOUT HOT CROSS BUNS

When the great Eastertide rolls over the Christian world, it bears on its bosom a wonderful mass of driftwood from those ancient festivals when man was struggling to express his joy over the revival of nature from her long, wintry trance, but no single tradition of this Christian jubilee dates further back into the childhood of the world than the use of sacred bread and cakes at Easter. How many of the London venders who cry "Hot cross buns" on Good Friday, or of the bakers in all Christian lands who have the cross-marked loaf for sale at this holy period, have the faintest notion of the antiquity of these sacred cakes?

The Good Friday bun dates back thousands of years. Hislop tells us in his two Babylons that "buns or bread offered to the gods from the most ancient times, were similar to our hot cross buns," and that buns "known by that self-same name, were used in the worship of Ashtar, or Astarte, the queen of heaven, as early as the days of Cecrops, the founder of Athens, in 1500, B.C."

Again, there are some authorities who date the hot cross bun from a plague-stricken time of the middle ages, when the church, on the urgent request of many physicians, agreed to relax the very rigid diet prescribed for the faithful on Good Friday, and allowed them to eat bread or buns, but only with the stipulation that they should all be marked with the sign of the cross, and this custom applied chiefly to loaves of bread still prevails in the northern portion of Italy and in parts of Spain.

Be that as it may, we do know that from the earliest times of which any records are preserved, sacred cakes and bread had a prominent place in the crude forms of worship of the human race. And for the best of reasons. This simple food was the great staple or staff of life, then as now, and it naturally took on a sacred character. It was believed to be a sacred gift from the heavenly powers, and what more appropriate offering could be placed upon a shrine at festival occasions?

In the book of Jeremiah we read that the old prophet had trouble enough with the idolatrous customs of the Jews to make him gray before his time. They worshipped the queen of heaven with all sorts of oblations and ritual, and when he rebuked them in the name of the Lord, they answered him, men and women alike: "We will certainly do whatsoever thing goeth forth out of our own mouth, to burn incense unto the queen of heaven and to pour out drink offerings to her, and make her cakes for our kings and our princes, in the city of Judah and in the streets of Jerusalem, for then had we plenty of victuals, and were well and saw no evil."

The cakes here mentioned as so prominent in the idolatrous ritual are doubtless the oldest sacred cakes in history, and figured, we may believe in all the heathen festivals of Tammuz, when the re-birth of nature in springtime was celebrated universally among ancient peoples. These cakes symbolized the sustaining principle of life.

"Behold," says the prophet Ezekiel, "at the gate of the Lord's house, which was toward the north, there sat women weeping for Tammuz." Now this Tammuz was a most important personage in the mythologies of the elder world, and no clearer account of him can be found than in Alger's learned book on the History of the Doctrine of a Future Life. We see him as the chief hero of the Syrian mysteries. Then he was adopted by the Jews. Later still he appears as Adonis in a self-same legend of Greece. He is the beauteous youth who was beloved by the queen of heaven, but was untimely killed by a wild boar and spirited away to the land of shades where Persephone reigned.

In her deep grief Venus made such a melting appeal to Persephone, says the myth, that the goddess of the under-world agreed to a compromise. She consented that Tammuz (Adonis) might return to earth for six months of the year, and then complete the other half in his proper sepulchral abode. And so it came about that each year at springtime his death was celebrated by one day of general wailing and sorrow by the women, and this was followed by wild rejoicings on the sacred day when he returned from the dead. This festival was kept with elaborate Oriental splendor. Venus bewailing Adonis means, in mythical language, Nature mourning for departed man, or man's grief at the death, or sleep of Nature, while the subsequent joy of Nature's re-birth — man's reappearance — is a matter of course.

The fact that this springtide festival was so universally observed by pagan nations, can readily account for the early adoption of the sacred cakes, which went with it, by followers of the Christian faith. They clothed the old custom in a new dress and invested it with new significance, but it is mere conjecture as to when this began. So very ancient and deep-rooted was the belief in immortality, and so very natural the use of bread and cake symbols of the resurrection, that the bun, marked with the sacred sign of the cross, would readily be used by the church at Easter time to typify the victory of life over death, which so soon followed the crucifixion.

A VERY ABLE ADDRESS

Illustrated Lecture on the Persecution of Early Christians Given by Herbert Booth

An able and highly interesting lecture on the persecutions and self-sacrifice of the early Christians was given at St. Paul's church last night by Mr. Herbert Booth, son of General Booth, before a very large audience. The address was illustrated with very fine plain and colored slides and moving pictures and the choir and congregation joined in the singing of hymns suitable to the solemnly interesting subjects.

One of the most striking films of the evening was a picture, that was a masterpiece in the art of animate photography—"The Burning of Rome"—which dealt with the destructive work of the unrelentingly cruel Nero; the city in flames, with the terror-stricken Romans fleeing for their lives, being most realistic.

The important incidents in connection with the lives of St. Paul and St. Peter and other saints and Christian martyrs were treated of in the lecture and illustrated by life-like and impressive views. The trials and staunch faith of the Christians in the catacombs of Rome formed one of the most instructive parts of the lecture.

In conclusion the audience was again brought back to Emperor Nero in his last moments, when terror-stricken over his fiendish crimes and destruction of the city, he sees terrible visions of his wrong-doings and goes insane and takes his life.

The boys were allowed to go on suspended sentence. Twelve bottles of ale was stolen.

PAID UP AND WAS ASKED NO QUESTIONS

It was a case of walk right in, pay his fine, and then walk right out again, with Harry Pergoge at the police court this morning. He wasn't even asked what made him thirsty yesterday afternoon, or why he "cut up" at the corner of George and Charlotte streets. Neither was the wood pile mentioned. Acting on the order of the court, the visitor reluctantly went down in his jeans for a two-spot, and it was all over.

TREATY ACCEPTED

Canadian Government at Last Approves Waterways Agreement With United States.

Ottawa, March 26.—The Government will, in a few days, promulgate the waterways treaty with the United States, as drafted in 1908 and amended by the American Senate last year by the addition of a rider providing that the existing rights of riparian owners on the St. Mary's River at Sault Ste. Marie should not be affected.

For the past year the ratification of this amendment to the treaty has been held in abeyance pending action by the United States Government to implement its promise that the foreshore on the American side of the St. Mary's River should be expropriated by the American War Department, thus meeting Canadian objections that advantage might be taken of the rider by private interests to unduly acquire power rights there. This has been done.

The treaty provides for the control of international waters for power, irrigation and navigable purposes. It establishes a satisfactory arrangement for safeguarding the navigation interests of both countries on the great lakes and other international waters. It provides for the conservation of waterpowers, especially at Niagara Falls, and the maintenance of an adequate flow of water in all channels along the whole line of boundary waters. It preserves the scenic beauty of Niagara.

Existing power plants are built capable of using 54,500 cubic feet per second. The treaty prohibits any diversion for power purposes exceeding on the whole 56,000 cubic feet on the United States side and 36,000 feet on the Canadian side.

The treaty secure the right of vessels of both countries to the free use of all the canals, and it further provides for the adjudication of all future differences between the two countries, with respect to boundary waters, by means of a miniature Hague Tribunal, consisting of six members, composed equally of American and Canadian representatives.

BRITISH CHARGED WITH BUNGLING

Washington, D.C., March 26.—The report of one American commission to Liberia was transmitted to Congress yesterday by President Taft with a special message. After reviewing the internal dangers which threaten Liberia, as well as those which crowd upon her from the outside, the commission has made the following recommendations:

That the United States extend its aid to Liberia in the prompt settlement of her boundary disputes.

That the United States enable Liberia to refund its debt by assuming as a guarantee for payment of obligations under such an arrangement, the control and collection of Liberian customs.

That this nation aid in organizing and drilling competent constabulary or frontier police.

That the United States establish and maintain a research station there.

The reform program adopted upon the advice of Great Britain is condemned by the commission, and the causes are described in the report as the "bungling of British officials in 1909," which resulted in a frontier police officered largely by British. That feature, the commission declares, is impossible for the good of Liberia.

In summarizing the conditions there, the commission says, that help from the United States is demanded, as Great Britain and France are not in a position to give disinterested assistance. The whole situation is summed up as very helpless for the little nation unless the United States steps in and helps out.

Insurance Man Exonerated.

Atlanta, Ga., March 26.—A. H. Stockdell, former general agent of the Phoenix Fire Insurance Co. of Brooklyn, with headquarters at Atlanta, and who, following the revelations concerning the affairs of the company's home office, was removed from office because of an alleged shortage, was yesterday completely exonerated by the Phoenix officials of any charges of wrong-doing.

TARIFF OUTCOME

Likely to be Satisfactory to Mr. Fielding and His Associates.

Ottawa, March 26.—Official information received here from Washington is to the effect that a satisfactory outcome of the tariff difficulty is certain.

It is understood that Hon. W. S. Fielding has notified Sir Wilfrid Laurier that a happy outcome of the negotiations may be looked for.

Almost all the Cabinet Ministers are in town to-day, and those seen by your correspondent were in a cheerful mood when the Washington conference was referred to.

It is expected here that Mr. Fielding will make concessions on several articles which enjoy the intermediate tariff under the Franco-Canadian trade treaty.

Fielding Taft's Guest.

Washington, D.C., March 26.—Hon. W. S. Fielding, Minister of Finance of the Dominion of Canada, arrived in Washington yesterday, and was the guest of President Taft at dinner last night.

Burglars In Theatre.

Toronto, March 26.—Melodrama returned to the Majestic Theatre in the early hours of yesterday morning, when a number of burglars forced an entry to the stage, broke into the carpenter's room and secured a number of his tools. With these they forced the door of the box office, and broke open the till and Manager Leslie's desk, but did not secure any money.

The door of the adjoining room, where the safe stands, was also broken. The safe is about three feet square, and very heavy, so the burglars did not attempt to blow it, but instead carried it bodily out into the inside lobby. At this juncture they were frightened by Mrs. MacNab, wife of the janitor, who heard them at work and started down stairs. The burglars fled leaving safe and tools.

Shackleton Sure of Scott.

New York, March 26.—"I have almost no doubt that Capt. Scott's expedition will reach the South Pole," declared Sir Ernest Shackleton, the Antarctic explorer, when he stepped ashore yesterday.

When the last member dies the property will revert to the parent colony in Mount Lebanon, N.Y.

Does C.P.R. Plan Coup?

Milwaukee, March 26.—The Canadian Pacific Railroad Co. has acquired a block of property on the east side of Milwaukee, near Lake Michigan, for what is said to be a terminal, according to a story in an afternoon paper yesterday.

Options on the property are said to have been quietly obtained. The story cannot be confirmed here.

With the Milwaukee acquisition the Canadian Pacific would have from the head of the lakes a Chicago line with which Milwaukee would be directly connected. Surveys have already been made for a new route which was figured on as the outlet.

LAVA IS POURING DOWN FROM MOUNT AETNA'S VOLCANO

Mountainside Villages in Grave Danger From Flood of Molten Rock—Smoke and Explosions Terrify the Excited People.

Catania, Sicily, March 26.—Aetna still is angry. From the top of the old crater volumes of white smoke are issuing to-day, while from the new craters that have formed lava is gushing and large incandescent masses are exploding with loud detonations and emissions of black smoke.

From Catania and along the entire railway surrounding Aetna thousands of persons are watching the volcano, following with telescopes the progress of the eruption.

The streams of lava already have surpassed in volume those of the eruption of 1892, but, changing their courses just as they reached Belpasso and Nicolosi, they have invaded the main roads near those two villages, which seemed thereby now to have been saved from destruction. The people are still fearful, but in both villages, soldiers are camped in the squares to avert a panic, while the mayors and parish priests are ministering to the needy.

Cardinal Francisca Nava, who returned yesterday to the scene of the eruptions, promised to bring back to the people of Nicolosi and Belpasso the veil of St. Agatha, which they believe has the power to stop the lava advancing.

Prof. Ricco, the director of the observatory on the volcano, despite a narrow escape from death yesterday, has returned to the lava fields. To those who advised prudence, he replied: "My post is now there."

It has now been ascertained that the openings from which the lava is issuing number 14. The heat from the currents is so intense that it is impossible to approach nearer than 150 feet to them. The progress down the mountain side of the lava now averages fifteen feet every seven minutes.

Late last night it was considered most probable that the streams would pass between Borrello and Nicolosi without touching them.

The people are pleading for assistance, especially for carts in which to remove their household effects from volcanic region. The Government has turned over to the prefect $2,000 with which to assist needy people. Yesterday morning the lava river had extended nine miles from its course.

During the past 48 hours the emission of lava, it is estimated, has amounted to 10,000,000 cubic yards.

U. S. SHIP SUBSIDIES

Washington, D.C., March 26.—The judicial committee of the House in its report, which will be filed to-day, recommends that a committee of five be appointed to investigate the charges that a lobby is at work to induce congressmen, by intimidation and threats "to support ship subsidy legislation at the present session."

The enquiry is ordered upon the showing made before the committee by Representative Sternerson of Minnesota and Representative Kustermann of Wisconsin, charging that the merchant marine league of Cleveland has conspired to unduly influence members of Congress in favor of ship subsidy.

Many prominent men, including John Hays Hammond, ex-Governor Myron T. Herrick of Ohio; R. P. Schwerin, general manager of the Pacific Mail Steamship Co., are officers of this organization.

It is charged also that the league through various publication and in private letters has made the statement that foreign shipowners have subscribed a "large corruption fund for the purpose of influencing members against a subsidizing of American steamship lines."

Bible Fund Complete.

New York, March 26.—The $500,000 fund which the American Bible Society has for more than a year past been seeking to raise to secure an equal amount, the gift of Mrs. Russell Sage, has been completed and announcement of the completion of this fund, the securing of which will place a round million dollars in the hands of the society for its uses, was made yesterday.

The $500,000 is in the hands of the society in the shape of good and reliable subscriptions upon which more than $280,000 has already been paid in. Thousands of persons in all parts of the world and in every state of the United States have contributed to the fund in amounts ranging from ten cents up to $25,000.

There were two subscriptions of the latter amount and upwards to 10,000 of from $1 to $5 each.

Wants Autocracy Again.

St. Petersburg, March 26.—Alexander J. Guchoff assumed the presidency of the Douma yesterday, and delivered an important speech.

In reply to the persistent attacks on the constitution, and outlining a program of legislation, he drew the same sharp distinction between constitutionalism and parliamentiarism that Premier Stolypin has emphasized on several occasions.

The keynote of the speech is found in the following statement: "The peaceful development of Russia is possible under present conditions only under a constitutional, monarchial but unparliamentary regime, based upon a popular representative body with wide legislative powers and the right of supervising the administration and a strong executive responsible only to the monarch and not to political parties."

Canadians Returning From U. S.

Boston, March 26.—A considerable movement of French-Canadians employed in New England industrial centres to Canada during the next few months is indicated by the reports of transportation agencies and by despatches from Ottawa and Montreal.

The Canadian Government officials who have colonization agents at work among former Canadians in New England state that the bulk of the repatriation movement is directed toward the new provinces in the Northwest, where free lands and other special inducements are offered to responsible settlers.

U. S. Cattle Decrease.

Washington, D.C., March 26.—An increase of 12,000,000 in the population of the United States in the past ten years and a decrease of about five million in the number of available food animals, is the estimate made by the Bureau of Statistics from the reports on these two subjects, made respectively hy the census bureau and the Department of Agriculture.

Another lesson in the law of supply and demand, deduced by the Bureau of Statistics, is that the supply of food animals has gone down three per cent., while the value has increased 22 per cent.

THE WOLF SWINDLERS

Men Who Got Bounties for Purchased Skins Will Suffer Imprisonment.

Fort Francis, Ont., March 26 For having purchased wolf skins and palmed them off as fresh captures in New Ontario woods so as to secure the Government bounty, nine men were sentenced yesterday by Judge Fitch as follows:

George Westcott, two years to Kingston Peenitentiary; M. T. Cathcart, two and a half years in pen; Thomas Godin, Joseph Maxim, Robt. Horrocks and Thomas Kirkpatrick, three months each in the district jail, and a fine of $150, or a further term of nine months. Three Indians were let off more easily, McGinnis and Blackbird getting three months each ad Baptiste four months.

Previous to the passing of sentence, Westcott gave evidence in charges brought against Moses Finkelstein and Benjamin Levison, fur dealers, of Winnipeg, charged with complicity.

According to Westcott he visited the accused fur dealers, and seeing a pile of wolf skins, was told that he could make easy money in this district under certain conditions. Westcott, said he therefore arranged to take a number of wolk skins, those with good ears only, on the understanding that he got his money back, less $1 for rental. He took 19 skins the first time from Finkelstein, and paid $98 for them. Later, after he had used them to secure a bounty of $15 each, he returned them, less four skins, and got back $64.

Finkelstein declares he sold Westcott the skins, and did not rent them, but both men were committed for trial on June 7, under personal cash bail of $2,000.

DEFEND THEMSELVES WITH HATPINS

Washington, D.C., March 26.—Washington women can jab hold-up men and mashers with long hat-pins all they want and no one in Congress will rise up to cry "outrage," according to Major Sylvester, superintendent of police of the District of Columbia.

"We have in Washington 16,000 more women than men," said Major Sylvester yesterday, in discussing the agitation against long hatpins. "Such predominance of the gentler sex can have but one result. Numbers of women are obliged to go about the streets at night without escorts, and numerous instances have come to the attention of this department where women, assailed by marauders at night, have used hat-pins with telling effect.

BENZINE EXPLODES

Fourteen Lives Lost in Chicago Warehouse Fire—The Fire Escape Inadequate.

Chicago, March 26.—Fourteen lives were lost in a fire which broke out suddenly from an explosion of benzine on the fourth floor of the six-storey building of the Fish Furniture Co., 1906-8 Wabash avenue, yesterday.

Leo Stoeckel, head clerk of the Fish company, who, by accident is said to have started the fire, told his story to Fire Attorney Frank Hogan yesterday afternoon. Although Stoeckel is admittedly more unfortunate than culpable, Attorney Hogan says he will bring some charge against the young man to insure his attendance at the inquest. Stoeckel was brought before the fire attorney with his hand, which had been burned, swathed in bandages. He appeared heartbroken.

"About 8.45 o'clock yesterday morning," Stoeckel said, "Mr. Mitchell, who is a member of the firm, gave me three pocket cigar-lighters and told me to go to the finishing room on the fourth floor and fill them with benzine. I had filled two of the lighters out of the five-gallon can and was working on the third when there was an explosion.

"A sheet of flame almost blinded me. I did not fully regain my senses until I had reached the street. The lighters contained a contrivance to make a spark, but whether I ignited one of them or not, I don't know. I either dropped the can of benzine when the flame shot up in front of me, or it was blown out of my hands."

Fire Marshal Horan declared that the single fire escape was of the ladder variety, and expressed the opinion that had this been a modern stair escape, no lives would have been lost.

Firemen poured water on the building for two hours and a half before the flames were sufficiently subdued to make a search for bodies. Twelve bodies had been recovered yesterday afternoon, when, owing to danger from the tottering walls, the search was discontinued.

Three Fires In Boston.

Boston, Mass., March 26.—Fanned by a strong March gale, three fires caused much damage in north shore districts yesterday. Essex, Hamilton and Revere each suffered from flames. The loss is estimated at $100,000 in South Hamilton, $70,000 in Essex, and $25,000 in the Franklin Park district of Revere.

In the Franklin Park fire, seven dwelling houses were wholly or partly burned. Eight large filled ice houses were destroyed at Lake Chebaco, near Essex Centre, and the villagers had to turn out to fight the flames. The fire spread through two miles of woodland and was barely checked at the edge of the village.

In South Hamilton the flames swept over an area a quarter of a mile square, levelling 21 buildings, eight of them residences.

$100,000 Fire.

Morganfield, Ky., March 26.—Fire, which started in the River Departmental store early yesterday, and spread to surrounding buildings in the business centre, caused a loss of more than $100,000; partially covered by insurance.

THE NEWS AS TOLD IN DESPATCHES

Crushed by Wall.

Windsor, March 26.—John Langdon, aged 18, an employe of the Cadwell Silex Walk & Gravel Co., was killed yesterday afternoon by the collapsing of a wall of a ferry building which was destroyed by fire early yesterday morning.

The police department and firemen early realized that the walls were in a dangerous condition, and had roped off the street. Langdon was engaged in doing some work around the dock near the sidewall of the burned building. Without warning the wall toppled over on him. He was alive when rescued, but died in the ambulance.

Storekeeper Suicides.

Lindsay, March 26.—A distressing fatality occurred at Oakwood, when a well-known storekeeper, Alex. Cameron, committed suicide, shooting himself twice with a revolver, both bullets entering the mouth.

Cameron, who was about 45 years of age and married, has been in a despondent mood recently. It was while the family were out that he committed the rash deed. He had partly undressed and got into bed before the shooting. As he had locked the doors, his wife entered through a window, and thus came upon the horrible crime.

New Method of Floating Steamer.

St. John's, Nfld., March 26.—The sealer Viking, with a catch of 24,000 seals, ashore off the Island of St. Piere, was released yesterday.

Captain Bartlett floated his steamer by a method that was unique. Massing his crew of 190 men on one side of the ship he ordered them to rush in a body to the other side, then back again and so on.

This manoeuvre caused the steamer to roll violently, she finally worked off the sand bank, and is proceeding to St. John's apparently uninjured.

West Shore Railway Wage Scale.

Cleveland, Ohio, March 26.—Negotiations looking towards a new wage scale for members of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen and the Order of Railway Conductors on the Lake Shore system were uncompleted last night after a long conference between a committee representing the two organizations and the railway management.

The men are asking an equalization of the wage rate on all eastern roads.

Sues For $250,000.

Kansas City, Mo., March 26. Mrs. Hattie Dunwoodie Cole, divorced wife of Howard G. Cole, a Chicago millionaire, yesterday filed a suit in the Circuit Court here against Mrs. Louisa Coleman Cole, former wife of Jarvis Hunt, the Chicago architect, but now wife of Howard G. Cole. The suit asks damages amounting to $250,000 for alienating the affections of Mr. Cole.

Caruso Blackmailers Indicted.

New York, March 26.—The two prosperous Italian business men, Antonion Cincotto and Antonio Misiano, who were arrested on March 4 charged with attempting to blackmail and extort $15,000 from Enrico Caruso, the operatic tenor, were indicted for that offence yesterday in the County Court at Brooklyn. Both pleaded not guilty. Their bail was raised from $5,000 to $10,000 each.

Revision of French Tariff.

Paris, March 26.—The Senate, by a vote of 283 to 5, yesterday concurred with the Chamber of Deputies in the adoption of the bill revising the tariff.

Baron d'Estournelles de Constant and others introduced a resolution requesting the Government to colaborate with foreign nations in the creation of arbitral commissions empowered to settle international disputes.

HUSHED UP IN CANADA

The account published in Thursday's Review of the drastic measures being taken in Pittsburg, Pa., for the conviction and punishment of grafters is worthy of thoughtful consideration by the Canadian people. There have been a large number of similar investigations in the United States during the past year. Some Canadians are inclined to hold up their hands in holy horror of American wickedness when they read reports of these trials, but there is another way of looking at it. Anyone who has read the reports of the different cases of this kind in the United States during the last two years must have noticed how earnestly and thoroughly these investigations are pushed without fear or favor or any hushing up, and how severely men in high positions are punished. Bribery was going on in Ontario on a bigger scale than in Pittsburg during the last years of the Ross administration, but no one was sent to penitentiary. At the present time there is reason to believe that the most stupendous system of graft ever known in the history of any country is in progress at Ottawa. It may be that members of the Government do not directly profit by it, but their friends certainly do and the Liberal Election Campaign Fund benefits.

Every effort is made to conceal from the people what is going on. Only a little is revealed from time to time in spite of precautions taken to keep things in the dark.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Joe Martin, whom an English Liberal constituency elected to the British House of Commons, has twice violently attacked, in that House, Earl Grey, Governor-General of Canada. Joe should talk about things that are going on in the constituency that elected him and let Canadian affairs alone. No Canadian constituency would have elected him to represent this country at Westminster.

The Toronto World aptly says:—"All the world is watching the result of the United States' attempt to bluff Canada. Surrender now will lose the Dominion an advantage hard, if ever, to be regained."

It is a noteworthy fact that in an election contest the Laurier Government always feel quite sure of success in those districts where low-class, uneducated foreigners are numerous, but in districts inhabited by Canadians, Englishmen, Scotchmen or Irishmen they don't feel so sure.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Reply to Mr. Moore

To the Editor of the Review:

Sir,—Mr. Moore evidently mistakes the part the waterworks plays in this city. He thinks that they are the whole "works." In his letter he speaks of the City Council as if it was a lot of interlopers. Now, sir, I think the waterworks is the same as any other committee of the council, except that the commissioners are elected by the people and get a salary. But who would have voted to have a have a commission at all if it was going to block the city as a whole in its efforts to get manufactories?

To the people and the council it's a matter of how the waterworks fit in with the general welfare and profit of the city. According to Mr. Moore, everything else must go to the wall.

Now, then, sir, let me say that the people have been kept wholly ignorant of what is going on. If the City Council or the water commissioners have received any proposals they should let the people know what they are. Why are the people kept in the dark?

It is all very well to keep the price of power up. It may benefit other power owners, but will it help the city? There is too much in this whole question to keep the people in the dark any longer. Let a little daylight in.

WEST END.

Peterborough, March 26, 1910.

BIG DELIVERY AT LAKEFIELD

Thursday, 24th, was a field day at Lakefield, and the main street of the village presented a novel sight. Lined from one end to the other with farmers' rigs loaded with agricultural implements. The machinery sales were the result of the able work of Mr. W. Batten, agent for the Massey-Harris Co., and who arranged the display. The afternoon was made a sort of holiday and general jubilation, and the parade of the loaded rigs as they left the village, was a feature. Mr. Louis Mendel, photographer, was retained to make photographs of the occasion, and he took his plates from the top of an hotel 'bus, the only elevation that offered along the line of the parade. Mr. Batten intends to send to each customer a copy of the photograph as a souvenir of the day.

WHAT THE KIDNEYS DO

What Booth's Kidney Pills are Doing for Peterboro People

All the blood in the body passes through the Kidneys every three minutes.

The Kidneys filter the blood.

They work night and day to daily remove about 500 grains of impure matter. If they fail some part of this impure matter is left in the blood bringing on pain in the back, headache, dizziness, irregular heart, hot dry skin, rheumatism, gravel, dropsy, deposits in the urine. Booth's Kidney Pills make the filtering right, and overcome Kidney trouble. Hundreds of Peterborough County residents have found this out.

Mrs. John Wallace, of 323 Water street, Peterborough, says: "I had suffered with many painful and annoying symptoms of Kidney trouble for over two years and could find nothing that would benefit my condition. My back was weak and a dull, heavy pain settled across the small of it, extending into my sides and shoulders. I could not sleep at night as the Kidney secretions were so frequent and irregular that I would have to leave my bed a number of times. I was dizzy and weak and would usually awake with a dull headache. Booth's Kidney Pills procured at Medill's drug store cured me when all else failed. I am stronger and feel better generally. I can conscientiously recommend Booth's Kidney Pills, and I would not be without a box in the house."

Sold by dealers. Price 50 cents. The R. T. Booth Co., Limited, Fort Erie, Ont., sole Canadian agents.

HAVELOCK

Special to the Review.

Havelock, March 23.

Mr. W. Richardson, of Norwood, was in town on business on Tuesday.

The Sunday edition of the Buffalo Times for last week contained a picture of the Havelock champion football team, which made such a splendid showing in Ontario football last year.

Mr. Melville Watson, of West Toronto, is visiting at his home here.

Miss Cleo Fowler has returned from visiting Peterborough friends.

Mr. Ackerman, of Norwood, was in town on Saturday.

Mrs. Healey Chase is visiting with friends in Toronto.

The revival services under Rev. J. H. McCombe in the Methodist church are being very largely attended. A sunbeam choir, composed of one hundred children, has been formed and the singing is a specialty of the meetings. Mr. McCombe is the author of the McCombe Revival Service hymns. On Sunday Mr. C. H. McCombe, of Toronto, a brother of the evangelist, was present and assisted in the services. On Sunday next meetings will be held in both the church and town hall. The meeting in the town hall, which will be for men, will be addressed by Rev. J. H. McCombe, while the one in the church will be for women, and will be addressed by Mr. C. J. McCombe. There will be two meetings, one in the afternoon and one in the evening.

Mrs. Alex. Mathison has returned from visiting in Bancroft.

Mrs. Herrington was successfully operated on for appendicitis at Mrs. Campbell's hospital on Sunday morning, the operation being performed by Dr. Holdcroft, of town.

A MARRIAGE.

The marriage of Miss Ethel Ashley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Ashley, of Belmont, to Mr. Ezra King, also of Belmont, took place at Marmora on March 17th, the ceremony being performed by Rev. J. E. Moore. The bride was prettily gowned in a dress of ashes of violet with white picture hat. Miss Emma Hender, of Toronto, was bridesmaid and Mr John King, brother of the groom, was groomsman. The young couple are now enjoying a honeymoon in Montreal and Ottawa.

The committee in charge of the "Big Five" Easter ball on Monday night next, in the opera house, are sparing no pains to make it a grand event. Halpany's orchestra, of Peterborough, will supply the music for the occasion.

The Giant's Strength

...By...

BASIL KING,

Author of "Let Not Man Put Asunder," "The Steps of Honor," Etc.

Copyright, 1908, by Harper & Brothers.

"I can't go, mother, dear," she said as calmly as she could. "I've got to see about sittings for a portrait I'm going to have painted."

It seemed to Paula as if her commonplace words fell with curious solemnity on the stillness of the room. She knew that in spite of herself she was coloring.

George Trafford took his cigar from his lips and looked round at her over his shoulder.

"You seem to be lost in admiration of yourself, Paula," he observed. "You had a portrait last year by Carolus Duran and one by Chartran the year before. Who's your man, Paula? Give us an American this time, won't you? Say Sargent or some of those fellows."

"He is an American," Paula replied, "but he isn't Sargent. He's a new painter. I believe he has remarkable talent. We spoke of him one night at Monte Carlo. You told me about him, George. His name is Winship."

Mrs. Trafford gave a little scream and let her coffee cup fall with a crash on the floor.

"Paula Trafford," she cried, "if you want to kill me do it now! Don't let it be by inches!"

"You do beat everything, Paula," her cousin observed grimly, "for getting things on the brain. I'll bet 50 cents that you've been turning those Winships over in your head ever since the subject came up two or three weeks ago."

"Lady Alice knows them," Paula stammered in excuse. "She says he's wonderful—and he isn't recognized—and his mother is blind—and they're so poor—and"—

"Goodness knows," Mrs. Trafford expostulated, "there are plenty of poor people in the world without hunting up your own father's enemies! I don't believe the portrait is anything but a pretext for"—

"Even so, Aunt Trafford, dear," Mrs. George interrupted in her reasonable tone, "don't you think it's just what Uncle Trafford would like? Haven't you known him time and time again to turn round on the beaten and the bitter and the sore and hold out the helping hand to them? Is there any one who knows better than he how to take the sting from hostility? And isn't it part of the responsibility of wealth"—

"Oh, you needn't tell me!" Mrs. Trafford gasped impatiently. She disliked so much having the higher way pointed out to her by Mrs. George that she often hurried in advance to take it. "I know better than any one what he is and the sort of example he sets us. If to return good for evil is the motto of his life, it may well be that of ours. Paula, my child," she added, with a quick change of front, "if it be your will to help these people, do it. I withdraw all objection. If you like I'll pay for the portrait. I believe it would please your father, though I think we'd better not say anything about it. Yes, I will pay for it. I don't care what it costs."

"Thank you, mother, dear," Paula said, rising, eager to escape now that her point was gained. "I'd rather pay for it myself."

"All I beg of you," Mrs. Trafford cried as Paula left the room, "is not to bring the young man here."

"But where can I have my sittings?" Paula questioned from the doorway.

"Where you like. Have them in the Louvre or in Notre Dame or anywhere else you please, but don't bring the young man here. I should faint if I saw him. Take a maid with you, take two maids, take ten maids if you will, but don't—bring—the young man here."

"Do you think that's wise?" Trafford questioned. But Paula was already out of hearing.

Half an hour later her coupe turned from the Rue Mazarin into the narrow Passage de la Nativite and stopped before an ancient fortress-like gate. Traces of renaissance sculpture were visible on the battered stone, while in a niche over the portal stood a crowned but time worn statue of the Virgin and Child. When the footman clanged the gong a wrinkled old woman opened a small door cautiously. Paula descended and asked the way to Mr. Winship's studio.

A minute afterward she found herself in a spacious courtyard paved with flat stone which time had forced into various levels, the interstices being filled here and there with tufts of grass. Low, weather worn gray buildings in the renaissance style surrounded the courtyard on three sides. In the center of the space the stone basin of a long disused fountain was gradually crumbling away, throwing slightly out of the perpendicular the elaborate wrought iron tracery which rose above it, surmounted by a cross. The place was evidently an old convent, violated probably at the revolution and since then become one of those spots, more common in Paris than elsewhere, in which poverty can take refuge and still keep some sense of dignity. To Paula, picking her way across the court toward the entrance the concierge had pointed out, everything about her seemed oppressively ancient. It was picturesque enough—in a mournful way it was even stately—but to think of any one actually living there made her shudder. The Winships themselves were well content to have discovered in the heart of the city so charming a retreat, while Paula could think only of outcasts seeking shelter among broken, empty tombs.

Now that she was here she had none of the nervousness or fluttering of the heart from which she had often suffered in thinking the matter over. On the contrary, in her velvet and sables she felt herself imposing. The ease with which the conversation at the luncheon table had passed off gave to the undertaking an air of being a matter of course. Besides, after all, there was no tremendous difficulty to overcome. She would have such a conversation as she had held at other times with M. Chartran or M. Carolus Duran and would come away. On the question of price she would naturally have to surprise the young artist, but such surprises were generally borne by their recipients with good grace. For everything else she counted on her own dignity, tact and knowledge of the world.

The entry was so dark and the slippery stairs were so steep that on the landing Paula waited for a minute beside a window to take breath.

As she gazed outward she rehearsed once more the first few phrases she should use to Winship. Suddenly she seemed to hear music—the faint tinkling of an air with which she was familiar. When she turned from the window to go up the second flight of stairs the sounds became more distinct.

Presently she heard a voice singing—a woman's voice, sweet and in tune, but thin and worn, like the tone of the old piano on which the singer was playing her accompaniment. Once on the landing Paula could hear the words quite plainly:

"O'er moor and fen, o'er crag and torrent, till
The night is gone,
And with the morn those angel faces smile
Which I have loved long since and lost awhile."

There was an amen, just as they sing in churches, and then the tinkling music ceased. Paula took a step forward toward the closed door through which the sounds had proceeded. It was that indicated to her by the concierge, but she hoped to find herself mistaken. While she was ready to deal with Winship himself, she had not counted on finding herself face to face with the women of his family. But, no; she was not mistaken. It was the door. The card on it bore the name "Winship." She was half inclined to turn away when a high pitched, quavering voice arrested her attention.

"Thank you, Marah, dear. That's very nice, very comforting."

The enunciation had that slow, emphatic distinctness which belongs to aged persons of strong will. Paula was about to ring when the voice began again, reciting in a loud, clear, trembling monotone:

"Lead, kindly light, amid the encircling gloom,
Lead thou me on.
The night is dark, and I am far from home.
Lead thou me on.
Keep thou my feet; I do not ask to see
The distant scene; one step enough for me."

"One step enough for me—one step enough for me," the voice repeated softly, like an echo, and Paula summoned up force to ring.

There was a second or two of bustling movement within, and then the door was opened.

To be Continued.

A MODERN MEDICINE FOR YOUNG CHILDREN

No sane mother would wish herself treated under the condition of medicine or surgery of half a century ago. Why, then, should she give her tender little child the old-fashioned medicines that have not changed in half a century, and which more likely than not contain poisonous opiates that will not cure the child, but merely drug it into temporary insensibility. Baby's Own Tablets is a modern medicine prepared with all the care and skill of modern medical science. This medicine cures all stomach, bowel, teething and other ailments of childhood and babyhood. And the mother has the guarantee of a government analyst that it contains no opiate or poisonous drug. Sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

OVER-WORKED KIDNEYS

Cause. Rush of Blood, Fullness, Dizziness.

J. T. Chetland, the well-known railway engineer of Hamilton, found the strain always resting upon men of his occupation vastly intensified by a tendency of the blood to rush to his head, and often at times when clearness of vision and great steadiness were demanded. Finding some difficulty in bending—a stiffness with pain having settled in his back, it occurred to him that his kidneys might be at fault. "This was a happy idea, for by it I not only got rid of the pain but many other troubles as well. I took a full dose of Dr. Hamilton's Pills and was glad to note that some obstruction of the kidneys, which I had lately noticed, was at once relieved. The flushed appearance of my face gave way to a more rational color and there was a perceptible improvement in my appetite. Dr. Hamilton's Pills certainly act splendidly upon the blood, removing heat and fulness and that sort of dizziness that makes a man at the throttle wish when it seems him that he were elsewhere."

No medicine gives such unquestionably good results for stomach, liver, and blood troubles as Dr. Hamilton's Pills; they are mild, certain, and always curative. Refuse any substitute.

All dealers sell Dr. Hamilton's Pills. 25c per box, or The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ont.

SYRUP AT 35C QUART

First of This Season's Supply on Market this Morning--Large Supply of Eggs

This morning's market saw the first supply of this season's maple syrup, and a considerable quantity was on sale at 35 cents per quart. Other lines offered on the market square brought the usual prices. Up in the hall there was no evidence of an egg famine. Buyers in quantities bought at 18 cents, and others paid 19 and 20 cents. Chickens in miniature sold at 60 cents per pair, while larger and better specimens of the egg producer were offered at from $1.25 to $1.50 per pair. Best butter went at 30c.

SPRING SKIN TROUBLES

Pimples, Eruptions and "Spotty Complexions"

At this season, scores of people—girls and young women especially—find their faces disfigured by pimples, dark spots, eruptions, etc. The skin needs attention—needs renovating after the trying time it has passed through during the winter.

Just think what it has gone through! You have been out in rain and sleet and snow. You have been at one moment perspiring from skating, or some other exertion. Then you have stood to "cool off." You have spent hours of the day indoors at a temperature equal to summer heat. Then you have covered up your skin—except your face—and gone out into a temperature away below zero! No wonder that, with all these changes, the skin of the face and neck shows signs of needing attention.

Don't forget that the skin has to do work just as any other organ of the body, and if you overwork it, it gives out. Zam-Buk is the remedy. Smear it lightly over the spots, the eruptions, the sallow patches, at night, and notice how quickly your appearance improves. As the rich, refined, herbal essences sink deep into the tissue, the hard, scurfy-like patches are removed. Better color results. The cells of the skin become transparent. The blood beneath is able to impart its proper coloring to the tissue, and the delicate bloom of health replaces the sallowness and pallor of disease.

Zam-Buk is also of great use for skin injuries and diseases. Eczema, ulcers, chaps, ringworm, acne, yield to its use. For cuts, burns, bruises, children's rashes, etc., it is unequalled, and it is a sure cure for piles. All druggists and stores at 50 cents box, or Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price. Refuse harmful substitutes and imitations.

HALF AS LONG AS MARRYING MARY

That inimitable comedienne, Florence Gear, will appear in the merry musical comedy, "Fluffy Ruffles," at the Grand Opera House on Tuesday evening, March 29. Last season Miss Gear delighted theatregoers everywhere by her amazingly funny portrayal of "Marrying Mary," who acquired and discarded husbands about the same as the average woman does her gloves. This season as "Fluffy Ruffles," who cannot keep a position one-half as long as "Marrying Mary" held her husbands, Miss Gear is even funnier. When her audiences are not bubbling they are exploding. They are either roaring at her incisive comedy, admiring her gorgeously gowned figure, or applauding her glorious soprano voice. It is impossible to remain tranquil while Florence Gear is upon the stage. So perfectly fitted are "Fluffy Ruffles" and Florence Gear that it is difficult to tell which was made for the other. Together they are known to provide such wholesome, elevating fun as to assure them a crowded house next Tuesday evening.

THE CRUCIFICTION AT ST. JOHN'S

The fifth performance of the above well known work was given last night in St. John's church before a large congregation by the choir, conducted by Mr. R. J. Devey, organist and choirmaster, assisted ably at the organ by Miss Maggie Flowers.

Last night's rendering was splendid. The singers handled the various musical numbers without any apparent effort, and finished in as good voice as at the commencement.

The Rev. Canon Davidson led with the Good Friday prayers and St. Matthew's Gospel account of the Passion. Hymn 662, "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross," was earnestly sung by the whole congregation.

Mr. H. W. Morphet and Mr. George Chandler, tenors, and Mr. Stacey, bass, gave most excellent and expressive renderings of their arduous numbers. All were in good voice and sang splendidly. Mr. Jos. Halpany and Mr. A. Flowers did well in the parts for the choir, and the men's voice parts were never given so well before in this church.

The unaccompanied quartette "God So Loved the World," was finely sung by Mrs. R. J. Devey and Mrs. W. Common, sopranos, and Mrs. Seward and Mrs. Hinchcliffe, altos, the men soloists making up a double quartette more than ordinarily good.

Mr. R. J. Devey conducted quietly but effectively, and St. John's possesses a choir organization which must rank among the highest purely voluntary choirs in the country. May their good work long continue.

CATARRH DESTROYED MY APPETITE.

PERUNA rarely fails to restore the appetite. Immediately upon beginning the use of Peruna patients begin to eat and digest. This is the universal testimony, coming from all parts of the civilized world.

Catarrh is a very frequent cause of loss of appetite and disturbed digestion. The beneficial influence of Peruna on catarrh completely restores the appetite in such cases.

To prod the digestive organs with medicines that are merely stimulants is a poor way to remedy such cases.

"I am now cured and cheerful in spirits, all through the agency of Peruna, which has cured me effectually and restored my appetite.

"My only regret is that I did not use Peruna sooner and I would have avoided all my previous suffering and misery."

—Mr. Joseph H. Conlan.

Removed Catarrh, Restored Appetite.

Mr. Joseph H. Conlan, 487 7th Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y., writes:

"I suffered from catarrh which completely destroyed my appetite and weakened my entire system.

"I am now cured and cheerful in spirits, all through the agency of Peruna, which has cured me effectually and restored my appetite.

"My only regret is that I did not use Peruna sooner and I would have avoided all my previous suffering and misery."

Torpid Liver, Stomach Trouble.

Mr. James O'Byrne, 636 Madison St., Topeka, Kas., conductor Santa Fe Railway and member Order of Railway Conductors, writes:

"I suffered with a torpid liver and stomach trouble, which made my complexion very sallow, and I felt miserable and tired all the time.

"An aunt wrote me that she was taking Peruna with such good results that she advised me to try it, and I finally bought a bottle, although I disliked to take patent medicines.

"However, I found Peruna very agreeable to take, and effective, as I felt better in a week. I took only five bottles in all and I found that was all I needed.

"I am most grateful to you for what your medicine has done for me."

Dysentery Entirely Relieved.

Mr. W. N. Casey, Leamington, Ill., writes:

"In two weeks after beginning your treatment I was well. I used nine bottles of Peruna. My case was bowel trouble or dysentery.

"I also tried Peruna for a cough, according to directions, and it exceeds any cough syrup I ever used.

"I wish every one afflicted would give Peruna a trial."

Pe-ru-na as a Tonic.

Capt. R. B. Smith, Greensboro, Ga., writes:

"After using several bottles of Peruna I can recommend it as one of the best catarrh medicines on the market. As a tonic it has no equal.

"Peruna is all that is claimed for it."

Catarrh of Stomach.

Mr. Henry Neely, First Lieutenant, Co. "F," 86th Regiment, O. V. I., Box 623, Trenton, Mo., writes: "I suffered for years with catarrh of the stomach. Seeing an advertisement of Peruna, I bought a bottle and every dose made me feel better. Seven bottles completely cured me."

Easter at St. Andrew's

The Easter services in St. Andrew's church will be of a very interesting and inspiring character. In the morning the Rev. E. D. Halpenny, B.A., late of Indianapolis, Indiana, will give an Easter message from the text "Here am I, send me." The musical service is noted elsewhere.

LUNG TROUBLE

Mrs. Biny Brown, of Tenecape, N.S., Was Cured by Catarrhozone of Lung Trouble and Catarrh, After Hundreds of Other Remedies Failed

If your lungs are weak; if there is consumption in your family; if Colds, Catarrh, and Bronchitis bother you, be sure to use Catarrhozone. It is especially adapted for these diseases and cures every time

Mrs. Brown took cough mixtures, but they made her sick. Then she used an atomizer, but, after resorting without benefit to poultices, she tried Catarrhozone.

"I used Catarrhozone Inhaler," writes Mrs. Brown, "five minutes every hour, and soon recognized that it was going to cure me. I could feel the soothing medicated air spreading through the air passages of the throat, and it touched the sore spots in the lungs that other remedies failed to reach. Catarrhozone seemed to go just where it was needed most, and soon put a stop to my cough. It restored me to perfect health, and I am convinced that no cough, cold, or catarrh can exist if Catarrhozone is used."

No treatment is so clean, so pleasant, so certain to cure as Catarrhozone. By means of the inhaler, the local symptoms, such as coughing, inflammation and congestion are speedily corrected. Ferrozone tablets, which are taken after each meal, purify and cleanse the blood of all poisons, and build up and strengthen the system.

This local and constitutional treatment is always effective, and cures cases that have been given up as hopeless. Money can't buy or produce anything better, and to get cured it is absolutely necessary to use Catarrhozone.

PETERBOROUGH GETS THE HARDWARE CONVENTION

Ald. Phelan and Duffus Make Successful Plea at Meeting of Executive of Hardware Association—Three Other Places Were Bidders for the Big Annual Gathering of Hardware Men

Ald. Duffus and Phelan, of the Reception Committee of the City Council, and Mr. Harry Morgan, of the Peterborough Hardware Co., did a nice stroke of business in the city's interests when they landed the annual hardware convention for Peterborough. As a result of their meeting at the Queen's hotel, Toronto, yesterday, the convention comes to Peterborough on the occasion of its next yearly session, on February 21st, 23rd and 24th, 1911.

Both Ald. Phelan and Ald. Duffus spoke of Peterborough as offering many attractive advantages, and assured the executive that there would not be any difficulty in the way of hotel accommodation and the securing of a good place for the hardware exhibits, as well as a suitable hall for the meetings in connection with the convention. Toronto, Guelph and Niagara Falls also wanted the convention, but the committee decided in favor of Peterborough.

It is probable that about 600 from different parts of the Dominion will attend the convention. It will be the third annual assembly of the hardware men. The last two were held in Hamilton and London.

NOT UNLIKELY 57TH BAND WILL TURN "BRAW LADDIES"

In spite of some rumors to the contrary at the time of the Review's statement to the effect that the 57th Band would likely break away from the regiment, that statement has been practically confirmed, it would seem.

Mr. J. Harper, the secretary of the band, has written to Glasgow, Scotland, for information concerning Highlanders' costumes, and it is the intention of the present 57th Band to become a Highlanders' city band, unless an amicable agreement with the regiment is reached. It seems hardly likely, from the way things are shaping, that the band and regiment will arrive at a mutually satisfactory agreement.

OBITUARY

WILLIAM FERGUSON.

The death occurred yesterday morning of Mr. Wm. Ferguson. The late Mr. Ferguson was 69 years of age and lived the greater part of his life in Pennsylvania, returning to Peterborough about two years ago owing to his failing health. He is survived by one little daughter Dorothy.

The funeral will take place from the home of his brother, Mr. James Ferguson, 476 Rogecord street on Monday afternoon at two o'clock. Interment will take place in Little Lake cemetery.

MRS. PATRICK KILLEN.

The death took place this morning at the residence of her son, Mr. Patrick Killen, 292 Dalhousie street, of Mrs. Patrick Killen, wife of the late Patrick Killen, of Ennismore, who predeceased her nine years ago. Heart failure was the cause of death, and Mrs. Killen had only been seriously ill about two weeks.

She was 74 years of age and is survived by a family of six sons and one daughter. Her daughter is Mrs. John R. Hickson, of Ennismore, and the sons, Samuel, Richard, William, and Henry, of Ennismore, and Patrick, of Peterborough.

The late Mrs. Killen was one of the early settlers of Ennismore, and lived there in the neighborhood of forty years before taking up her residence in this city. She was a Catholic in religion and a parishioner of St. Peter's.

The funeral will take place on Monday morning at 9.30, from the late residence, 292 Dalhousie street, to St. Peter's cathedral, where mass will be said, and thence to St. Martin's cemetery, Ennismore, for interment.

SOME FIFTH CENTURY JOKES

The Absentminded Professor Was a Prolific Source of Merriment to the Jesters of Those Days—The Source of Many Modern Jokes.

The maxim that there is nothing new under the sun applies, it would seem, more truly to jokes and witticisms than to anything else. The chief differences between the jests of one generation and that of another lie mainly in their form. The kernel is practically the same. Nevertheless it is interesting to exhume some of these ancient jokes and to recognize in them the ancestors of the things at which we laugh today in the pages of our humorous publications.

Some humorous writers dearly love to make fun of the absentminded, unpractical university professor, who outside of his own subject lets his wits wander and is very slow to grasp anything in ordinary life. Such jokes as these were cracked centuries ago by the students and graduates of the great universities in ancient Greece, for it is a mistake to suppose that what we now call "college life" was unknown to the ancients.

As a matter of fact, the student at the University of Athens or at the University of Alexandria was very much the same sort of mortal as is the student today, and his professors were not so very different.

A witty Greek named Hierocles, a graduate of Alexandria, collected some time in the fifth century a volume of jests which were current among the students with regard to the woolgathering type of professor. A number of them are translated here as being of considerable interest in the history of humor and especially of college humor:

A professor, wishing to swim, was nearly drowned, whereupon he swore that he would never touch water again until he had learned how to swim.

Of twin brothers, one died. A professor thereupon, meeting the survivor, asked, "Is it you that died or your brother?"

A professor, learning that a raven would live for more than 200 years, bought one to test the matter.

A professor, wishing to cross a river, went on board the boat on horseback. When some one asked the reason he answered that he wanted to get over in a hurry.

A professor, looking out of the window of a house which he had bought, asked the passersby whether the house was becoming to him.

A professor, meeting another professor, said, "I heard you were dead." "And yet," replied the other, "you see that I am still alive." "Well," said the first in perplexity, "I don't know what to believe, for the man who told me about it is a much more truthful man than you!"

A professor, in danger of being shipwrecked, called for his tablets that he might make his will. Seeing thereupon his slaves lamenting their fate, he said, "Do not grieve, for I am going to set you free."

A professor dreamed that he had trodden on a nail and that the wound pained him. On waking he bound up his foot. Another professor, having learned the cause, remarked, "It served you right, for why do you sleep without sandals?"

A professor, meeting a doctor, hid himself behind a wall. Some one asking the cause, he answered, "I have not been sick for so long a time I am ashamed to come into the sight of a physician."

A professor, wishing to teach his horse to be a small eater, gave him no food at all. At length, the horse having starved to death, the professor exclaimed, "I have suffered a great loss, for just as he had learned not to eat he died!"

A professor, visiting a sick person, inquired about his health. The invalid, however, was not able to reply. Thereupon the professor, being angry and scolding the man, said, "I hope that I shall be sick some of these days, and then when you come to ask how I am I will not answer."

A professor sealed up a vessel of wine which he had bought. His servant having made a hole in the vessel beneath and drawn off some of the wine, the professor was astonished to see the contents diminished while the seals remained unbroken. A neighbor having told him to look whether it had not been taken out from below, he replied, "Why, you fool, it's the upper part of the wine and not the lower that is missing!"

A professor, a bald man and a barber traveling together agreed to keep watch in turn four hours, each while the others slept. The barber's turn came first. He quietly shaved the head of the sleeping professor and when the time elapsed awoke him. The latter, scratching his head as he got up and finding it bare, cried out: "What a rascal that barber is! He's waked the bald man instead of me!"—Exchange.

Legal Advice.

"Prisoner," said the justice, "you are charged with having struck the defendant."

"Yes, judge; I poked him, but he called me a liar."

"That's no excuse."

"Well, judge, it was my first experience. What do you do in such cases?"—Judge's Library.

HOLY WEEK AT THE CATHEDRAL

Solemn and Impressive Festivities at St. Peters

The usual beautiful and impressive Catholic ceremonial marked the observance of Holy Week at St. Peter's. On Holy Thursday Pontifical High Mass was celebrated by His Lordship the bishop; Father Vaufin, Grafton, deacon; Father Fitzpatrick, Enniskmore, sub-deacon. Father McColl was High Priest; Father Frank O'Sullivan, Port Hope, Master of ceremonies. The other clergy present were Father Phelan, Lakefield; Father Bretherton, Hastings; Father Galvin, Galway; Father Keeley, Lindsay; Father Hammersley, O.H.J. Ottawa; Father Meagher, Toner and Casey, of the cathedral. During the mass the oils were blessed by His Lordship the Bishop. Afterwards the Blessed Sacrament was carried in solemn procession to the repository, which was very tastefully decorated by the community of St. Mary's. The church was filled by an overflow congregation, many of whom received Holy Communion.

Father McColl was celebrant on Good Friday, with Father W. P. Meagher as deacon; Father Toner, sub-deacon and Father D. A. Casey, master of ceremonies. After the reading of the passion there was adoration of the cross, followed by the mass of the Presanctified before which the blessed sacrament was carried in procession from the repository by His Lordship the Bishop; large crowds again attended at 8, at 3 p.m., and at 7 o'clock the cathedral was again filled for the stations of the cross, conducted by the bishop. In the evening Father Toner preached the passion sermon, and after the sermon a portion of the true cross was exposed for veneration.

This morning the ceremonies began at seven o'clock. Father Meagher was the celebrant, assisted by Fathers Toner and Casey. First came the blessing of the oil and the Paschal Candle. This was followed by the reading of the prophecies. Afterwards the baptismal font was blessed. Then Solemn High Mass, at which his lordship presided, was sung by Rev. W. P. Meagher. After mass vespers were said in choro. Father Casey was again master of ceremonies. On the three days the music was a feature of the celebration.

On to-morrow Pontifical High Mass will be sung by His Lordship the bishop, with Fathers Toner and Casey as deacon and sub-deacon. Father McColl will preach the Easter sermon and at solemn vespers in the evening Father Casey will preach on another aspect of the Easter festival.

A CHEERFUL CROP OUTLOOK

Mr. P. Conroy, of the four corners, Douro, Dummer and Asphodel, planted thirty hills of potatoes on Good Friday. Mr. Conroy stated to the Review that the crop prospects this year were better than he had seen them for forty seasons. The fall wheat is green and healthy, and while some of it was nipped by the frost, the damage is slight. The other early crops should have an excellent yield and the trees in the low places have buds half an inch long on them.

Mr. John Londergran has let the contract for putting up his house of concrete blocks in the vicinity of Indian River.

A Startling Greeting.

In Morocco foreigners are saluted by the Moors on horseback in a manner which may well startle those unaccustomed to it. The Moor rides full speed toward the stranger as if to run him down. He then suddenly stops and discharges his pistol over his head.

A Decorative Miss.

"They do not seem to have got any further with these decorations than suspending a few lights from the ceiling."

"Yes; it struck me, too, that it was a case of hanging fire."

Lindsay came to Peterborough to play the Y boys, but it wasn't even good practice for the Y boys. The spectators were somewhat surprised to see Peterborough with such a good team, and they shouted for their favorites in grand style.

Hanwell did some good shooting and Nicholls played a fast game and did some good shooting. Hanwell scored 11 baskets and Nicholls scored 8.

Matthews played a cracking good defence game. Wallace and Laing did some good team work and the game was fast throughout.

Lindsay played good and clean and if they couldn't play a good game of basketball they did know how to play the part of gentlemen.

Our team is to meet Toronto on Monday night and it will be a faster game than last night.

The game will be at 8 p.m. and a big crowd is expected.

Peterborough's line-up will be:—Wallace, c; Mathews and Laing, defence; Hanwell and Nicholls, forward. Flowers, substitute.

PHYSICIANS Failed to Cure Rheumatism

Miss Flora Chapman Vividly Describes Her Sufferings and Ultimate Cure With "Nerviline."

"After being an enthusiastic user of Nerviline for years, I feel it my duty to tell you personally what your wonderful preparation has done for me.

"I suffered torture from rheumatism and heart trouble, tried scores of so-called remedies, consulted for weeks and months with Toronto's most eminent physicians, but derived only slight benefit.

"A friend insisted on my using Nerviline, and to my surprise a vigorous rubbing of this powerful liniment eased the pains and reduced the stiffness in my joints. I continued to use Nerviline and was permanently cured. I am now perfectly well, and for three years have had no rheumatism at all. I know many families where no other medicine but Nerviline is kept—it is so useful in minor ailments like earache, toothache, neuralgia, coughs, colds, lumbago, and sciatica. I call Nerviline my "Life Guard," and urge all to try its merit."

Insurance Companies Lose About $125,000.00 by the Wreck at Spanish River

Double Liability for About Twenty-five Persons

A loss of somewhere in the neighbourhood of $125,000 is what the Accident Insurance Companies estimate the wreck at Spanish River bridge means to them.

They figure that about 25 of those who met death carried Accident Insurance, and the average insurance, according to the tables, is $5,000. In case of death in a railway disaster there is a double liability, making the figure $6,000, or $5,000 to be more conservative.

Their loss may total more than that, for the commercial travellers, a number of whom were killed, usually carry very heavy insurance. In addition, some of the companies make the policies payable on the death of the wife while travelling, though the policy is taken out in the husband's name. In such cases they pay the husband the same amount as they would have paid the wife were the husband killed.

We issue the BEST Accident and Sickness policy offered to the public.

CONCERNING WOMEN.

The majority of women in France are wage earners in one capacity or another. The average sum paid to dressmakers is 3 francs, or 60 cents, a day.

Mrs. Elizabeth Cochran Seaman, better known as Nelly Bly, the globe girdler, is now the manager of the Ironclad works of Brooklyn, a concern which employs many hands.

Mrs. Rosa Herrman is president of the H. Herrman Lumber and Furniture company, an American concern, which has branch offices in London, Hamburg and Natal. Mrs. Herrman lives in Stuyvesant square, New York.

Mrs. William Salter has been elected a member of the London county council. She is the wife of a physician who was defeated a few days ago for parliament. Mrs. Salter made a house to house canvass, and she credits her election to the support of women. She was opposed by two men, and she topped their combined vote. The chief planks in her platform were lower rents and lower taxes, two things which appealed especially to the women in the district she now will represent in the council.

Lady Duff-Gordon is a warm admirer of the American woman. This member of the British nobility claims that an American woman can keep a secret. She says that in America women are treated on equal terms with men. "They are better educated than Englishwomen, as a rule. There is no country where woman is treated with greater courtesy. The result is seen in the independence of character and the self reliance and dependability of the American woman."

How to Cook Meat.

The object of cooking meat is to make it tender and to keep in the juice and preserve the flavor. To do this sear the meat on both sides—that is, press it down quickly on a hot pan and then turn and sear the other side. When the meat turns a whitey brown color a coating has been formed which will keep in the juice. After searing the meat cook it slowly on a low fire. This will make it tender. Beef and mutton are the meats that are best for all persons.

Meats such as heart, liver, pork and kidney should never be given to young children or persons who are not well.

Pork should be used only in cold weather and not frequently even then.

SPRING-BLOOD IS BAD BLOOD

How to Get New Health and New Strength in the Spring

Even the most robust find the winter months trying to their health. Confinement indoors is often overheated and nearly always badly ventilated rooms—in the home, the office, the shops and the schools—taxes the vitality of even the strongest. The blood becomes thin and watery, or clogged with impurities. Sometimes you get up in the morning just as tired as when you went to bed. Some people have headaches and a feeling of langour; others are low spirited and nervous; still others have pimples and skin eruptions. These are all spring symptoms that the blood is out of order. Many people rush to purgative medicines in the spring. This is a mistake. You can't cure these troubles with a medicine which gallops through your system, and is sure to leave you weaker still. What you need to give you health and strength in the spring is a tonic medicine, and the one always reliable tonic and blood-builder is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These pills not only banish spring ills, but guard you against the more serious ailments that follow, such as anaemia, nervous debility, indigestion, rheumatism and other diseases due to bad blood. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills actually make new, rich blood, which strengthens every nerve, every organ and every part of the body. Try this medicine this spring and you will have strength and energy to resist the torrid heat of the coming summer.

Mr. George W. Johnson, Hemford, N.S., says: "A couple of years ago when I came home from a lumbering camp where I had been employed, my blood was in such a condition that my whole body broke out in boils—some six and eight in a nest. These were so painful that I was confined to the house, and for three months was treated by my family doctor. I got no better; in fact the sores began to eat into my flesh, and at times were so offensive that I refused to sit up at the table with my family. A friend asked me one day why I did not give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a trial, and I decided to do so. I got six boxes, and before they were all gone the sores began to disappear, and my system was much strengthened. I continued using the pills until I had taken twelve boxes when every boil and sore had disappeared, and I have since enjoyed the very best of health."

Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

TOOK "FRUIT-A-TIVES" JUST IN TIME

This wonderful Fruit Medicine Completely Cured Her after 12 years suffering.

184 CHAUDIERE ST., HULL, QUE.—December 24th, 1909.

"For the past twelve years, I had painful attacks of Dyspepsia. Finally in March, 1908, I suffered such tortures that I was compelled to stay in bed. I could not digest my food and everything I ate caused the most agonizing pain in my stomach. I also had a fearful attack of Constipation and at times, I had no movement of the bowels for two weeks. My feet were constantly cold. Three doctors attended me for two years and gave me all kinds of medicines but did me no good. My weight came down to only 80 pounds and every one thought I was going to die. Finally I had the good fortune to buy "Fruit-a-tives" and as soon as I began to take them, I felt better. I persisted in the treatment and to my great joy and to the astonishment of my friends, I improved. Now I feel very well, weigh 115 pounds and this is more than I ever weighed, even before my illness. I attribute my cure solely and entirely to "Fruit-a-tives" and can never praise them too much for they saved my life. To all who suffer from Dyspepsia and Constipation, I recommend "Fruit-a-tives" as being a miraculous remedy."

MADAME ANDREW STAFFORD

MADAME ANDREW STAFFORD.

When you read such a letter, you think that "Fruit-a-tives" is indeed a wonderful remedy, yet the action of "Fruit-a-tives" is so simple that a child can understand it. "Fruit-a-tives" is made from concentrated and intensified fruit juice and the finest nerve tonics, and acts directly on the liver, causing sufficient bile to flow, which regulates the bowels and cures Constipation. "Fruit-a-tives" also acts on the stomach, producing an abundance of gastric juice and so strengthens the stomach muscles that complete digestion is assured. "Fruit-a-tives" also regulates kidneys and skin, thus purifying the blood and building up the whole system. Without exaggeration, it may be stated that "Fruit-a-tives" is the greatest remedy in the world for Indigestion, Dyspepsia and Constipation. 50c a box, 6 boxes for $2.50, or trial size, 25c. At all dealers or send postpaid on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

Fashions and Fads

Hip-length coats in Irish crochet or princess lace are in evidence as theatre garments, worn, as yet, of course, under the opera cloak or street wrap.

Embroidered linen waists will continue in style this summer. An exceedingly pretty model opens a little to the left of the front, the entire front being rich in handwork.

The vogue of the jabot is threatened by the fashion of having coats cut along the line of the Russian blouse, which is so high-necked as to make the jabot impossible.

However elaborate a scarf may be in itself or in its trimming, the edge is usually finished with a selvage all around. The selvage varies from a quarter to two inches in width.

While flowers of tulle and other transparent stuffs will be in favor this spring and summer for hat trimmings, those fashioned or braid will be considered especially dressy.

The nun's veiling shirtwaist is very popular for the between seasons, being delightfully light in weight and at the same time warm enough for comfort without an interlining.

The tunic that is straight across the front is in general favor just now. It is not unlike last year's washerwoman skirt in style, and is indistinctly related to the long and overused Moyenage style.

The long-gathered, or puffed sleeve, completed by a three- or four-inch close-fitting ruff, almost identical with that which had such vogue several years ago, is now being inserted in the newest shirt-waists.

The scarf cape is made of a single piece of satin a yard and a quarter wide and over twice as long. This is edged with several rows of marabou. When draped gracefully over the shoulders it is most fascinating.

Tunics vary in length to suit the taste and height of the wearer. Some extend to within a few inches of the hem of the gown, while others come but a few inches below the waistline. The lower edge, seeming, may be as unusual in its outline as the wearer desires.

The peplum, which, after all, is nothing but a variation of the long tunic worn in the days of Rome's supremacy, is coming to the fore this spring. Pattern dresses of silk and fancy woven woolen fabrics are to be had with a peplum, or drapery, having a design which differentiates it from the material of the skirt.

THE PROPER WEAR FOR YOUNG GIRLS

Long Coats, Norfolk Jackets and Tailored Gowns are Features of Season

Long coats, Norfolk jackets and tailor-made gowns are the features of the season for the young girl. There is also sure to be a good showing of modified Russian suits in a variety of styles. First, there is the Russian blouse, buttoned over at the side. This is more favored in linen and tussah than in cloth. Then there is the blouse coat having the fullness drawn in at the waist by the belt, which opens up in the front and is finished off with a band of trimming of revers. Among the recent design is the unadjusted blouse coat having a vested.

Quite a number of coats have only the belt to suggest the Russian influence. Frequently it is interlaced showing only in the front and back, or at the side; in other designs it is put on separately so that it does not draw in the garment at all.

The return of the belt to favor is responsible for the number of Norfolk jackets that have appeared. This style was popular a few years ago, and it promises to again come into favor.

However, it is the simple tailored suit that is receiving the most attention. In order to give the suits a little individuality, odd pocket effects, bound buttonholes and occasionally overlapping front or back seams are to be found in some of the designs. The chief feature, however, of the best suits is their tailoring.

To show the difference in price between these suits, which often look similar on account of their simplicity, it is necessary to demonstrate that they are perfectly made in every respect. First, that the material, lining, and everything that goes with the suit are of the highest quality; second, that they are cut well; third, that the workmanship is the best.

The fashion is for separate coats and long coats, enveloping the entire figure, seem to be favorites. They are made of serge, covert, mannish mixtures, tweeds and homespuns. Some of the coats are made almost tight fitting and show off the lines of the figure to excellent advantage. Quite a few show the belt suggestion, while others have a separate belt, either of the material or of leather.

While the blouse is seen in most cases the fullness is drawn in to the belt, resulting in a less clumsy garment. The long, rolling revers have again appeared, and a few side fastenings are also to be found.

Silk coats, particularly those of pongee and tussah, are also popular. These show the same features as the cloth coats, but usually they have a fancy collar and cuffs. Foulards, shepherd's checks, moires, and Oriental embroideries are used largely to trim these.

Lingerie dresses are popular and are found in many styles, from a simple little lawn to an exquisite imported cotton marquisite.

Have Gone Home

Mrs. Sidney Sharpe and the youngest of her sick children were brought home from Peterborough last week, having recovered from the attack of fever. The two elder children are at the hospital yet, but are almost recovered.—Hastings Star.

Household Notes

To make pure pea soup, heat in its own liquor a can of peas, press through a sieve and add the pulp thus obtained to one quart of beef stock. Reheat and serve with cubes of toasted bread.

All table linen stains, fruit and even coffee stains where there is cream in the coffee, may be removed by rubbing the spots with pure glycerine. Let it remain an hour and then rinse in lukewarm water.

To prevent starch from sticking to the iron and streaking, drop a small piece of alum into it when it is done and stir over the fire until it is dissolved. Then remove from the fire and add a teaspoonful of kerosene.

To heat a smoothing iron on the coals without smutting it, take a cap from the kitchen stove and lay it on the coals. Place the iron on top of this, and both will soon be heated through.

To hard boil eggs so that the yolks will not be discolored, they should be put into boiling water on the stove, never into cold water, and after boiling for half an hour they should be plunged into cold.

If there is a bit of cauliflower left over from a meal, try dipping it first into crumbs, then into eggs, and again into crumbs. If not enough to serve separately, then fry in deep fat and use as a garnish to any meat or luncheon dish.

Cold cooked beef, whether boiled, broiled or roasted, chopped fine, mixed with cooked potatoes, also chopped fine, and moistened with gravy and milk, makes a most acceptable dish. Put into a pudding dish, cover the top with grated cheese and bake.

Before putting white furs away, clean by rubbing gently with corn meal dampened with gasoline, in the open air. Repeat until clean and then fluff the fur with dry meal. It will easily shake out. Clean dark furs with dry bran, which should be heated.

A safe and sane skin lotion that will by boiling twelve tablespoonfuls of prevent premature wrinkles, is made barley in a quart of water until gluten is obtained. Strain through a fine linen and add to the liquid a teaspoonful of tincture of benzoin.

Rice with fruit makes a tasty dessert. When the rice is boiled tender add a little orange pulp, a sliced banana and a few canned cherries. Pour into a mold to become firm. When cold cover with powdered macaroons and serve with either whipped cream or a soft custard.

Jellied salad is nice for a change. Chop bits of celery rather fine, mix with shredded lettuce or flaked cabbage and saturate thoroughly with a well-seasoned French dressing. Mix a teaspoonful of granulated gelatine in a little water, blend this well through the whole, press into a crockery mold or small bowl, and put in a cool place to become firm.

Pity Your Mother

If She Is Frail or Weak.

The heroic side of life is most often found in the struggle between duty towards the family, and the mother's inability through ill-health to perform that duty.

"Words sometime seem poor things to express one's feelings," writes Mrs. J. P. Merritt. "I have a family of five all pretty close together. After baby was born my strength didn't come back. The child pulled me down a lot, and I couldn't wean him in the hot weather, my other children needed so much to be done for them. My system did not come right—my color was pallid, and morning and night and all the time, I was livid. My druggist told me of how well his customers spoke of Ferrozone, and I got six boxes right away. You wouldn't believe how well it built me up. It seems quite strange now to be real well again, to feel like my old self once more. I was really hopelessly in despair and too completely worn out to feel like living before I used Ferrozone, so you can imagine how highly I prize such a good medicine. My children now say 'mother isn't tired any more,' and for my children's sake I am so glad to be well enough to give them all the care and attention that every good mother feels she must bestow upon her family."

Ferrozone Cures Weakness

Are You Weak, Bloodless, Anaemic?

You Can Be Cured of Poverty of the Blood Just Like Miss Everett Was.

Since the early ages, in all countries, among all classes of people, anaemia has been one of the most pernicious conditions that affect mankind.

Writing from her home in Paisley, Mrs. Everett says:—"My daughter had just passed her sixteenth year, when she began to rapidly lose color and strength. Serious complications set in that made her family and friends most anxious. We were not only worried on account of her ill-health, but because she was likely to lose her years' work at the High school, where she was preparing for the profession of teaching. The doctor said it was 'Anaemia.' I knew the best remedy was Ferrozone—and made my daughter take two Ferrozone Tablets with every meal. The first box did little more than increase her appetite. But with the second box it was really delightful to watch the signs of returning health. Annie's face became sort of a yellowish at first—that deadly whiteness disappeared. But it wasn't long before a ruddy glow was perceptible in her cheeks, and real good color returned. All Annie's troubles were cured—she grew strong—vigorous—heavy in weight—feels and looks the picture of health."

Makes Strong Blood

The company has just finished a new up-to-date plating room that includes the most modern methods for finishing goods, also addin new and special machinery for producing cast and wrought metal hardware. They are increasing their floor space by some thousand square feet to meet the increasing business which the new goods will certainly demand.

THEATRICAL

"The Girl Question"

A typical Howard Hough and Adams show, "The Girl Question," held the boards at the Grand yesterday for two fairly pleasing performances. The music, which is of the lightest order, is generally very tuneful, "Gee Kid, Be Sweet to Me," "Waltz With Me Dear Till I'm Dreamy," and "I Hate to Work on Monday," all being melodious numbers. The first named song will be whistled on the streets here for many weeks to come.

Wiley Dunlay was well received in the leading part and was assisted by some capable supporting people.

"The Old Duck and Wing" was a taking number and some exceptionally clever dancing by Fox and Evans completely captivated the house. "The Imitation Craze," was a bright feature the Eddie Foy imitation being very funny and realistic.

THEY FIXED UP THE POSTMASTER

Dodd's Kidney Pills Cured His Lumbago and Sciatica

That Was Three Years Ago and He is Still Cured—Why You Should Try Dodd.s Kidney Pills First

Elliston, Trinity Bay, Nfld., March 25.—(Special).—That Dodd's Kidney Pills not only relieve Sciatica and Lumbago, but cure it once and for all, is the experience of Mr. Alfred Crew, postmaster here.

"Yes," the postmaster says in telling his story, "it is three years since I was cured of Lumbago and Sciatica. Dodd's Kidney Pills did it, and I am happy to say the cure was permanent.

"I had pains in my back, cramps in my muscles, shooting pains across my loins, and I often found it hard to get any rest at night, and when I did my sleep was unrefreshing. I was medically attended, but without getting any benefit, and at last I was persuaded to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. I used six boxes altogether, and they took the pains away and quite cured me."

Nearly every cure by Dodd's Kidney Pills tells us of trying something else first. If you use Dodd's Kidney Pills first you will never need to try "something else." They always cure all diseases of the Kidneys, and all diseases that are caused by sick Kidneys.

DEATH CAME TWICE WITHIN A FORTNIGHT

Mr. William Anthony Staunton Passed Away Good Friday Morning Two Weeks After the Death of His Son

A particularly sad death occurred Good Friday morning at 11.30 o'clock, when Mr. William Anthony Staunton passed away after a three days' illness with pneumonia, at his late residence, 20 Benson Avenue.

Mr. Staunton was born in Clifden County, Ireland, and received his education in Trinity University, Dublin. In 1861 he was married to Margaret Hussey, of Lindsay, who predeceased him two years ago.

The deceased has been a highly respected resident of Peterborough for 21 years, coming here from Orillia, was a devoted member of St. John's church and a staunch Conservative in politics. He leaves to mourn his loss Capt. W. R. Staunton, Port Arthur; Mrs. T. W. Wood, Orillia; Mrs. S. F. M. Tomlinson, "Pinehurst," Ida; Mrs. James Pavitt Archer, Campbellford; Mr. Wilfrid J. Staunton, Spokane, Wash., and Miss Maud, Ernest Clarence and Harvie, of this city.

General sympathy is extended to the family, as it is only a fortnight since the death of their eldest brother.

The funeral will be held on Tuesday afternoon, at 2.30, from the family residence, 20 Benson street.

Fat Defeating Extraordinary

Slender Margaret Knolly, now, if you please. The fascinating leading lady of the Bijou, now more fascinating than ever, astonished all her freinds on Broadway the other day by presenting to their admiring gaze a svelt and willowy form in place of the plump, not to say fat, outlines with which she gaily sailed away to new triumphs and foreign shores last January. After a good deal of diplomatic cross-examination from interested fat acquaintances the secret was cautiously whispered to a few dear friends, with the result that everybody knows it now. It was not exercise, nor fasting, nor sea air, nor worry about her new venture that had brought about this wonderful willowy change in the charming Margaret; no, none of these, nothing but a simple mixture which all good druggists are familiar with and can supply at small cost, to wit: One-half ounce Marmola, 3-4 ounce Fluid Extract Cascara Aromatic, and 3 3-4 ounces Peppermint Water. "Grown folks need a teaspoonful after meals and at bedtime," explained the now slender Margaret. "It is simply wonderful. It takes off the fat quickly, as much as a pound a day, and keeps it off. You can eat what you like, too. In that respect it is unlike anything of the kind I ever heard of, and besides it has another splendid feature—it is entirely harmless, and will not cause wrinkles. I think it is about as essential a toilet article for the woman who is fat and wants to get thinner as face powder. In order to get the best results, however, you should buy the Marmola in the original package and mix it in with the other two ingredients after you get home."

LURED TO DEATH

Decoy Letter Leads Pretty Young Girl to Rooms of Fiendish Murderer in New York.

New York, March 28.—The body of Ruth Wheeler, the little girl graduate who was lured from her widowed mother last Thursday by a decoy offer of employment, was found late Saturday afternoon huddled in a gunny sack, on a fire escape outside the apartment of Albert Wolter, the man charged with her abduction. She had been strangled with a short end of rope, hacked with a knife, burned beyond recognition, and thrust carelessly out of doors like so much rubbish.

Identification was possible only by shreds of clothing and fragments of jewelry, but there was abundant evidence of how the murder had been done. Around the neck were the charred fibres of manila rope burnt into the flesh. The apartment reeked with kerosene. There were oil stains in front of the newly-painted fireboard that had an open grate.

The girl's clothing and hair had been saturated with kerosene, the fireboard had been removed and the body thrust up the chimney, standing. When the match was touched to her, she burned like a torch. Probably the murderer had hoped for an opportunity to remove the body under cover of night, but when the girl's disappearance raised such an uproar and he began to suspect he was shadowed, he had packed up and fled.

A neighbor living on the same floor of an adjoining house noticed the lumpy bundle outside his window and thinking it refuse, poked it off the fire escape into the back yard with a broom handle. The bundle moved obstinately and fell with a crash. His curiosity aroused, the neighbor hurried down stairs for the janitor to investigate.

Ruth Wheeler was fifteen years of age, the youngest of three sisters bred by their mother, a dressmaker, to self-support. Both the elder sisters are stenographers, and Ruth had just been graduated from a business college.

The girl had been carefully brought up. She was never on the streets at night, and her failure to come home for 24 hours without explanation meant more than a caprice. The next morning her sisters, Pearl and Adelaide, in serious concern, went to the college and learned that the following postcard had been turned over to her:

"Dear Madam: Please call in reference to position of stenographer at residence of the secretary. (Signed) A. Wolter, 122 East 105th street."

Investigation at the address given soon showed that Wolter, whom his landlady described as a sickly, white-faced youth of about twenty, with flashy clothes and elaborately curled hair, had left the apartment where he had lived with his wife, earlier in the same day. He received many calls from young girls, said the landlady, and she had particularly noticed that the last one who called was fresher of face and better dress than the ordinary run of them.

With Wolter fled, the detectives waited for his wife. When she appeared they trailed her to a corner, where she met a man answering Wolter's description. He was immediately arrested, taken back to the room he had vacated, and searched. At first he denied writing postal cards to the schools, but when detectives turned up answers from business schools, addressed to him at various house numbers, he admitted the correspondence, but could not explain it.

Before a magistrate he had nothing to say, but to others he admitted that the woman with whom he was living is not his wife. He met her shortly after coming to this country from Germany two years ago, he said; they fell in love and set up housekeeping. Last summer he and she had worked at Irvington-on-the-Hudson at a boarding-house. They came to this city last month and since then the woman had supported him by working in a laundry.

The parents of Albert Wolter, when found, told in broken English of the difficulties their son had brought upon them.

"He was always crazy about women," said the mother. "From the time he was a little boy it was always dancing, pleasure, women, women with him."

May End In 'Quake.

Catania, Sicily, March 28.—While the quantity of lava from the craters of Mount Aetna continues to decrease, the internal activity of the volcano was stronger yesterday than the day before. Frank A. Perret, the vulcanologist, believes the decrease in the flow of lava is due to obstructions in the new craters which prevent it flowing freely and that later, either in a few days or perhaps in a week, the molten mass either will force a passage or a earthquake will result.

Reckless Youth Shoots Himself.

Ottawa, March 28.—Eugene Bordeleau, aged 19, living on Cumberland street, died at the Water street Hospital at six o'clock yesterday afternoon, an hour after accidentally shooting himself through the head with a 22-calibre revolver.

The fatality was of the "didn't know it was loaded" sort. Bordeleau, who was playing with some children, exhibited the revolver to them, and said, "Now, I'll show you how to shoot," pointed the weapon to his head and pulled the trigger.

The young man's parents, with whom he lived, were in Montreal on a visit.

RESCUED FROM BURNING HOUSE

Toronto, March 28.—Mr. and Mrs. John R. McDonald, with their fifteen-months-old baby girl, had a narrow escape from suffocation in their bedroom, by the smoke of a fire which broke out in their house at 140 Springhurst avenue early yesterday morning. Being awakened by the smell of smoke at about two o'clock, Mr. McDonald opened the door of the bedroom and found the hall ablaze. He was driven back into the room by the smoke and heat and closed the door. Mrs. McDonald ran to the window with the baby, saw Police Constable Moffatt, and called to him to catch the child, offering to throw her to him. The constable, however, restrained her, and forced in the front door. He was, however, unable to enter on account of the flames.

In the meantime a still alarm had been sent in, and the firemen arrived in a few minutes. They placed a ladder against the window, and rescued the family. Mr. McDonald was so much overcome by the smoke that he became unconscious. He was taken in the police ambulance to St. Michael's Hospital, while the mother and baby were taken to the house of a neighbor. All are now making good progress toward recovery.

The flames were brought under control by the firemen, after damage to the extent of about $2,000 had been done. All the loss is covered by insurance. Defective electric wiring in the wall between the dining-room and sitting-room is believed to have started the fire.

250 WERE KILLED

Special to the Review.

Mate-Szalka, Hungary, March 28.—Two hundred and fifty persons were killed and many others injured in the village of Oskoerite last night, when fire broke out in a hotel which had been fitted up as a ball room, and was crowded with several hundred guests when the fire started. The roof of the building, a wooden structure, fell in, burying the panic-stricken crowd. Hundreds were present in the inn when the fire broke out, and owing to the panic that seized the merry makers, few were enabled to escape.

COCK FIGHTERS WERE RAIDED IN TORONTO

Toronto, March 28.—A clever piece of detective work by Policeman Glover brought a brand new and unregistered sporting club, which has a marked liking for cock-fights, into the police lime light early Sunday morning. Charles E. Vernon, 169 Gladstone avenue, the club proprietor; Daniel Falvey and William Boscow, 2,739 East Gerrard street, also came out of the darkness with the club, as did eight fine roosters in good fighting form, three more which are thought to be lying, three that are already dead from effects of the Sunday morning fight, and a fine collection of beer kegs and whisky bottles. The three men were later granted bail in $800 each, but their feather friends still grace the Cowan avenue police station, with the thirst quenching utilities.

The house chosen for the club was a mighty isolated place, and showed without a doubt that Vernon had his weather eye open in good order. It was situated on Stonehouse crescent, in a handsome semi-completed three storey brick and stone residence. To further cover up the existence of the escapades of his fellow sports, Vernon kept workmen employed on his house daily as a blind.

Captured U. S. Nets.

Windsor, March 28.—Victor Chauvin, game warden, made an important seizure of nets and fish in Lake Erie. Chauvin and several deputies went to a point eight miles east of Southeast Shoal buoy in Lake Erie, about 12 miles from the Canadian shore, and seized 100 nets belonging to American fishermen and nearly half a ton of fish. The nets are valued at $500.

A Minister For 51 Years.

Niagara Falls, Ont., March 28.—Very Rev. Stewart Houston, M.A., D.C.L., rector of Christ Church here, and dean of the Diocese of Niagara, celebrated his 51st Easter as minister of the Church of England yesterday, and the 31st year of his ministry here. He is 76 years old, and was born in Carleton Place. He was ordained in 1859 by Bishop Strachan, and for seven years was traveling missionary in North Wellington and South Grey, Waterdom and Burlington Heights were his next parishes, and on Oct. 1, 1878, he was appointed rector of Christ Church.

Set Fire to Herself.

Quebec, March 28.—Saturating her clothing with coal oil and then applying a lighted match, Mrs. B. Giroux, a young married woman at Montmorency, chose a horrible method of committing suicide yesterday. Her body was burned black and almost to a crisp before her husband's arrival. She was about 27 years of age, and the mother of four children. She had been ill for some time and her mind had become unbalanced.

TAFT SCORES GREAT TRIUMPH IN TARIFF NEGOTIATIONS

Canadian Government Has Promised to Make Concessions, But Details of Agreement Will not be Published Until Wednesday.

Washington, D.C., March 28.—Hon. W. S. Fielding and Hon. George P. Graham left last night for Ottawa, stopping over a day in New York.

On Wednesday an announcement of the result of the tariff conference will be made simultaneously in Congress and in Parliament, and till then whatever may be said of the success of the mission of the Canadian ambassadors is mere conjecture.

It was briefly announced by Secretary of State Knox, however, that the threatened tariff war had been averted.

It is understood that the tariff negotiations on Saturday began when Mr. Pepper, one of the United States delegates to Ottawa, called on the Canadian Ministers at their hotel. This circumstance is overlooked by the local Sunday papers, which tell only of the conference at the executive mansion, when President Taft, Secretary Knox, Mr. Pepper, and the Canadians arrived at the point of agreement.

That Mr. Pepper brought to Messrs. Fielding and Graham the U.S. proposals which formed the basis of the agreement, and that these were practically accepted before the White House confab, seems likely.

Combined with Mr. Graham's cheerful optimism, when seen following his talk with the President, newspapermen feel sure that Canada's ambassadors are not going home humiliated. But Wednesday will tell.

The social side of the visit of the Canadian Ministers has been prominent, too. On their way down, they received a message asking them to dine with the President. Secretary Knox, and Tariff Delegate Pepper, Mrs. Graham, Mrs. Fielding, the Misses Fielding were also guests of the White House.

On Saturday the Ministers were invited to dine with Sir Ernest Shackleton, the Antarctic explorer, at the home of Ambassador Bryce.

On Sunday Mr. and Mrs. Graham had lunch with relatives, and last evening the Canadian visitors dined with Mr. Pepper, leaving for home at midnight.

Reporters yesterday saw both Ministers in their apartments, at the Shoreham. They discussed their leave-taking plans, and accounted for their social movements in Washington, but with no word as to what concessions may have been granted to the United States.

In Mr. Graham's features was an indication, however, of satisfaction over the outcome. With a laugh he observed: "I suppose our people have made up their minds that we came down here to give everything away."

There is a belief here that concessions as to agricultural implements figure largely in the peace pact.

There is one more chance for trouble in this country, and that is the possibility that the House may refuse to ratify a treaty. There is little doubt, however, that the Republicans of the House would hail with joy any solution of the problem.

East Elgin Liberals' Convention.

St. Thomas, Ont., March 28.—East Elgin Liberals met in convention on Saturday and nominated Dr. F. H. Miller, at present in Chicago, but who will return to Aylmer to reside, as candidate for the Commons.

W. W. Rutherford, who opposed D. Marshall, M.P., was renominated, but withdrew. C. W. Wonnacott was again chosen as candidate for the Legislature.

Both nominations were unanimous by a large attendance of delegates.

Kingston's Tax Rate.

Kingston, March 28.—The tax rate this year will be 20 1-2 mills, and finance committee has completed the budget, taking $9,000 from the waterworks surplus for the general fund. Total expenditure provided for is $199,536.94. A grant of $2,500 is made by the city to the Mowat Memorial Hospital. City's bonded debt is $1,240,590.29. This includes $482,825 for light and water plants. Both these departments pay their own way.

Bold Incendiaries.

Kingston, March 28.—During Saturday night, some person broke into the home of Percy B. Chown, Frontenac street, and set fire to the building. Coal oil was spread on the floor of the dining-room, and when Mr. and Mrs. Chown came home they found the place in flames. The fire was extinguished after heavy damage was done.

Potatoes Ten Cents a Bushel.

Traverse City, Mich., March 28.—Potatoes dropped to ten cents a bushel on the local market Saturday, the lowest point in five years. It is estimated that growers have 120,000 bushels in hand, with 50,000 bushels in storage. The storage is five cents a bushel.

Lynn In Line.

Lynn, Mass., March 28.—Following the crusade against long hatpins in Chicago, Councilman Ed. J. Moran, jr., will introduce an order in council on Tuesday, providing a $10 fine for any woman who wears a hatpin protruding more than one inch from her hat.

Says Wife Shot Him.

Winnipeg, March 28.—Samuel Bovitch, a farmer of Whitemouth, Man., died Friday, from a gunshot wound.

He made a statement before his death that his wife 19 years old, to whom he was married only three weeks ago, had committed the crime.

THE NEWS AS TOLD IN DESPATCHES

Local Option to End Strike.

Philadelphia, Pa., March 28.—Declaring that the passage of a local option law would hasten the settlement of the trouble between the Rapid Transit Co. and its employes, the Central Labor Union yesterday adopted resolutions calling upon the members of the trades unions of this city to agitate and vote for local option at every opportunity.

Tots See Mother Fatally Burned.

Hagerstown, Md., March 28.—Two of her little children danced about in delight while Mrs. Howard Myers, 26 years old, burned to death in the yard of her home at Smoketown. The mother's dress caught fire from rubbish she had lighted and in a moment she was ablaze from head to foot.

Alderman's Son a Burglar.

Ottawa, March 28.—The mystery of three recent burglaries in Ottawa was cleared up yesterday by the arrest of Severin Desjardins, son of an alderman.

Sir John Carling Feeling Good.

London, March 28.—There is a proud great-grandfather in the city in the person of the Hon. Sir John Carling. Word was received that a daughter was born to Mr. and Mrs. Charles King of Walkerville, early Good Friday morning. Mrs. King before her marriage was Miss Neone Carling, daughter of T. H. Carling, and granddaughter of Sir John.

The birth of little Miss King finds four generations of the Carling family well and enjoying excellent health. Sir John took a trip to Ottawa two weeks ago, but has returned home.

Kingston Women Held Up.

Kingston, March 28.—Two men driving in a rig held up two women late Saturday night. Miss Turnbull, West King street, was held up on Beverly street, but as she had no money was allowed to go.

Mrs. Blakely, Princess street, was held up near Frontenac street. The men took her purse, but became frightened, and gave it back to her.

She can identify them, and the police are endeavoring to locate them. They are believed to be men who stole a rig from the yard at the Albion Hotel.

Objects to Kisses.

Toronto, March 28.—John Ballantyne was in the Police Court Saturday charged by his wife with non-support. She complained that he was constantly demanding kisses of her, and abused her when she failed to comply. The magistrate gave them until Monday to settle their troubles, making pointed remarks about a whipping for the benefit of the husband.

'Twas Pullman Porter's Own Auto.

New York, March 28.—How much the Pullman porter receives in tips was dimly to be surmised in the West Side Police Court Saturday when Eugene Debnam, a negro, of No. 523 Mott avenue, The Bronx, came up before Magistrate Corrigan for speeding an automobile.

The magistrate wanted to know whose automobile it was.

"It's mah own car," replied Debnam. He told the astonished judge that he was a Pullman porter on the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, and "ran" between New York and Boston.

Woman Sues for $20,000.

Trenton, N.J., March 28.—Mrs. Henry Page of this city has brought suit for $20,000 damages against Professors Howard McClenahan and Edward P. Adams of Princeton University, alleging that they burned her husband so severely with X-rays that he died. Mr. Page suffered from hip disease.

Chicago Stays Wet.

Chicago, March 28—Chicago has lost its chance to vote on the saloon question at the election on April 5, according to a decision reached by the election commissioners.

The "wets" had filed a complaint asserting that out of the 74,000 names on the "dry" petition, 26,123 were those of non-voters. The commissioners sustained this charge, and the prohibition forces last night declared too little time intervened between now and election to permit of court action to have the question submitted to the voters.

This decision nullifies the efforts of hundreds of prohibition workers, including many women, who for weeks stood in the downtown streets, on elevated train platforms and in public buildings seeking signatures to the petition.

NASTY SHOW WAS RAIDED

Chicago, Ill., March 28.—Surrounded by detectives and trapped in a hall where it was charged they were giving an improper performance, 200 men and women Saturday night attempted to evade arrest by climbing down fire escapes and over the roofs of houses. The arrests took place in a west side hall within two blocks of a police station.

Plainclothes men had paid admission to the hall. At a signal while the performance was on all the doors were shut and locked, and announcement was made that everybody was under arrest.

A panic followed. Some of the women screamed and crawled under the stage. Scores of men climbed out of windows and were retreated over distant roofs. Many reached the street, three storeys below, by way of fire escapes. Finally the windows were shut and all the prisoners were forced to stand in line.

Seven women and 172 men were arrested.

LATE TICKS FROM WIRES

It was 86 above in Chicago yesterday.

Thirty buildings at Welch, La., were burned yesterday; loss $200,000.

Saturday 3,500 emigrants sailed from Glasgow, most of them for Canada.

Joseph Clark, the Ontario agent in London, is a passenger homeward bound on the Empress of Britain.

Manila has heard a report that eight men were killed by an exploding cannon on the U.S. cruiser Charleston.

Thomas Maresco, one of the assistants of Lieut. Petheino, the New York detective assassinated in Italy, was fatally shot at Staten Island, N.Y., Saturday.

George Arthur Liney, who was arrested at his home in London a fortnight ago, after threatening to kill his wife with an axe, has been committed to the hospital for the insane at Hamilton.

Seven more men will be added to the Port Arthur fire department. Chief Strachan has recommended the following increase wage scale: First year, $65 per month; second year, $70; third year, $75.

William Howard, a painter, residing at 229 Hamilton road, London, is in the hospital there, suffering with a fracture of the right arm, right leg, a bruised shoulder and hip and cuts about the face, as a result of falling 55 feet from a scaffold while painting.

Miss Eliza Hartnett, Ottawa, died Saturday from injuries sustained in a fire at her home. Miss Hartnett had gone to bed, and, according to her brother, attempted to move an old lamp at her bedside, when she was suddenly stricken with apoplexy and dropped the lamp.

FRENCH TREATY BAD BUNGLE

How Canada's Tariff Concession to France Brought About the Tangle With the United States

Ottawa, March 28.—At the moment of writing the tariff negotiations between Canada and the United States are hanging in the wind, with governmental apologists hinting at a surrender. The most important development, however, has been the action of France, which has conceded to the United States her whole minimum or "conventional" rate of duties.

Our whole present disagreement with the United States springs from the French-Canadian treaty. Our preferential treatment of the Mother Country has been expressly recognized by the United States as a domestic matter, over which they can feel no grievance. But the French treaty does give to France a distinct preference over the United States. Moreover, Mr. Fielding hoped that Canada would get better treatment on certain lines in France than the United States; for instance, he declared that Canadian harvesters would enjoy a preference of $8.00 a machine in France over American harvesters. However, France gave us only a part of her "conventional" or minimum tariff.

This bargain brought the present tariff row upon our heads, and gave the United States an excuse to club us into lowering our tariff on American goods. Then France gave the United States all she had given us, and more. Thus the net situation is that the Americans give nothing, get better treatment from France than we do, and have a lever on us which they are twisting for all they are worth. Mr. Fielding has been ignominiously outwitted.

To Uplift Canadian Horses.

Ottawa, March 28.—To the great satisfaction of the Canadian Horse Breeders' Association, the Dominion Government has paved the way for restoration to its former glory of the French-Canadian horse.

Dr. J. G. Rutherford, live stock commissioner of the Department of Agriculture, has agreed that registered stallions of thoroughbreds, Morgans, standard breeds will be accepted as Canadian stallions and registered in the French-Canadian National Stud Book, provided they conform to the requirements of a specially appointed commission.

BRITISH POLITICS

Another Election Now Regarded as Certain Soon After Parliament Reassembles.

London, March 28.—Lord Rosebery's speech on the necessity of the reform of the House of Lords is many days' old, but many weeks and months, perhaps even years, will elapse before the controversy which provoked it, is settled. Everything depends on the fate of the proposals of the Government for dealing with the veto of the House of Lords and that is on the knees of the gods. Lord Rosebery has been well described as Britain's "public orator, and it has been rather unkindly, yet not untruthfully, said of him that he intervenes only on great occasions and when he can appear in the limelight with artistically dramatic re-entries on the political stage, and his latest will probably not be his last. I have been present at several of his lordship's re-appearances, but the most dramatic and sensational without doubt was made at Chesterfield at a time when the dismal lessons of the South African war were being brought sadly home to the minds of the English people. From the miners of Derbyshire came a call to Lord Rosebery to give the nation a lead, and he accepted the invitation.

No event in modern English politics since Gladstone's Midlothian campaign of 1878-79 caused such a stir as that memorable meeting in the little town among the peaks. It would, indeed, be hard to find a parallel to it. Walpole was called back to office after the bursting of the South Sea bubble, but he had not definitely cut himself off by repeated asseverations, as Lord Rosebery had done, that he had retired from public life altogether. Rockingham, after doing his best to stave off the impending struggle with the American colonies in 1765, had seen all his efforts nullified by Lord North, and was summoned back after the surrender of Yorkton to clear up the mess which George III. and his Ministers had made. Canning twice over had withdrawn from public life—once after the disasters at Walcheren, and once when he declined to be a party to the persecution of George IV.'s ill-fated Queen. Yet he, too, was summoned back, and, the last time it was to call into existence a new world to redress the balance of the old. Palmerston was recalled to rectify the blunders of a coalition Government which had the largest majority and the poorest record of any Government save one in the nineteenth century. It was to rectify the blunders of this Tory Government that Lord Rosebery was "called back" by the party whose leader he has been, and it was then that he uttered the famous formula—one of many he has coined—"clean the slate."

The Ministers make no pretence that Parliament will last long after it reassembles on March 29. "A general election cannot be far off," said Secretary of War Haldane Saturday night. On what measures the Government will go out of office remains a moot point. Possibly it will be the rejection by the House of Lords of the veto resolutions, in regard to which The Spectator puts a neat question to the Government.

Future procedure, as laid down by the resolutions, provides that the Lords shall be consulted thrice in a period of two years before enactment is made over their heads. "If this delay is thought to be advisable in the case of future acts, even in minor measures, why is it not necessary in the present tremendous revolution? asks The Spectator. But it seems certain that the Government is unable to exist for two years and present its proposal to alter the constitution in three successive sessions.

Meanwhile the Liberal party is having fresh troubles with its Labor allies, Sir Samuel Evans, on his elevation to the bench, left a Liberal vacancy in mid-Glamorganshire, where his majority was over 9,000. There has been a pretty fight between the Liberals and Laborites as to who shall have the seat. All efforts to effect an arrangement failed, and now both parties have nominated candidates.

CRAZY FATHER HOLDS AXE OVER CHILD

Hartford, Conn., March 28.—Holding up a crucifix and calmly regarding his maniac father with unterrified eyes, a boy not quite four years old, partly dressed, stood near his three brothers on the banks of the Connecticut River Saturday afternoon. The latter, two, five and seven years old, wide-eyed, wondering, saw their father lift an axe far above his head. Just as he was about to brain his child policemen dashed upon him and after a fierce struggle, bound him.

Valonte Chongle, a Pole, had been heard to tell his children to prepare for death. This was soon after he was dispossessed by his landlord. Being turned out of his home had made him mad. No significance was attached to his remark until a neighbor saw him shoulder an axe and start for the river, followed by his four boys.

The police were informed in all haste, and they traced him to an isolated section of the river bank. They were just in time.

WHEN MR. BORDEN IS PREMIER

Compare the clean, honest and economical administration of affairs by the present Conservative Government of Ontario with the corruption, laxity and waste that prevailed under the Liberal administration that preceded it.

A similiar transformation may be expected when the Conservatives replace the Liberals at Ottawa. Mr. Robert L. Borden, the Conservative leader, is acknowledged by even his political opponents to be thoroughly clean and honest.

When Mr. Borden is Premier there will be no such scandalous over-payments to contractors as are being revealed in connection with the over-classification charges on the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway.

When Mr. Borden is Premier there will be no league between the Government and the contractors to fleece the people.

When Mr. Borden is Premier there will be no attempt to keep the public in ignorance of what is being done by the Government.

When Mr. Borden is Premier double prices will not be paid to political favorites for almost everything the Government buys.

When Mr. Borden is Premier the cost of administration per head of population will be greatly reduced.

HOW TO LOWER WATER RATES

In all discussions regarding the sale of surplus power at the waterworks dam, it should be noted that what is talked of is not the power already provided for, but power that can be produced by the construction of additional works. The water commissioners have already made provision for sufficient power to run the water works for many years to come. There will be pumping capacity for 10,500,000 gallons of water daily. At present the ordinary requirement is about 2,500,000 gallons daily in the summer, and less in the winter, when there are no lawns to water. In case of fire an extra quantity would be required.

The commissioners estimate that the pumping capacity will be sufficient for all purposes for a city of 40,000 people.

Now, it is evident that as the pumping capacity is much more than sufficient for the present population, and the cost has to be paid out of the water rates, any additions to the population will reduce the water rates.

Consequently, if additional power is developed at the dam and sold in such a way as to increase the manufacturing importance of the city, and add largely to the population, the water rates can be reduced for the newcomers will help to pay the cost of the waterworks.

LOW PRICES FOR CANADIAN FARMERS

The election of Eugene Foss, the Democratic candidate in one of the Republican strongholds of Massachusetts, has caused a great deal of comment in both Canadian and American newspapers. Mr. Foss was formerly a Republican, but got out of sympathy with his party on the tariff question. He is a very wealthy man, and for some years has devoted his time and his money to the advocacy of reciprocity with Canada. He attributed his victory very largely to a general desire for cheap food and cheap raw materials from Canada. The defeated Republican candidate seems to be of the same opinion. The Toronto Globe quotes him as saying: "If the result will serve to convince the Republican leaders at Washington that something must speedily be accomplished in the way of lowering the cost of living, I shall feel that my defeat has not been without value."

Both Mr. Foss and his opponent think that under a system of reciprocity Canadian farmers will gladly supply the people of the United States with food at very much lower prices than the American farmers sell at. Canadian farmers would have to pay transportation charges to the United States, and then undersell American farmers there. This may look like a good proposition to Mr. Eugene Foss and his constituents in Massachusetts, who are largely factory employees, but it is not very attractive for Canadian farmers. What advantage will reciprocity be to them?

Statistics published since the agitation against high prices began show that there is very little difference between the prices paid for farm products in Toronto and the leading American cities. Some kinds of farm products are higher in Toronto. Thus Canadian farmers are expected to sell in the distant American cities at lower prices than they can get in Toronto.

No, thank you, Mr. Foss. That proposition of yours looks very alluring to the Toronto Globe and it evidently catches votes in Massachusetts, but it would not elect you in Peterborough county or any other part of Canada.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Increased population will mean lower water rates, as the cost of the waterworks will be divided among many instead of among a few.

"Who will see the first robin?" asks the Ottawa Journal of March 24. The season is late in Ottawa. The Journal man might have seen one long ago for the price of a railway ticket to Peterborough.

If there is one thing more than another that the Canadian Parliament is supposed to have absolute control of, it is the tariff. Yet Mr. Fielding will not tell Parliament what tariff concessions Mr. Taft expects Canada to grant, in order to escape the maximum tariff. In a cut-and-dried agreement to be made without consulting the Canadian Parliament!

A little while ago we were assured that the Laurier Government would not yield one jot to the United States. We were told that the United States Congress had got Mr. Taft into a tangle, and that Canada would not help him out of it. But now it looks as if Mr. Fielding will give way, after all.

Canadians talk a good deal about loyalty to the British Empire, but they have been content to allow British taxpayers to pay the whole cost of Imperial naval defence. Lately public sentiment seemed to be aroused and there was some reason to hope that the Canadian people would insist upon the Government doing something that would really strengthen the Empire, but the excitement over the question seems to have died away.

Montreal civic authorities have decided that the fact that nearly every member of the foreign colony carries a weapon of some kind, is a danger to the community. A raid was made upon the Italian quarters the other day, a miscellaneous assortment of knives and other dangerous weapons being collected. Canada is a peaceful, law-abiding country and a good way of keeping it so is to let every foreigner who enters the country know that the carrying of weapons is a punishable offence and that the law will be strictly enforced. However, if the weapons collected in Montreal are sold and get into the hands of second-hand dealers they will soon be in possession of their original owners again. To enforce the law against carrying weapons it will be necessary to restrict the sale of weapons.

Chest Inflammation

Suffered From a Heavy Cold, Pleuritic Pains in Side — Constant Coughing.

"Anyone that goes through all that I suffered last winter will appreciate the value of a remedy that cures like Nerviline cured me." These are the opening words of the solemn declaration of E. P. Von Hayden, the well-known violinist of Middleton. "My work kept me out late at night, and playing in cold drafty places brought on a severe cold that settled on my chest. I had a harsh racking cough and severe pains darted through my sides and settled in my shoulders. I used different liniments, but none broke up my cold till I used Nerviline. I rubbed it on my neck, chest and shoulders, morning and night, and all the pain disappeared. Realizing that such a heavy cold had run down my system, I took Ferrozone at meals, and was completely built up and strengthened. Since using Nerviline I have no more colds or pleurisy, and enjoy perfect health."

Nerviline CURES CHEST COLDS

It's because Nerviline contains the purest and most healing essences and medicinal principles, because it has the power of sinking through the pores to the kernel of the pain—these are the reasons why it breaks up colds, cures lumbago, stiffness, neuralgia, sciatica, and rheumatism. Refuse any substitute your dealer may suggest—insist on Nerviline only. Large bottles, 50c, trial size 25c. Sold everywhere, or The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ont.

BASIL KING,

Author of "Let Not Man Put Asunder," "The Steps of Honor," Etc.

Copyright, 1908, by Harper & Brothers.

For a brief instant Paula hesitated in surprise. She had expected a servant of some sort and held her card case in her hand. Before her she saw a little gray-haired lady, with snapping black eyes and a face that might have betokened any of the complex shades from cynical kindliness to jesting severity. Everything about her was austerely simple, from the parting of her gray hair to the falling of her black gown, covered up just now with a huge white apron like a pinafore. Paula had a minute of feeling herself very tall and very much overdressed.

"Is Mr. Winship at home?" she managed to ask at last.

"If you'll be good enough to come in I'll see."

The voice was hard, the utterance crisp, and the smile that accompanied the words had the bright flash of winter sunlight.

Marah Winship led the way in with a quick awkward motion that bespoke a nature too busy to think of grace. Paula followed and after a step or two stood still with another slight shock of surprise.

It was not like going into any other house she had ever visited. There was no hallway or anteroom or vestibule on crossing the threshold she passed at once into the full domestic life of the family. She had entered an immense, barnlike apartment, which was evidently studio and living room in one. The floor was bare except for a few of the commoner sorts of oriental rugs. The walls were hung with an ordinary dark red stuff which formed a background for the unframed sketches—portraits, landscapes and architectural drawings—pinned up here and there against it. At the far end of the room there was an easel on which the work was covered up with a loosely thrown cloth. A couple of lay figures stood in grotesque attitudes in a corner, while near them was an open grand piano of old fashioned make. It was only vaguely that Paula took these details in, for after the first glance her eyes were drawn to a tall figure seated quite near her in a high backed chair.

Paula knew at once that this was the woman who had done battle with her father until he had been obliged "to club her down." The immediate impression was that of a person sitting very still and erect, her feet planted firmly on a red cushion and a large volume, evidently a Bible, in raised letters open on her knees. Over the white hair a lace scarf of beautiful design came to a point on the forehead and fell in lappets to the shoulders. The severity of the black gown was relieved by a fichu of soft white stuff, fastened on the breast with a large old fashioned brooch set with emeralds. Clearly the face had been handsome once and even haughty, but now all that had been passionate or self willed in it was subdued by time and sorrow into sweetness. There was no color there at all—only the waxlike transparency of the aged. As Paula suffered the sightless eyes were raised toward her, as if with one more useless, piteous attempt to pierce the darkness.

Marah Winship had allowed Paula to stand still a moment and gaze. It was one of her rare bits of pleasure—that instant when a stranger beheld her mother for the first time and betrayed her astonished admiration. It was the old maid's only coquetry. It was all that remained of the vivacity and pride that had been hers in the days before the family disasters. When ruin overtook them she gave up once and forever all impossible hopes for herself. She had not been without a young woman's love of happy trifles nor without a pleasant, vague anticipation of a home, with children of her own, nor without the half shy, half rapturous thought that if a certain one of the young men with whom she danced during the winter season in Boston ever asked her it would not be in vain. But when the great financial battle was fought to a finish she renounced everything of that kind. She saw her life's work before her. It was first to make a man of Roger, the boy who was so much younger than herself as to seem less like a brother than a son. Then it was to shield from the cruelest winds of adversity the mother who had done her best and failed.

She crushed out her own longings with that cynical suppression of regret which some women can command and set herself to her task. She learned the meaning of sacrifice, privation, penury, failure and at last of faint, almost pitiable, success. But she achieved her purpose—she made a man of Roger—and during the long, hard years Mrs. Winship never knew how long and hard they were. Marah protected her at least from that. As the mother grew older and blinder it became easier to deceive her—easier to make her believe there was plenty of food because she had enough, easier to persuade her that life was happy because she knew only smiles. Out of the wreck of their pretty things Marah had snatched a few old jewels, a few odds and ends of lace—not much, but enough to keep alive in her mother's consciousness the conviction that she was "still a lady." Marah was satisfied with that as far as a hungry, unfed heart is ever satisfied. The day's work was always lighter if some one pointed to her mother and whispered, "Isn't she a picture?"

Paula did not say that, but she was conscious of an overwhelming sentiment of pity. It was not only pity; it was a feeling of responsibility. Everything about her was to her eyes so poverty stricken, while she was spending the money which would have provided for this helplessness the setting to which it was entitled. During the second or two that had passed since she entered the room her mind had worked faster than it had ever worked before. Wild schemes rose confusedly in her heart, and it was almost exultantly that she felt it to be her power to change all this, making amends for a cruel past by a sudden raining down of happiness. Notwithstanding her sense of the wrong that had been done she could not help feeling as she stood in the vast bare room a little like a fairy godmother.

But when Marah Winship spoke Paula was recalled of necessity to the circumstances of the moment.

"I think my brother is in. I will go and see. May I ask what name I ought to give him?"

"Miss Trafford—Miss Paula Trafford."

She spoke slowly and distinctly. She meant also to speak reassuringly. She hoped the very sound of the name would be the signal that after the long years the victors were coming to give back the spoils and hold out the olive branch of peace. She was surprised to see Marah start and grow pale, while her black eyes snapped with a sparkle like that of electricity.

"I—I don't think my brother can be in," she returned coldly.

"I want very much to see him. Won't you make sure?"

Paula spoke in the gentle tone of command that came from her sense of power. Marah Winship had suffered too many defeats at the hands of wealth to dare to disobey.

"Mother," she said, turning abruptly to the figure in the throneliike chair, "this is Miss Trafford—Miss Paula Trafford. She has come to see Roger. I'm going to look for him."

She sped away, leaving Paula alone and face to face with Mrs. Winship.

There was a moment's silence, during which the blind woman's fingers trembled violently over the raised letters of the open page. The lips quivered as if unable to frame a word.

"Trafford!" she murmured at last. "Did my daughter say Trafford?"

"I'm Paul Trafford's daughter," Paula answered firmly. She would have no misunderstanding or mistake.

"I know the name," Mrs. Winship said, making an effort toward self control, "but I haven't heard it for many years."

"I'm afraid it may be painful to you," Paula felt impelled to say, "but"—

"It used to be—it used to be, but, oh, my dear, when the race is as nearly run as mine is and the kingdom of heaven is opening before your eyes nothing is very painful any more."

Paula was not expecting this. She moved uneasily. The sound caught Mrs. Winship's ear.

"Come nearer to me, dear," she quavered, holding out a delicate white hand on which a diamond or two still twinkled. "Come here. Sit down. Let me see you."

There was a tall, straight backed chair beside her. Paula drew it nearer to the blind woman and sat down.

"I was almost afraid to come," she began to murmur, but Mrs. Winship interrupted her.

"You needn't be. No one can live to my age without learning that in this world we can't afford to cherish enmities—not against any one, not against any one. Give me your hand, my dear," she added, groping in the darkness.

"I was almost afraid to come," she began.

Paula stretched out both her hands. She could not speak for fear of crying.

"You're young, I see," Mrs. Winship went on, letting her touch wander lightly over Paula's gloves. "I begin to be able to distinguish the young from the old by little signs. But of course you're young. I remember that Mr Trafford had a little girl at the time I used to—to see him."

"I knew nothing till a short time ago"—

"About all our troubles," Mrs. Winship finished as Paula hesitated. "Of course you didn't, dear. How should you? As I look back I can see that we knew very little ourselves. We were like children wrestling in the darkness on the edge of a precipice. And it wasn't worth while—it wasn't worth while."

She sighed, and Paula felt again the desire to cry.

"My husband is gone," Mrs. Winship quavered on. "He sees life—this life—already from another point of view. And I begin to see it too. That's because I'm blind perhaps. The spiritual vision becomes wonderfully clear when the earthly eyes are closed. There are times when I feel as if I could look up with Stephen and see the heavens opened and the Son of Man standing on the right hand of God. How should I keep hard feelings when I'm so blest? I used to have them, but not now—not now. I'm glad to see you, dear."

"If there's anything I can do for you"— Paula tried to say, conscious of her own awkwardness.

"No, dear, no," Mrs. Winship broke in gently, pressing the girl's hand. "The Lord is good to us, and we've never wanted for anything. My son and daughter have had great success in their callings, so that as soon as one door was closed another was opened to us. Looking back, I can't but see that all has been for the best, even the things against which at the time I rebelled the most. It's the Lord's favor to have shown me that in this life, when so many of his servants have to wait to learn it till they enter on the life to come. Now that I see it I feel ready to sing my nunc dimittis domine in pace. But you wanted to see my son, I think you said, dear?" she added in another tone.

"I hoped to have him paint my portrait," Paula tried to explain. "I've heard of his work."

"Yes; he's made a great reputation," the mother said complacently.

"So I understand, and I hoped"—

"He's coming now, dear. I hear his step. It's always firmer than anybody else's."

A door at the distant end of the long room was thrown open, and as Paula looked up she saw the young man she had met at Monte Carlo stride in.

CHAPTER VII.

As Winship came down the long room Paula was able to give a definite outline to the vague portrait of him she had carried away from Monte Carlo. She saw him now, tall, spare, muscular and, as it were, loosely hung together. He swung himself along with an easy gait in which there was something both careless and sure. "Careless and sure" seemed stamped on his whole person, from his roughly brushed brown hair to the old russet colored suit which, as Paula said to herself, he wore "so distinctly like a gentleman." In his ill dressed aristocratic gauntness he seemed to her to recall the race of noble, legendary outlaws, just as a hollow flanked, gleaming eyed dog will remind one of a wolf.

"This is Miss Trafford, Roger," Mrs. Winship said in a voice shaking with emotion. "She has come to ask you to paint her portrait."

"Miss Trafford and I have met already," Winship returned as he took the hand Paula stretched to him without rising from her chair.

"For an instant," Paula assented. "I'm glad you haven't forgotten. You see," she added, turning to Marah, who had followed her brother into the room—"you see, we're all friends of Lady Alice Holroyd's."

Marah Winship made no response. Her face had settled into an expression of stony repose. As Winship drew up a small chair beside his mother and opposite their visitor Marah remained standing at a distance, just where Paula could not see her without turning round.

"Lady Alice is such an enthusiast over your work, Mr. Winship"— Paula hurried on.

WERE GUESTS OF TEACHER

Mr. A. H. Campbell Gave Enjoyable Banquet to His Bible Class

The young men's Bible class of the Gilmour Memorial church, Smith, were the guests of their teacher, Mr. A. H. Campbell, at a delightful banquet on Thursday evening last. An interesting toast list was run off, Mr. W. G. Scott, the president of the class, making a most acceptable toastmaster. Twenty-three were in attendance at the function, which was thoroughly enjoyable and successful.

The principal theme discussed was the relation of the young men to the church, and the subject was instructively treated by Rev. J. R. Bonner, the pastor, and Mr. Fred Scott. Each member of the class spoke briefly in appreciation of the painstaking instruction of their teacher, and expressed their gratitude for the splendid spread provided. A very hearty vote of thanks was passed to Mr. and Mrs. Campbell at the conclusion of the banquet.

Games were played after the banquet, and the evening was brought to a close by the singing of "Auld Lang Syne."

FOUR WHIPS WERE TAKEN

From as Many Buggies in Sheds of Local Church Last Evening

Even the sacred precincts of a house of worship have no restraining effect on some malefactors. Last night four thefts of a most irritating character occurred, when the whips were stolen from the holders of four buggies in the sheds of a local church.

This pernicious habit of "whip lifting" in church sheds is an old practice, and it looks as though in the interest of the rural members of the congregations, a guardian of the whip may come to be as much of a necessity as any other official in connection with the churches. A suggestion is offered that it would not be untimely if a few of the whips were broken on the annoying offenders.

VICTORIA HARBOR TO PETERBORO

Canadian Pacific Will Not Construct Line Until Government Dredges Harbor

The Orillia Packet says: A gentleman who is in a position to know something of the plans of the railways, tells the Packet that the true reason for the delay in construction of the O. P. R. line from Victoria Harbor to Peterborough lies in the uncertainty as to when the dredging at the harbor will be completed. There is a lot of dredging to be done yet, and it is a question if it can be completed before the fall of 1911. If the C.P.R. can get some assurance that the government will have the harbor ready by the fall of next year, they will go on with the construction of their line during the coming summer. But there is no object to be gained in having it completed before the harbor is sufficiently dredged to let the big grain vessels get up to the elevators.

BOTH PRISONERS WERE SENTENCED TO CENTRAL

Ferro Bruno, the Italian Who Wounded Robt. McIlwain, Given a Six Months' Term, and Larry Kelly, Who Stole Jewelry, Given a One Year Term.

For the offence which he committed—that of wounding Robert McIlwain with a knife—Ferro Bruno was on Saturday afternoon sentenced by His Honor Judge Huycke to the Central Prison for a term of six months, and Larry Kelly, who had previously pleaded guilty to having stolen a quantity of jewelry from a rooming room of the Oriental Hotel, was sentenced to the central Prison for a term of one year.

Both prisoners had been committed for trial after the preliminary hearing in each charge before Magistrate Deuble at the police court.

The hearing of the evidence in the charge against Bruno, the Italian, was first proceeded with.

P. C. Newhall, first called, told of himself and P.C. Adams going to Dr. Leach's office, where the injured man was receiving medical attention. The Butcher home was next visited. Blood stains were visible on the sidewalk in front of the house. Next the residence of an Italian living to the west and behind the Butcher home, was visited, and outside a thin coating of ice on a pool of water showed that someone had recently crossed. Later the Italian was arrested at the home of Frank Marino, on George street. A pair of wet boots were found under the bed, having been used by the Italian.

The above was the only new evidence submitted.

P. C. Adams was called, and he corroborated the statements of P. C. Newhall.

Robt. McIlwain and the young man who was with him on the night of the trouble outside the Butcher home, were called, and their evidence was the same as given in the police court.

The defence called only one witness, Roland Butcher.

County Crown Attorney Wood produced the order of a previous conviction against the prisoner by Magistrate Deuble for having attempted to wound an Italian in 1906, and for which he was sentenced to two months' imprisonment.

Being questioned by his Honor, through his interpreter, Mr. T. Minicolo, the prisoner stated that he had made his home in Peterborough during the past four and a half years. He hired out as a laborer during the summer. His savings were sent to his mother at home, as he was unmarried.

His Honor, after finding the prisoner guilty, imposed the sentence of the court.

In sentencing Larry Kelly to the Central Prison for one year, His Honor characterized the theft by the prisoner as a deliberately planned scheme on his part.

When asked if he had anything to say, Kelly stated that he had never been in trouble before. He claimed to have been working steadily for the past seven years. He denied having been arrested in Lindsay or having been ordered away from that town. Neither had he, he said, been in trouble in Peterborough, but it appears that Kelly is the same man who was arrested on Hunter street late one night last summer in the company of a young girl, and with her appeared in the police court.

County Crown Attorney Wood conducted the prosecution, and Mr. G. N. Gordon acted for both prisoners.

SPLENDID SINGING BY THE CITY CHOIRS ON EASTER

Easter Sunday dawned bright and fair and the Easter services attracted unusually large congregations to the city churches. The sermons given in each place of worship were of a character especially appropriate to the day and brought glad tidings of the joyous significance of the Eastertide. The attendance at the morning services was as a rule the largest, but both morning and evening brought forth such numbers of worshippers that the capacity of most of the churches of the city were taxed on both occasions.

The music for the day was of an especially appropriate and impressive character. At all the churches it was given by large and thoroughly rehearsed choirs, the excellent choral singing, generally, coming as a very pleasant revelation to most of the congregations and giving evidence of the well directed and painstaking efforts of the choirs and their leaders. The solo singing was also of a high quality.

The special anthems and solos for the day as well as the music were announced in Saturday's local papers, when it was seen that the programme of sacred music was of a very attractive and timely nature.

BIG JAM OF LOGS AT THE NEW DAM

Is Causing Considerable Trouble and Much Hard Work to Employees of Peterborough Lumber Co.

Employees of the Peterborough Lumber Company are experiencing considerable trouble in breaking up the big jam of logs which has gathered at the new waterworks dam, and much hard work will be necessary before the logs are sent on their way down the river to the company's mill. Reports of a bad state of affairs brought a large number of Sunday strollers to the scene of the jam yesterday, and the operations of the men were watched with much interest. While the logs are tightly wedged in a mass, no serious injury to the dam is anticipated.

FAIR GROUNDS' FENCE BURNED

At 9.52 this morning the fire brigade received a call to the exhibition grounds by box 11. The fence had been set on fire from a grass blaze, which had its origin in children playing with matches. About twenty-five feet of the fence was burned, chemicals being used to put out the blaze.

DEATH CAME SUDDENLY

To Mr. James Stenson One of The Pioneer Business Men of Peterborough

Death came this morning with great suddenness to one of the oldest residents and one of the best known and most highly respected residents of Peterborough. Mr. James T. Stenson, the well known boot and shoe merchant, fell dead, apparently without a moment's warning, at 7 o'clock this morning, at his residence, 319 Reid street. Habitually an early riser, he rose at 7 o'clock, and in his morning round of the premises, went to the woodshed, where death overtook him. His wife rose half an hour later and, not seeing him about the house, made a search, and was awfully shocked to find her husband dead. Medical assistance was at once summoned, but the case was beyond human aid. While always able to be about and give attention to his business duties, Mr. Stenson, though not invalid, was not a man of robust health, and for the past few days has not been as well as usual; but he was down to business on Saturday and on Sunday attended St. Paul's church as usual.

James Thompson Stenson was born in Ireland 74 years ago, come next May. He came to Canada with his father, the late Robert Stenson, at the age of five years, and has been a resident of Peterborough nearly three score and ten years, being possibly one of the oldest, if not the oldest, continuous residents of the city, and the oldest business man, having been in the boot and shoe business for the past 50 years, joining and succeeding to the business established and conducted for many years by his father. He was one of the best known and best respected business men in the district. His straightforward and reliable methods won him a large and prosperous trade. He enjoyed the high respect of his fellow merchants and he was always ready to encourage and assist every enterprise calculated to promote the commercial interests and general welfare of the city. As a private citizen he led a life beyond reproach, and was respected as universally as he was known. He was a member of the municipal council for a term or two, but otherwise he did not take much active part in public affairs. He was in politics a Liberal. He was for many years a member of St. Paul's church, a regular attendant and worshipped there the last time on Sunday. Mr. Stenson is survived by his wife, one daughter, Miss Stenson, living at home, and seven sons. The sons are Robert, of Kaslo, B.C.; William, of Toronto; Harry, of Nome, Alaska; Charles, of Lynn, Mass.; George, of New York, and Fred and Herbert, of Peterborough, associated with their late father in the business. Mr. Stenson was a member of Peterborough Lodge A.F. and A.M.

OBITUARY

MRS. J. COYLE BROWN.

Obituary notice of the late Mrs. J. Coyle Brown, who died at 162 Smith street, Peterborough, on Monday, March 14th, 1910:

Mrs. Brown's maiden name was Mary Eleanor Embury. She was born in the village of Stirling, Ontario. She was descended from a brother of Philip Embury, who introduced Methodism into North America. Her grandfather was a native of Ireland, who lived for some time in the United States, but came to Canada as a United Empire Loyalist. Her father, the late Thomas Embury, was a native of Canada. In 1871 she was married to Dr. William Patterson, living first at Frankford and afterwards at Norwood for a period of ten years, at the end of which the doctor died, leaving her with the care of two children. In 1886 she was married to J. Coyle Brown, who had six children. To bring up eight children, the oldest of whom was only fifteen years was a great undertaking.

Outside of her family she took much interest in the Young Men's Christian Association, and for a number of years was a painstaking and efficient treasurer of the Women's Auxiliary of that institution. Towards the end of her life she felt keenly her inability to attend St. Paul's Presbyterian church, of which she was a member for twenty-two years.

Her feeble health began in August, 1909, but she struggled on most heroically with the fell disease of which she died. The death of her daughter, Annie, Mrs. G. H. Williamson, in August last, was a great blow. She felt it keenly.

She left to mourn her loss her husband, J. Coyle Brown, seven children, and a grandchild. The children are: C. Roscoe Brown, Gladstone, Manitoba; Blanche Brown, Edmonton, Alberta; Mrs. Duncan, Cobourg, Ontario; Thos. Reginald Brown, Saskatoon, Saskatchewan; William J. Patterson, M.D., Provost, Alberta; Mrs. Craig, Gowganda, Ont., and Harold S. Brown, Toronto, Ont. The grandchild is Andrew Embury Williamson, Fort William, Ont. Her sisters are Mrs. Clark, Frankford, Ont.; Mrs. Empey, Sioux City, Iowa; Mrs. Mouldey, Topeka, Kansas, and Mrs. Goelitz, Las Vegas, New Mexico. She had no brothers.

MRS. MARY PARKS.

After a lengthy illness, the death occurred this morning, about nine o'clock, of Mrs. Mary Parks, relict of the late Nelson T. Parks, at the advanced age of 82 years. The deceased lady was born in the township of Seymour, and had lived in this city for the past thirty years. She is survived by two sons and two daughters, who are Mr. C. Parks, of Detroit; Mrs. Robt. Tamblin, and Mr. R. S. Parks, of this city, and Mrs. E. Webb, of Orillia.

The funeral will take place from the residence of Mr. Robt. Tamblin, 58 Victoria avenue, to-morrow morning at 10.30 o'clock to Little Lake cemetery. Service at the house will be conducted by Rev. R. Pew at ten o'clock.

ELIZABETH SMITH.

Brantford Expositor:—The death occurred in this city, yesterday, of Elizabeth Smith, the wife of W. W. Smith, Peterborough, after a lingering illness. The sad event occurred at the residence of the daughter, Mrs. Joseph Swift, 292 Park avenue. The deceased was formerly a well-known resident of this city. Besides a husband she leaves one daughter, Mrs. Swift, and one son, W. H. Smith, to mourn her loss. The funeral takes place to-morrow to Greenwood cemetery.

The doctor seeing that the wound was a serious one, had him removed to Nicholl's hospital and immediately operated upon him. The young man bled freely internally. He has, it is stated, a fighting chance for life.

CARS BACKED IN TOO FAST AND COLLISION OCCURRED

An accident occurred on the G.T.R. siding at the Carbon Works at about 11 o'clock on Saturday morning, when four cars of grain for the Quaker Oats Company backed into the siding at too rapid a rate, damaging three other cars standing on the siding and putting two more off the track.

An auxiliary was brought from Lindsay and the track was cleaned up in about an hour.

THREE CASES TO BE TRIED AT THE SPRING ASSIZES

Two Criminal Cases and One Civil Action—Robert Henderson to be Tried for Murder of Margaret McPherson—Court Opens at One O'clock To-morrow.

Three cases, two criminal and one civil, will come up before Mr. Justice Riddell, who will preside at the spring assizes of the High Court, which open to-morrow afternoon at one o'clock. Robert Henderson, the alleged murderer of Margaret McPherson, will stand trial on the charge of murder and the other criminal case is a charge of seduction on promise of marriage.

$2,000 DAMAGES.

In the civil action to be heard, Fred Cook, of Front Bridge, is the plaintiff and David and Bert Davidson, of Seymour township, are the defendants. The plaintiff claims $2,000 for the loss of his left hand. He states that while engaged in working at the mill owned and operated by the defendants near Oak Lake, his hand was drawn into a saw by reason of the action of Bert Davidson, who, without warning, reversed the carriage. The hand was injured so seriously that he will be unable to use it again.

The defendants claim that the accident was due to the plaintiffs negligence, and that he was working at the time not as an employee, but as a volunteer.

Arthur Colville, of Campbellford, for the plaintiff, and Denniston, Peck & Kerr for defendants.

HEARING ADJOURNED.

In the action, Foley vs West, the defendants have been granted an adjournment. The application made to the Court is on the grounds that one of their witnesses was taken sick and operated on for appendicitis. Dr. Holcroft, who performed the operation, gave his certificate, showing that it would be impossible for this witness to attend, until the week following the assizes. The court directed that the plaintiff might have the case tried at Cobourg or Lindsay, or if desired, at an early date at Peterborough.

On this action, the plaintiff, Edward Foley, is suing Wm. West, sr., and Wm. West, jr., portable mill owners, of Havelock, for $3,000 damages for injuries received while in their employ. The plaintiff claims that he was struck by a piece of flying machinery and sustained a broken leg. Hall, Medd and Davidson, solicitors for the plaintiff and G. A. Payne, of Campbellford, for the defendants.

CHIEF DYING

His Condition is Pronounced Hopeless by Physician in Attendance

The condition of Chief Roszel was stated to the Review to-day by Dr. Scott, the attending physician, as being hopeless. Dr. Eastwood was called into consultation by Dr. Scott this morning, but nothing can be done other than to give temporary relief to the patient.

Easter at St John's

Holy communion was celebrated at St. John's church yesterday at 7 and 8 a.m., and at 12.15 noon. Morning prayer was held at 11 a.m., and festival service at 7 p.m. All the services were largely attended. The rector, Rev. Canon Davidson, was very acceptably assisted by Ven. Archdeacon Warren, formerly of Lakefield and now of Toronto. The archdeacon is always a welcome visitor to St. John's and his eloquent and thoughtful sermons yesterday morning and evening were much appreciated. As customary on the great festival of Easter the musical portion of the services were of a specially joyous nature, and the choir's efforts under Mr. R. J. DeVey's capable direction were highly creditable. In the afternoon a special children's service was held in the church when the children contributed $26 towards the mission fund.

PEOPLE WERE SWINDLED

By Man Who Said He Was Possessor of a Fortune-Case May be Tried Here

Belleville, March 26.—The Coe Hill correspondent of the Intelligencer says:—Prof. Gallant, the Owenbrook school teacher, who was mourned by anxious friends who lent him money without security, other than his alleged fortune in Paris, was brought to Coe Hill from Western Ontario, where he was engaged in teaching.

On St. Patrick's Day Dr. Hardinge held an investigation to see whether there was sufficient evidence to place the prisoner on his defence in the next county.

Dr. Hardinge told the prisoner that he would dismiss the case if he (the prisoner) would give official proof that he had property in Paris.

He showed a letter he received from his mother in Paris. As this could not be accepted as official proof and as the witnesses proved that truth regarding the alleged fortune had been twisted, the magistrate could not do otherwise but send him to Peterborough County for the magistrate to deal with him. The prisoner there will be defended by a lawyer.

Mrs. Terrell, Mrs. Hoard's widowed sister, was so worried about the money she lent the prisoner that the Hoards took the steps they did to find the lost teacher, after he failed to keep his promise about returning to his school.

Alexis Bristol, C. P. R. telegraph operator, proved that there were no telegrams from New York or Europe as the prisoner spoke about receiving. He only received two telegrams from parties residing in Ontario.

Magistrate Edmison, when seen today by a Review reporter, stated that he had received no word of the accused being brought here to be dealt with.

CHOIR OF ST. PETER'S SANG BRILLIANTLY

The special music rendered by the choir of St. Peter's yesterday was most appropriate to the day and was sung in splendid spirit by the choir.

At Pontifical High Mass the choir gave Mattfield's Mass in a very brilliant manner and also acquitted themselves to decided advantage in the hymn "Haec Dies." "Regina Coeli" was splendidly sung at the offertory. Solos were very effectively sung morning and evening by Misses L. Hallihan, G. Clancy, J. Delaire, N. Simons and E. and A. Primeau and Messrs. F. Hickey, F. Pope and A. Deegan.

At Musical Vespers "O Salutaris," was sung with fine sympathy and much expression by Miss L. Hallihan. The full choir sang "Tantum Ergo" in a most acceptable way.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE T.A.S. ATHLETIC CLUB

All those interested in athletics in connection with St. Peter's T.A.S. are requested to attend the annual meeting of the T.A.S. Athletic Club at the T.A.S. rooms on Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock. The election of officers will take place and other business in connection with the yearly assembly will be transacted.

The prospective athletic situation for this year will be talked over and the advisability of taking up baseball and lacrosse will be discussed.

As has been previously noted in the daily papers, Joe Lally, the famous maker of lacrosse sticks, has offered a thousand sticks to juvenile lacrosse clubs, and there is no reason why a junior club in connection with the T. A.S. should not be eligible for the offer. An attendance of school boys interested in the game is requested at the meeting, in order that this phase of the situation may be talked over.

BUSY SESSION AT ANNUAL. MIDLAND LEAGUE MEETING AT Y.M.C.A. GOOD FRIDAY

The annual meeting of the Midland Football League at the Y.M.C.A. parlors on Good Friday was characterized by the enthusiasm of those present and by the rapid manner in which the business was transacted.

The delegates and the clubs they represented were: Dr. J. C. Devitt and C. Adams, Bowmanville; T. P. Lancaster, V. Hitchens, Havelock; Dr. E. Sisson, W. Hannah, Bethany; N. Moore, A. Quinlan, C. Meddler, D. Charlton, Lakefield; Dr. J. A. Morgan, J. E. Sullivan, P. Fitzgerald, Peterborough; C. M. Downes, W. Jones, Brinton Carpet Co., city.

An important feature of this meeting was the consideration in detail of a new constitution and cup competition rules, which were approved and adopted for the league. These will be inserted in the annual of the Ontario Association Football League, together with the list of cup winners and the list of officers and a cut of the 1909 champions.

The secretary's report showed that last season was a very successful one and the schedule had been rigidly adhered to and the championship was decided on July 1st. The league had added its membership and the class of football was of a high standard. Norwood had annexed the junior championship, while Havelock had captured the senior honors and had also contested for the Ontario intermediate championship, which unfortunately is not yet decided.

The treasurer's report was quite satisfactory, as there is a tidy cash balance on which to commence this season.

The following officers were elected: Hon. Pres.—J. R. Stratton, M.P. Hon. Vice-Pres.—Dr. George Burnham.
Pres.—T. P. Lancaster, Havelock.
Vice-Pres.—Dr. Devitt, Bowmanville
2nd Vice-President — F. D. Fitzgerald, Peterborough.
Secretary-Treasurer—E. E. Brumwell, Peterborough.
Executive Committee—The President, 1st and 2nd Vice-Presidents, Sec.-Treas., W. Price, Bethany; C. Meddler, Lakefield, and C. M. Downes, Brinton's.

It was decided to again affiliate with the Ontario League and to try for the provincial honors. As representatives for the O.A.F.L. annual meeting in Toronto on Easter Monday, Dr. Devitt, of Bowmanville, and E. E. Brumwell were selected and instructed to present the Midland League's side of the case as to what team holds the Intermediate championship of Ontario for 1909.

Any club wishing to become affiliated with the Midland League is requested to communicate with the secretary-treasurer at its earliest convenience and any information will be gladly given by him. In this connection, section three, of the new constitution, is presented as follows:—

The anoual entrance fee for each team entering the senior competition shall be $3.00, and for each team entering the junior competition, $2.00. Any club desiring to enter either competition must forward the entrance fee to the secretary-reasaurer of the League in order to have the name of the team representing that club appear in the list of scheduled games.

The next meeting of the League will be held in the Y.M.C.A. in Peterborough on Saturday, April 9th, at one o'clock to draw up the schedule of games for the season. It is important that all the clubs should be represented to get into proper districts and have suitable dates arranged.

LONGBOAT QUIT AT TENTH MILE

By administering a decisive beating to Tom Longboat in a 12-mile race at Riverdale rink Saturday night, Paul Acoose demonstrated that the most sensational long-distance man of the past decade has not only ceased to be a power in the world of sport, but is no longer even a figure among the Marathoners. The Six Nation Indian went to the dressing-room at the end of the tenth mile, but Acoose was then nearly half a mile in front of him, and everybody recognized that the man who was the idol of Torontonians only two short years ago had been completely outclassed by the Westerner. Longboat made a few old-time bursts of speed which used to take the heart out of those who ran against him, but they were too spasmodic to ever worry his opponent, and the powers of endurance which once seemed unlimited, were absolutely lacking. It must have been rather disappointing for Acoose, who came all the way from the west in order to meet the other redskin, to find that he was up against a has-been. The Grenfell Indian did not make very fast time, but he had no reason to show his class. He sized up Longboat early in the race, and never altered his pace after the fourth mile, being content to add to his lead during each of his opponent's periodical collapses.—Mail and Empire.

Joseph Darling's house, at Spring Valley, Ont., was destroyed by fire.

BASKET BALL

To-night the fast Toronto Central intermediate team will meet the Y.M.C.A. intermediates in the gymnasium at eight o'clock.

The local team is in first-class condition for the game and promise to give good account of themselves.

A large attendance is expected.

TRIED IT ON DAD.

Botanist of the Family Treats the Old Man on a Discovery.

A prominent Yale professor is exceptionally fond of mushrooms. His son, who is an enthusiastic botanist, one day brought some home and told his mother to have them prepared as a special treat for his father. When the professor came in to dinner he was delighted to find his favorite dish at his place.

"These are not all for me, are they?" he asked, not wishing to be selfish.

"Yes, father; I gathered them specially for you," answered the dutiful son.

Next morning his son was awaiting him with rather an anxious expression on his face. "Good morning, dad," he ventured. "Did you sleep all right last night?"

"Fine," was the encouraging reply.

"Not sick at all, or didn't have any pain?"

"Why, of course not!" answered the professor.

"Hoorah!" said the botanist. "I have discovered another species that is not poisonous!"—Success Magazine.

KURIOS FROM KORRESPONDENTS

Q. Will you please tell me how to tell the gander from the goose?

A. The gander is larger, his head is coarser, and he has a squeaking voice, while the female makes hoarse sounds. Turn a dog into the yard and the gander will hiss and chase him.

Q. The ground in my poultry yard is rank. How can I get it sweet again?

A. Cover the top with air slaked lime, let it lie a day, then spade under and sow a quick growing crop.

Q. I notice whole wheat in the droppings of my fowls. Is this usual, or is it a disease, and how can I stop it?

A. You are not furnishing your fowls grit or what you do give them is not sharp enough to grind grain.

Q. I have a beautiful Buff Leghorn cock bird and would like to know how to straighten his lopped comb. Would you breed from a bird in such condition?

A. If your fowl's comb is creased and has finger marks, is too thin or has something else about its shape that makes it turn, nothing can better it; otherwise the fowl may be out of condition. Examine him for lice or any ailment you may not have observed, place him in seclusion and feed him well, especially of meat. Hardly think we'd breed him in such condition, especially for show.

Q. If I give my fowls good care and rations in January and February can't I get as good fertility as in April?

A. No. Fowls have their natural reproductive season, and those months aren't on their calendar. April and May are best.

THE FARMER'S DUCKS.

A farmer friend had bred from the same ducks for fifteen years and each generation got smaller and smaller.

To him ducks were just ducks if they had a rubber neck and a quack, until a year ago he "happened in" and we showed him our Pekins.

Sixty big fellows paraded before him; he looked them over quietly, then said: "Big ducks, them. Pretty old, ain't?"

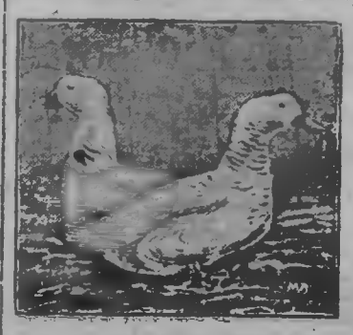
"No, just ten weeks."

"Ten weeks? Thunder!"

It was hard to convince him.

He took up a young drake, balanced him in hand and said, "Why, this duck weighs nigh to seven pounds and is heftier than two of my old ones."

When we told him six to eight was the usual weight of ten week ducks,



THE FARMER'S DUCKS.

that old quacks often reach twelve and are great layers, he said, "That settles it, I'll git rid of mine and raise Pekins."

We took a picture of two of his quacks to show the usual farm duck which many farmers raise when they might breed the big profit payers.

The two just weighed seven pounds, and this isn't much for adult ducks.

Let the farmers quit raising little fishy flavored puddle ducks and take up the big Aylesbury or Pekin.

The Pekin is the better, as it grows quicker, is the popular yellow, has a finer grain and flavor and picks easier.

DON'TS.

Don't throw feed into filth. Try to feed hens on new ground, in clean litter or troughs. It's an old story that filth breeds disease.

Don't make hoppers so large that ground feed will stand long in them and mold.

Don't forget that most of our practical knowledge comes from experience and that attention to details makes up the sum total of success.

Don't use a round roost. It causes corns, and round off the roost edges so fowls may sleep in comfort.

Don't expect eggs to stay at winter prices all the year around. They drop if feed prices don't.

Don't expect your hens to pay profit unless you keep them busy. Lazy hen, like lazy men, no good.

Don't forget that poultry is an honorable paying business for the man that will work, but no place at all for the loafer and shirk.

Don't forget that geese are vegetarians; therefore feed them plenty of beets, cabbage, waste apples and potatoes in winter.

Mutinous marines are said to have thrown overboard the gun sights of H.M.S. Irresistible.

THE AMERICAN HEN.

A Wall Street Valuation of the Great Egg Producer.

It is claimed that the average production of a hen is 200 eggs per annum, but is safe to assume that the actual is much below this figure. Adopting the very conservative figure of 120 eggs per hen per annum, we find on the above basis of production there are 150,000,000 laying hens in the United States responsible for the production of 18,000,000,000 eggs.

At the farm price of 20 cents per dozen the total income derived from each hen annually would amount to $2. Allowing 40 cents for maintenance and 1½ cents for depreciation, which latter would wipe out the market value of the hen in four years, irrespective of salvage when the period of production is over, the net profit per hen per annum amounts to $1.20.

This profit, according to Wall street standards, capitalized on a 5 per cent income basis, would place a nominal value of $30 on each hen. For the 150,000,000 hens this would amount to the enormous total of $1,500,000,000.

That the American hen can return a yield of 5 per cent per annum on a capitalization of $4,500,000,000 appears nothing short of remarkable, but such is the case. The entire outstanding capital obligations of the railroads of the United States in 1907 were less than four times this amount, or $16,082,146,083, while the total paid out in interest and dividends represented but 4.05 per cent of this amount.—Wall Street Journal.

Dickens and Pickwick in Court.

What is perhaps the most interesting piece of furniture in the legal centre of London belongs to Mr. Henry Fielding Dickens, K.C., whose sixty-first birthday was celebrated a short time ago. It is the desk on which his father, Charles Dickens, wrote nearly all his novels. Where the famous novelist penned "Martin Chuzzlewit," with its delightful description of the Temple fountain; his son, the distinguished K.C., has prepared many a statement of claim and defence. Mr. Dickens was once briefed because he was his father's son. A witness in the case bore the name of Pickwick, and Mr. Dickens was chosen to examine him. He happened to be engaged in another court when the case was reached, but Sir Frank Lockwood, who was particularly anxious not to be deprived of the pleasure of seeing Mr. Dickens examine Mr. Pickwick, addressed a note to Mr Justice Hawkins, asking him to adjourn the case, and the learned judge, entering into the spirit of the request, at once granted it. When Mr. Dickens was able to attend and called Mr. Pickwick the whole court was delighted with the coincidence. "I do not know, gentlemen," observed Mr. Dickens to the jury, "whether Mr. Pickwick will appear in his gaiters." The eagerly-looked-for witness proved to be one of the thinnest men that ever stepped into the witness-box.

A Match For a Matchmaker.

The story is told by Allen Aynesworth, the British dramatist, of how a well-known peer who was the prey of match-making mammas for a long time and who was imprudent enough to show more than ordinary attention escaped responsibility. One day the mother of the young lady in question, thinking she had a trump to play, met his lordship and observed:

"People are talking a good deal about your attentions to my daughter and are asking when your engagement is to be announced. What can I say?"

"I authorize you to say, madam," replied his lordship, "that I asked you for your daughter's hand and that you refused it!"—O'Connor's Weekly.

While flowers of tulle and other transparent stuffs will be in favor this spring and summer for hat trimmings, those fashioned of braid will be considered especially dressy.

A Young Woman—Scarcely Thirty—Seemed to Be Dying on Her Feet.

Dr. Hamilton's Pills Cured

"I think it should be the duty of the schools to teach children how to keep well," writes Miss Nannie E. Naydon, a well-known and highly esteemed resident of Bristol. "Ignorance of the laws of health and the use of improper remedies destroyed my vigor, and led me to the verge of invalidism. I was as a girl ruddy and strong. Nothing seemed to affect me until I was about thirty. Then gas began to form in the stomach. I suffered with bloating and a general failure in strength set in. If I went upstairs my breath hurt. My system was very irregular, and until I grew pretty bad I didn't pay much heed to my condition. Then I got blue, worried all the time, wakened in the night, and couldn't get to sleep again. None of the medicine I took helped me. One day I was reading of a very interesting case like mine cured by Dr. Hamilton's Pills. I took the same treatment. It was just right—didn't physic me to death, but took hold of the weak, sick parts of my system, and set things right. It seems as if Dr. Hamilton's Pills have made me young again, and all my color, spirits, vigor, and health of former days have returned to stay."

Every girl and woman should use Dr. Hamilton's Pills regularly. They help a woman in many ways. Beware of the dealer who asks you to take an inferior pill on which his profit is larger than on Dr. Hamilton's. Sold in yellow boxes, 25c per box, all dealers, or The Catarrhozone, Co., Kingston, Ont.

Daniel Webster's Carriage.

Captain Albert Hartge of Shadyside, Anne Arundel county, owns a carriage which was once the property of Daniel Webster and which is still a highly serviceable vehicle. Captain Hartge has been using it for several years and says it is far more roomy and comfortable than those built nowadays. The carriage is a phaeton, built on high springs, being as good and strong now as the day it was built. It is constructed of white hickory, and the great lamps, dashboard, rails, handles, etc., are of solid copper, heavily silver plated. The old carriage was the favorite vehicle of Webster at his home near Marshfield, Mass., and was sold to a Marylander several years after his death at a sale in Boston. The purchaser brought it to Baltimore and stored it away in a stable, intending to ship it to his country place in Howard county. Before doing so he died, and the old carriage was again put up under the hammer. Captain A. S. Byus, an oyster packer of this city, happened to attend the sale and bought the old vehicle for a very small sum and later gave it to his friend Captain Hartge, who prizes it highly.—Baltimore Sun.

Insurance Companies Lose About $125,000.00 by the Wreck at Spanish River

Double Liability for About Twenty-five Persons

A loss of somewhere in the neighbourhood of $125,000 is what the Accident Insurance Companies estimate the wreck at Spanish River bridge means to them.

They figure that about 25 of those who met death carried Accident Insurance, and the average insurance, according to the tables, is $5,000. In case of death in a railway disaster there is a double liability, making the figure $6,000, or $5,000 to be more conservative.

Their loss may total more than that, for the commercial travellers, a number of whom were killed, usually carry very heavy insurance. In addition, some of the companies make the policies payable on the death of the wife while travelling, though the policy is taken out in the husband's name. In such cases they pay the husband the same amount as they would have paid the wife were the husband killed.

The above goes to show the necessity of carrying Accident Insurance, as similar disasters happen almost daily.

We issue the BEST Accident and Sickness policy offered to the public.

ONIONS FOR SOUVENIRS.

Some Huge Specimens That Weighed Two Pounds Each.

The onions shown in the illustration are the Bermuda or Giant Gibraltar species. They were grown on Long Island, New York, and weigh two pounds each. Twenty-eight of them make a bushel. They were raised from Gibraltar seed and matured in the open. The onions are so large that one of them fills a quart basket and more, and they ran 1,035 bushels to the acre.

The cost of raising an acre of onions is something which is not an easy thing to get at and varies with every onion raiser on every acre every year and will continue to do so as long as nature sees fit to absolutely decline to run on any set schedule which shall not vary one iota from year to year, and nature has so declined since the creation of the world. Further, even the same year upon contiguous acres the cost per acre to John Smith will vary greatly from that of the cost to friend Bill Jones or Jack Robinson. This will continue until such time as human beings become exactly similar in stature, in weight, in temperament and in sensitory attributes.

While these were by no means the largest onions grown from seed, they were what would be called firsts by sorters. The largest onions were sent to Long Island's county and outside fairs at which the experimental stations have made exhibits, and many of our largest Giants have been begged by visitors who wished them for souvenirs.

It is needless to explain that this superb Gibraltar onion will not be sold at any of the prices doled out by the controllers of food supply, because such superb examples of vegetable growth are eagerly sought for and very high prices paid by noted epicurean establishments, private and public, in great cities.

Onions from these seeds grew 50 to the measured bushel; selected onions, 28 to the measured bushel; unsorted onions weighed 52 pounds to bushel; selected onions weighed 55 pounds to bushel; height or thickness, average 4 inches; flattest, 3½ inches; most globular, 4½ inches; circumference, average 16 2-3 inches; greatest, 19½ inches; least, 15¾ inches; weight, average 2 pounds; heaviest, 2¾ pounds; lightest, 1¾ pounds.

"PILLS LIKE A FYLE"

So Harsh and Drastic are Many Pills as to Seriously Injure Health.

In a letter written from his home in Valencia, Mr. Marsh Selwyn does service to thousands by drawing attention to the injuries inflicted upon delicate people by drastic purgative pills.

"For a long time I suffered from constipation. This condition compelled the use of pills. Like many another, I made the unwise choice of using pills that were like lightning in their activity. I began to be filled with intestinal disturbances, constant rumblings, gas in the bowels and diarrhoea. I grew pale and emaciated. Then the doctor told me drastic irritating pills had caused catarrh of the bowels, an almost incurable disease. Explaining my situation to a friend, he advised a trial of Dr. Hamilton's Pills. I speedily experienced the healing and curative effect they exert on the stomach, liver and bowels. The intestines, freed from irritating drugs, rapidly regained natural tone, the bowels acted as if nature and not Dr. Hamilton's Pills were at work. I know it will be of value to thousands to know that a pill as mild and curative as Dr. Hamilton's is available to the ailing."

For bowel disorders, sick headache, constipation, liver and stomach derangement, there is no pill so invariably sure to cure as Dr. Hamilton's Pills. Refuse a substitute. Sold in 25c boxes, all dealers, or The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ont.

SEED CORN EVANGELIST.

How Professor Holden Taught Iowa Farmers to Plant Good Grain.

One day in 1904 an Iowa college professor worked out a problem in arithmetic which caused him to catch some of the zeal which the evangelists had caught in their training schools, and he resolved on a campaign in behalf of yellow and white, variegated and red, dent and flint, Indian corn, almost as unusual as that adopted by the traveling evangelists who had been calling men to account for the waste of life by wickedness.

Professor Holden's little problem showed the farms were increasing in value because of the new and complex development and new armies of pioneers pushing into the west. At the rate they were producing the best would soon stop "paying dividends" on a valuation of $100 per acre.

Thirty years ago, with land worth $8 to $20 per acre, a farmer did not need to be as careful as he must be today, when the same land is worth from $75 to $150 per acre. "There must be better farming in the middle west, and one way to do it is to go out among the farmers and show them that the 'book farmers' in the agricultural colleges are practical farmers—that they are capable of making more than a living on forty acres and would not starve to death on 100 acres, as the farmers say sometimes," said Holden after having thought the matter over.

Other men were giving thought to the same problem of rising land values and lagging production. As early as 1890 Henry Wallace, editor of Wallace's Farmer, in company with State Dairy Commissioner Boardman, had made a trial of the special train as an educational agent in a campaign for the stimulation of dairy interest through the Des Moines valley. Now the former and Superintendent Given of the Rock Island road turned their attention to the corn question. They called Professor Holden into their councils. It was at once manifest that he was the ideal executive—the man to do the work.

Accordingly Professor Holden planned a campaign in Iowa with the assistance of railroad managers. He would take a special train and go out on the railroads where he could meet the farmers and show them that science only simplifies.

Professor Holden's plan was not to go into plant breeding, but to confine himself largely to insisting that the farmers plant selected seed corn, seed which had been tested in a simple device which could be made in any farm workshop. Given this hint in lectures and by the use of charts, the Iowa educator believed the direct result would be instantaneous, while the fairyland of science would be opened a little way to the farmers, and they would realize after the first year or two of experimenting that by harnessing up and using the forces of heredity in corn and other farm crops production could be greatly increased and consequently the profits of farming become greater, the land "pay dividends" on a higher valuation, because brains had been mixed with muscle in meeting the seasons.

The work Professor Holden proposed to do was evangelistic, and when his trains were started down the long lines of shimmering steel they became known as "seed corn gospel trains."

Some of the figures Professor Holden presented were startling, but they sent large audiences of farmers away from the meetings pledged never again to select seed corn from a crib with a scoop shovel.

Remedy For Potato Blight.

An effectual remedy for potato blight has been found in bordeaux mixture, which consists of four pounds of copper sulphate and five or six pounds of fresh lime in sixty gallons of water. This remedy is also effectual against what is known as the early blight, which attacks the early varieties, while the late blight seldom appears before the first of August and does not attack the late kinds unless they are planted late in the season. This mixture can be used in connection with paris green or arsenate of lead for the potato beetle. The arsenical article is especially valuable, as it does not burn the foliage and adheres so firmly that it is not easily washed off by rain. When spraying with this in connection with the bordeaux mixture, use two pounds of the arsenate in fifty gallons, and use when the beetles first appear. This will prove very effective, though if other beetles appear later in the season it will be necessary to spray again in order to protect the growth made after the first application.

Although $9.75 was paid for hogs this morning, it is felt that the price will drop next week.

FEEDING BEES IN WINTER.

Sugar Sirup Recommended When Honey Store Is Insufficient.

No one should attempt to winter a hive of bees which is poorly supplied with honey. Such a colony needs to be either fed or brimstoned. Only good, heavy colonies should be wintered. One can tell whether a hive has sufficient stores for winter by testing the weight. If the hive lifts like a box of bricks it has enough stores, but if it lifts easily, like an empty box, then it has insufficient honey to carry the bees through a severe winter, writes Allen Latham in the Farmer.

It is not difficult to feed a colony for winter. Dissolve seven pints of granulated sugar in about four pints of hot water. Pour the gallon of sirup resulting into four quart jars and invert these in shallow saucers, preferably shallow tins like the covers of lard pails. Place them just at dusk either over the frames of the hive or about the entrance. Insert small nails under the edges of the jars to allow air to enter as the sirup is taken up. If the night is cold throw two or three sacks over the jars to hold the heat and encourage the bees to carry the sirup into the hive. Stir the bees up before throwing the sacks over the jars. This feed can be given at any time till such cold weather sets in that the bees will not take care of it. The amount suggested is enough to take bees into early April.

All hives that have enough stores can be protected for winter in the following simple manner: Select as many large bran sacks as there are hives. Open the bottom of each sack so that the two ends are alike. Have ready dry leaves, laths, small nails and hammer. Draw a sack down over a hive as you would draw a stocking over your foot. Before starting in place a small block over the entrance to keep the bees in while the work is being done. Fasten the edge of the sack along the bottom of the hive with a piece of lath secured by two nails. Let the sack come quite to the bottom at the sides and the back of the hive, but in front turn it up so the entrance will be left unobstructed. Now push leaves in between hive and sack, filling first at each corner, so that sack is free from hive on all sides. Pack in the leaves firmly all round and above the hive till the sack is nearly full. Then with some long nails or with strings gather the upper edges of the sack so that the leaves will not spring out.

As the hive now is rain will wet the leaves and make the protection worse than useless. Some waterproof material must be laid over all. A square of tar paper laid over and then covered with another sack is good. This upper sack should have its corners pinned down with wire nails.

It takes but half an hour to get a hive ready for winter in this manner, and the labor will be well paid for. Thus prepared the colonies will winter splendidly in even severe winters and will build up rapidly in the spring to furnish early swarms or supers of honey. This protection can be taken off in early May and made into a bonfire, the sacks being saved for smoker fuel—fuel of the very best sort to make clean white smoke.

AUTOS ON THE FARM.

Half the Cars In Some States Are Owned by Farmers.

Recently, at the automobile school opening exercises in New York city, J. George Frederick, managing editor of Printers' Ink, delivered a most interesting lecture on the modern use of automobiles on the farm, illustrated by many stereopticon pictures.

Mr. Frederick first traced the reasons for the greater wealth of the farmer through scientific farming and the use of good machinery and showed the natural connection between the use of machinery and the auto by farmers. He told how by authoritative estimate there were now 76,000 autos in use on farms—about one-fourth of all in use—and how one dealer in an Oregon town of 5,000 population sold forty-two in one season. He said that of the 4,516 autos registered at a recent date in Kansas half of them were owned by farmers and that out of 10,000 autos owned in Iowa one half were owned by farmers.

Taking up the question of how the farmer finds the auto profitable, Mr. Frederick told of the great help autos are to the dairy farmers in delivering milk quickly and without disturbing the value of the farm horses during the busy farming seasons. He also pointed out how the delivery of milk by auto to railway stations has greatly widened the area of farm land in which it is profitable to engage in the milk business.

The recreation side of the auto on the farm was most effectively illustrated by Mr. Frederick's pictures, some showing the women of the family out for a spin for a midday change from household routine, others showing the farmer and his sons using the auto in late autumn to go on a hunting trip and still others showing an astonishingly numerous holiday gathering of farmers in autos in small towns.

Farm Abandonment Ended.

The age of farm abandonment is practically at an end, for the farmer has solved the problem of how to make a living for himself and family and at the same time accumulate a good bank account from the products of a small tract of land. New conditions require new methods, and this applies with greater force to farming than to any other form of productive industry.

LADY HESTER STANHOPE.

Pitt's Eccentric Niece, Who Lived a Strange Life In Syria.

Among the eccentric personages of history Lady Stanhope, who was born in London in 1766, is remarkable. She was the daughter of the Earl of Stanhope and niece of the great William Pitt.

The death of her mother when she was an infant deprived her of the care a young girl should have, and even her education was sadly neglected. When she was about twenty she went to act as a sort of secretary for her uncle, who was then Prime Minister. She remained with him till his death in 1806.

In the next few years she displayed such singular qualities of bad temper, selfishness and lack of feeling that all her friends were estranged, and the English Government withdrew a pension she had been drawing. In 1810 she shook the dust of England from her feet and started for the east.

She arrived in Syria in 1812 and settled on Mount Lebanon, where she remained the rest of her life, entirely cut off from the companionship of friends or countrymen.

Surrounded by native servants, whom she ruled with capricious impulse, and with indifferent means at her disposal, she had a strange experience.

Occasionally some traveler who knew her would make a stop and call upon her. These persons told curious tales of her household. When tea was served one day the servant brought the teapot to the table holding it by the spout, as the handle was gone. The ceiling of her salon was upheld by beams of wood, and her bed was a mattress laid on planks that were placed on trestles.

Lady Stanhope was a hard mistress and demanded unheard of hours of service. At one time all the free women in her employ left in a body, and her slaves were constantly running away. A strict daily account was kept by a secretary of how every hour of the day of each servant and slave was employed, and Lady Hester kept it for study and reference.

Her time was fully occupied, divided as it was into curious detail. She remained in bed until about 2 o'clock in the afternoon and retired at about the same hour the next morning. She began her daily duties at about 6 p m.

Her first work was to assign to all in the household the routine of their labors for the next day, for no such eccentric hours were allowed servants. This accomplished, she spent the rest of her time till she retired in looking for trouble in the household, scolding and sometimes swearing, writing letters and talking for hours on any subject upon which she got started.

For a long time after she had gone to bed she kept most of the household awake and busy, her bell calling them for various services. It might be for a lemonade or a bowl of broth or a cup of camomile tea, for which the gardener was called to gather the herb, or she had forgotten some detail of an order for the next day, and whoever was to execute it had to be awakened to hear what she had to say.

She kept in good accord with the pasha, to whom she made presents and rendered services of various sorts, and often sent gifts to his harem. In this way she had a certain protection.

She died as she lived in Syria, with no friend or companion to comfort her last hours.

"Growing Down."

Everybody has noticed that in extreme old age people grow rapidly shorter, so that a person formerly of average height "grows down" into quite a diminutive man or woman. A German contemporary points out that this decrease of height begins as early as the age of thirty-five years. At thirty, we are told, the human body has reached its full height, which is retained for a few years, after which the "growing down" process begins. At first and for many years the process is so slow as to be almost imperceptible, but at the age of about sixty it begins to be noticeable, and after seventy, even though a veteran does not stoop at all, the fact that he is "growing down" becomes apparent to all.

MANY CANADIAN GIRLS IN AMERICAN BROTHELS

Rev. J. G. Shearer, D.D., Gives Sad Particulars of the Dreadful White Slave Trade.

The Moral and Social Reform Council of Canada have asked The Review to publish a series of articles on the White Slave traffic prepared by Rev. J. G. Shearer ,D.D. These articles are intended as a warning for Canadian girls who may be led astray through ignorance. The first of these articles by Rev. Dr. Shearer follows:

Everyone knows that for many years a constant stream of Canadian girls have crossed the border to earn their living as writers, nurses, teachers, stenographers, ladies' companions, seamstresses, domestic helpers, etc. Success in unusual degree has crowned their effort. Their integrity and industry and ability have been rewarded with generous remuneration. Stories of their success are widely known. This makes the work of the procurer the easier. His promises of an easy life and otherwise incredibly large wages are believed. Deceptive advertisements are answered. The innocent victims go blindly into a bondage worse than hell. Once within the door of the house of shame, escape is well-nigh impossible. Locked doors, barred windows, withheld street garments prevent escape, while drugs and brutality do their debasing, enslaving, crushing work. Even if the street could be reached, who will give refuge? To whom can a girl from the house of vice go? Who will believe her? She is an utter stranger. There are good Samaritans aplenty, but ere she can discover one such, her captors are on her trail. She is accused of stealing her employer's clothes, or brazenly branded as a daughter of shame, and cunning tempters besiege her. The chances are many to one against her escape and restoration. Will she in any case turn her steps homeward with a foul stain upon her reputation? Heartbroken, though free, many such have gone back to the evil life as the only thing open, determined now to go the pace and die, but never to let mother and friends know of their experience. Five years, on the average, ends it. Vice, drink, drugs and disease do rapidly their deadly work. Quick, cold-blooded murder were merciful by comparison!

Others are first seduced, then half willingly go, this seeming to them a less evil than facing the shame at home. Still others are wooed, won and wedded in cold blood by heartless slavers, then inveigled or forced into the segregated colonies in the great American cities.

Mr. Clifford G. Roe, of Chicago, Assistant U. S. District Attorney, after investigating in Boston, Mass., says in Woman's World; "Taking the biography of one hundred girls in disreputable houses at random, it was learned that about one-third come to Boston from Canada, mainly Nova Scotia."

CONCRETE CASES.

A scoundrel bearing a French-Canadian name at this writing in prison in Buffalo for endeavoring to force his 21-year-old Toronto bride into a house of ill-fame, intending no doubt to be her "cadet" and live at ease on her "earnings."

Two other young villians from Ottawa were recently convicted in Ogdensburg of procuring for immoral purposes two foolish girls whom they had induced to go from the Dominion Capital "for a lark" and are now doing time in the Federal Penitentiary at Atlanta, Georgia.

These are sample instances of recent occurrence. Many others might be given.

NOW BEING DEPORTED BACK TO CANADA.

The American authorities, with commendable energy are both legislating and enforcing the laws against procuring and prostitution. Their Federal Law directs that any alien woman found living the life of shame, within three years of the time of her entry shall be sent back to the country from which she came as an "undesirable."

A recent Pittsburg, Penn., despatch announced the deporting back to Canada of nearly a score of Canadian girls discovered in raids upon the segregated area of the Steel Metropolis.

Two other Canadian girls whose friends thought they were in honorable employment in New York State, were a few weeks ago returned under this law to the Ontario village where their paternal home is.

These also are but samples of many available instances. And we may expect many more in the future. What shall we do with these, our own Canadian daughters, who went out from their homes pure, strong, hopeful, and are thus sent back as "undesirables?" We must be ready to give them refuge, and in mercy, love and patience to proclaim, and by the grace of God, to save them.

A SHOW THAT HITS THE MARK

"Fluffy Ruffles" Owes Its Success to Superior Merit—Miss Gear a Magnet

"Fluffy Ruffles," the merry musical comedy doosed at the Grand Opera House for to-morrow (Tuesday) evening is entitled to consideration by local theatregoers because of its own merits. With that dashing comedienne, Florence Gear, interpreting the title role, it is easily one of the best entertainments of its kind upon the road this season. It contains all the elements of a popular musical comedy—jingling, swingy music, tuneful, catchy songs, unique, bewildering dances, pretty, shapely girls, clever, amusing comedians, and then there is Miss Gear herself. Remembering her sprightly performance of last season in "Marrying Mary," it is not difficult to believe that Miss Gear handles the role of "Fluffy Ruffles" in a way that admits of no criticism. Beautiful of face and figure, endowed with an exceptionally sweet soprano voice of a wide compass, Miss Gear adds to these natural advantages an originality as a comedienne that is simply irresistible. A well balanced cast of principals and a carefully chosen chorus support Miss Gear.

THE LUMSDEN INQUIRY

Scandalous Overpayments to Contractors Along the Line of Grand Trunk Pacific Railway

Ottawa, March 28.—The Lumsden inquiry is still proceeding. It is worth while remembering how the over-classification charges made by the former chief engineer, work out. Six cases have been given already; here are two more.

Case No. 7.—On this piece of work the Government engineers returned 12,014 yards solid rock, 9,550 yards of loose rock, and 5,867 yards earth, working out at $21,028. Mr. Lumsden says there was no solid rock at all, and about one-eighth was loose rock and seven-eighths earth. This would work out at $8,755. Thus there was an overpayment of $17,273, or 255 per cent.

Case No. 8.—Here the engineers returned 42,300 yards solid rock, 26,558 yards loose rock, and 37,154 yards of earth. This worked out at $84,771. Mr. Lumsden said that there was no solid rock and about a quarter of the whole work loose rock, with the rest earth. Or, this basis the honest price would have been $30,803. Thus the overpayment was $54,757, or 182 per cent.

JAPANESE ENGLISH.

A Sample Circular Composed by a Native Tradesman.

There comes from a correspondent in Japan this example of circulars in English that Japanese tradesmen sometimes compose:

"Dear Sir—I have the honour to write a letter for you that I have now established the meat market and its branch to deliver the meat as one of the branch of my sloughter house, as which I have many cattle, their pastures, their markets, milk houses, and a sloughter house, etc., and I will have a fresh meat with the most cheapest price from my sloughter house than other buchery and especially make you many reduction for every day purchaser for month. I beg you can soon make me your order without your servant's commission, 'as you know your servant is always making money by your meat.' I will make you the pass-book for the creditor only.

"P. S.—If you handed bad meat from your servant while you are making purchases the meat from my market every day, you will soon to let it exchange by the servant without any hesitation. Please make me your order, and if you can make me order by letter I will have the postage reduction from the count of meat with kind regards. Your truly."

THE DELUGE.

Queer Old Australian Tradition About the Flood.

The aboriginal blacks of Australia have a queer tradition about the flood. They say that at one time there was no water on the earth at all except in the body of an immense frog, where men and women could not get at it. There was a great council on the subject, and it was found out that if the frog could be made to laugh the waters would run out of his mouth and the drought be ended.

So several animals were made to lance and caper before the frog to induce him to laugh, but he did not even smile, and so the waters remained in his body. Then some one happened to think of the queer contortions into which the eel could twist itself, and it was straightway brought before the frog, and when the frog saw the wriggling he laughed so loud that the whole earth trembled, and the waters poured out of his mouth in a great flood, in which many people were drowned.

The black people were saved from drowning by the pelican. This thoughtful bird made a big canoe and went with it among all the islands that appeared here and there above the surface of the water and gathered in the black people and saved them.

Curiosities of Superstition.

When Egypt was in the height of her power, when she was most highly civilized and delighted in being called the mistress of the land and sea, her people worshiped a black bull. There was some discrimination, however, even in this form of worship. In order to be an object of mad adoration it was necessary that the bull calf be born with a circular white spot in the exact center of his forehead, and the advent of such a creature in any herd was the signal of wild demonstrations from the Mediterranean to the border of the Lybian desert. Even as late as the time of Cleopatra, star eyed goddess, glorious sorceress of the Nile, such animals were shod with gold and had their horns tipped with the same metal. Herodotus tells of a man who died with grief because he sold a cow that soon after became the mother of a black bull calf marked with the sacred white circle in his forehead.

Lead Pencil Experiments.

An English statistician was asked how many words could be written with an English lead pencil, and, being determined to answer it, he bought a lead pencil and Scott's "Ivanhoe" and proceeded to copy the latter word by word. He wrote 95,608 words and then was obliged to stop, for the pencil had become so short that he could not use it. A German statistician who heard of this experiment was dissatisfied with it because all the lead in the pencil was not used on the work, and therefore he bought a pencil and started to copy a long German novel. When the pencil was so short that he could not handle it with his fingers he attached a holder to it, and it is said that he wrote with this one pencil 400,000 words. Possibly, however, his pencil was longer or the lead in it was of a more durable quality.

When Silence Is Deadly.

Silence is commonly the slow poison used by those who mean to murder love. There is nothing violent about it. No shock is given. Hope is not abruptly strangled, but merely dreams of evil and fights with gradually stiffing shadows. When the last convulsions come they are not terrific. The frame has been weakened for dissolution. Love dies like natural decay. It seems the kindest way of doing a cruel thing.—George Meredith.

Health or Hurt, Which?

As good food is to the strong stomach, and as bracing air is to the strong lungs, so is bright sunlight to normal strong eyes. If good food hurts the stomach there is something wrong with the digestion. If the bright sunshine of Spring is painful to the eyes it is nature warning that the eyes are under strain. We are daily supplying glasses to relieve this strain, and restore normal conditions of comfort. Sunlight then helps instead of hurts the eyes.

NERVOUS PROSTRATION

Indigestion Causes it—Mi-o-na Will Cure it

If you have indigestion, you don't get all the nutriment out of your food that you should.

Your worn out stomach passes the food on without extracting enough nutritious substance to supply the blood and nerves.

And if the nerves are not supplied with nourishment, they begin to rebel. They kick up a great disturbance. They make you irritable and cranky, you worry about trifles, and you cannot sleep soundly at night, you have bad dreams, and you get up tired in the morning.

Try Mi-o-na tablets, the money back cure. Mi-o-na will cure your nervousness by driving out the cause. Mi-o-na will give you relief the first hour. It will cure acute cases in a few days, and chronic cases in a few weeks.

Belching of gas, heartburn, sour taste of food, waterbrash, foul breath and other dyspeptic symptoms vanish before the mighty power of Mi-o-na.

Try Mi-o-na. Wm. Madill, sells it and will refund your money if it doesn't cure, and only 50 cents a large box.

Death in Collisions.

Lima, Ohio, March 28.—Two men were killed, one was fatally injured and a house was burned to the ground as the result of a collision between two interurban electric trains near here yesterday. Both trains were destroyed.

The collision occurred at a place where the tracks curved around an untenanted house. Both cars were going at full speed and crashed into each other with terrific force. An exploding fuse set the wreckage into a blaze which communicated with the house and completely destroyed it.

Sterling, Kans., March 28.—Two persons were killed and three injured yesterday when an automobile collided with a carriage. The four occupants of the buggy escaped serious injury.

Kansas City, Mo., March 28.—Eight persons were injured in a rear-end collision between two crowded streets cars yesterday.

TERRIBLE DISASTER

Over 300 Perished in Fire Which Broke Out at a Hungarian Ball.

Mate-Szalka, Hungary, March 29.—More than three hundred persons were burned or trampled to death and one hundred others were seriously injured in a disaster in the village of Oskorito Sunday night.

A public ball was announced to be held at the hotel of the village where the coach house had been fitted up as a ball room.

It was a great, barn-like structure, decorated with tinder-dry June branches left from a previous entertainment, to which were added for the occasion other decorations and Chinese lanterns.

The festivity attracted pleasure-seekers from the whole surrounding country and the building was so packed just before the ball began that the single door which afforded entrance and exit was nailed up to keep out scores who clamored outside.

While the dancing was in full swing, a pine branch caught fire and fell to the floor. It blazed furiously, and almost instantly the dresses of several of the women burst into flames, which spread with astonishing rapidity.

A dreadful panic ensued, the revellers losing their heads completely. Many of them, their garments ablaze, rushed towards the barred exit, where a surging mass was jammed together. Women and men fell and were trampled under foot. Those in front vainly endeavored to tear open the door, but were crushed into helplessness by the pressure of the crowd behind, the roaring crackling flames mingling with the shrieks of the throng.

Soon the roof crashed in, the blazing wreckage falling upon the helpless victims, so that many of those who had hitherto escaped the flames were struck down by beams or buried under the debris.

When the door finally was broken open some few escaped, but most of those collapsed before they got far.

Inside the building were heaps of charred corpses, and screams and groans still were audible from the smoking piles.

A detachment of troops was immediately ordered to the scene to clear the wreckage and help bury the dead.

The official estimate, as given last night, states that 230 persons perished, but it is believed that the total death roll will prove much larger than this, as many persons have not been accounted for.

REV. A. J. VINING ACCEPTS POSITION

London, Ont., March 29.—Rev. A. J. Vining of Talbot street Baptist Church has announced to his congregation that he will accept the call from the Baptist Union of Great Britain to tour Europe and make suggestions for the founding of a great Baptist university at some central point in Europe, and he has tendered his resignation.

He will leave Canada about July 15, and go to London, Eng., and from there to the continent to familiarize himself with the situation.

After addressing the world's convention in Moscow in September and a gathering at Glasgow, he will return to Canada and spend the winter raising funds to endow the university.

It is understood that there is a great movement away from the established churches in Europe. In the hope of providing a more democratic form of church government, and to discourage agnosticism, the Baptists are planning these activities.

RABBI HONORED BY CONGREGATION

Pittsburg, Pa., March 29.—Rabbi J. Leonard Levy of Pittsburg was honored by his congregation yesterday as rabbi was perhaps never honored before. Hearing that Mr. Levy had been called to take charge of the Reformed Jewish Church in London, his church here voted him a salary of $15,000 a year. His former salary was $12,000.

On reaching the age of 70 years Rabbi Levy may retire on a yearly salary of $5,000. He is 44 now. Should the rabbi die before reaching 70 years and his widow survive, she will draw $3,000 a year for life.

GAVE ALARM BY SHOOTING

Belleville, March 29.—At one o'clock Sunday morning, fire broke out in the residence of ex-Chief of Police Snider of Trenton, and before extinguished, the building and all the contents were completely destroyed. Mrs. Snider, who was alone in the house, discovered the fire. By firing several shots from a revolver, she alarmed the neighbors, who arrived just in time to rescue the woman from the roof of the verandah. Two children were spending the night at a neighbor's house. Snider was the man sentenced by Judge Fralick on Saturday to two months in jail here for obtaining money under false pretences.

WAS THE GIRL BURNED ALIVE?

Doctor Says Ruth Wheeler's Nostrils Contain Soot—Startling Testimony.

New York, March 29.—Coroner's Physician O'Hanlon is authority for the statement that Ruth Wheeler was burned alive. After the autopsy on the body he declared that the discovery of a remnant of a square of linen over the right nostril of the girl and traces of soot in the nostril and lungs convinced him that she was still living when, after being strangled by the cord about her neck, her body was set on fire by the murderer.

Hours of questioning of the closest sort have failed to shake young Wolter in his declaration that he had never seen the Wheeler girl and knew nothing of the way in which she met her fate.

A fresh trail, however, was struck by the authorities in a story told them by a young woman who confessed to having known Wolter well. Her tale of the many young girls who, she said, had been associated with the prisoner, set the authorities to looking up the numerous girls whose names and addresses were found in Wolter's memorandum book to see if any of them are missing. The investigation is expected to reveal whether or not Wolter had any active connection with "white slave" operations.

Since the latter part of January over fifty girls between the ages of 15 and 17 years have been reported missing to the police. All but 15 have been accounted for.

Under a merciless grilling yesterday Katie Miller, Wolter's companion, broke down and gave the police some startling additions to her testimony.

"About midnight," the report of her testimony continued, "I was awakened by a crash in the front room. I called out 'Who's there?' and Albert answered from the front room, saying, 'Part of the fireplace has fallen down and I'm fixing it. You stay in bed.'

"I went right back to sleep, but was awakened again about 2 o'clock by another sound as of something falling. Albert was down on his knees before the fireplace shoveling something with his hands back into the grate. He said the fireplace had broken down again. I said, 'Can't I help you,' and started toward him. He said roughly, 'Go back to bed and stay there or I'll choke you to death.' I went back."

WAS WOUNDED BY CARELESS SHOOTER

Galt, March 29.—Bryant Fryer, the only son of J. H. Fryer, manager of the Malleable Iron Works, was seriously wounded yesterday afternoon up the river, near the Galt golf links. A man, unknown as yet, was rifle shooting on the west side of the river, and Fryer in company with other boys, was enjoying an outing on the opposite bank.

Several of the bullets whistled around them and the boys proceeded to run, when Fryer was hit. A 32-calibre bullet passed through the thigh, inflicting an ugly wound. He was carried to the club house and Dr. MacKendrick attended him.

TRAVELLER ENDS LIFE WITH RAZOR

St. John, N.B., March 29.—A man named Lars Anderson, with $67 in his pocket, was found dead with his throat cut and a razor in his hand in a room in the Carleton House at noon yesterday.

He arrived from Tacoma, Wash., on Saturday with a ticket for Liverpool, but was too late to catch the Empress of Britain. He was about 35 years of age.

Seeding In the West.

Winnipeg, March 29.—Quite a lot of rain has fallen in the spring wheat country since Saturday and in a day or two one of the best seed beds recorded will be available for farmers. But most of them are not satisfied that this is really sprung and will wait a week or two yet before seeding.

RAILWAY MEN IN CONVENTION

Ottawa, March 29.—An important meeting of the legislative board of the International Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, representing the whole of Canada, convened at Ottawa to-day to consider the legislation passed by the Dominion Government in the last few years, as it affects the order and its members. Representatives are present from every provincial district of the order in Canada, one having arrived from Kamloops, B.C., while others will represent districts as far west as Saskatchewan, and as far east as Nova Scotia.

There are no representatives from the United States.

BLIND ORGANIST PASSES AWAY

Philadelphia, March 29.—Dr. D. D. Wood, the blind organist of St. Stephen's Protestant Episcopal Church, who had an international reputation as a composer and performer, is dead. He was born in Pittsburg in 1838 and had been totally blind since he was three years old. He had been organist and choirmaster in St. Stephen's Church for forty-six years.

BORDEN IN HALIFAX

Conservative Leader Holds Rally of the Nova Scotians—200 Hundred Delegates.

Halifax, March 29.—Two hundred representative Conservatives from all parts of the province gathered at the Queen's Hotel last night to honor their leader, R. L. Borden.

The banquet was the most successful ever held in the city. The dining-room was resplendent in the beauty of its walls, the sumptuously spread and beautifully decorated tables, and the happy, enthusiastic company that gathered there. On the walls were portraits of Sir John A. Macdonald, R. L. Borden, M.P., Sir Charles Tupper, Bart., and Sir John Thompson.

In an alcove back of the chair, the members of St. Patrick's Band were seated.

Mr. Borden was in excellent form and was received with great applause.

Mr. Borden dwelt at length on the National Transcontinental Railway contract "scandal" and on various phases of the Government's naval policy. Of the former, he said:

"The audacity of the Government has never been more strikingly manifested than in their denial of investigation into the outrages and alarming cost of the National Transcontinental."

MR. R. L. BORDEN.

After a reference to the Major Hodgin's charges of two years ago of over-classification, and the recent occurrences in Parliament and committee in regard to the Lumsden enquiry into similar charges, Mr. Borden went on:

"The investigation has degenerated into the farce which was intended. In the meantime some startling discoveries have been made through returns moved for in the House of Commons by Conservatives. According to those returns common earth excavation contracted for at 30 cents per yard has by some miraculous process been converted into loose rock and paid for at 60 cents per yard and into solid rock at $1.70 per yard to an alarming and amazing extent.

Mr. Borden then turned his attention to the naval problem.

"We have," he said, "taken the stand that the Mother Country is confronted with critical and grave conditions which demand immediate and effective aid, and which cannot be met by the Government's scheme, combining, as it does, a maximum of expense with a minimum of efficiency.

"The Prime Minister's statement, coupled with the provisions of the bill, mean that or they mean nothing. This bill has within it a deliberate reservation of power to the Government to declare the independence of Canada whenever Great Britain becomes engaged in a war which does not meet their approval. Having established this naval force in pretence of fulfilling our obligations to the Mother Country, the Government reserves the sinister and dangerous power of shamefully withholding that force from those of the Empire in the hour of danger.

"The proposition is at once mischievous, revolutionary and unworkable."

Mr. Borden ended by deciding as "absurd" that a direct emergency contribution would endanger Canada's autonomy.

Eight Sailors Killed.

Parry Sound, March 29.—A. J. Belfry of Toronto, promoter and president of the Toronto Box Barrel Co., was convicted by Judge McCurry of receiving money under false pretences. Sentence was suspended for thirty days, and it is understood will try to make restitution.

According to evidence, it appeared that Belfry had represented that the company had purchased the Nuberall factory here, and would start operations Nov. 1, 1909, with forty hands, but it hadn't come to pass.

Belfry declared he had been negotiating for the factory, that he had collected about $5,000 from the public for stock, that he had not paid much attention to keeping books and could not tell how many subscriptions had been received and that the company was being reorganized.

FRENCH-CANADIANS FOR CANADIAN WEST

When he went to the west his particular district did not raise a bushel of wheat, yet last year no less than 400,000 bushels were gathered.

SURVEYORS HAVE NARROW ESCAPE

Vancouver, B.C., March 29.—Thrilling in the extreme were the adventures of a Canadian Northern survey party engaged during the past winter in locating a preliminary line in northern British Columbia.

On a return from the Yellowhead, the engineers found that previous caches of food had been stolen by Cree Indians. Earlier in the season, 44 of their horses perished of starvation. C. F. Hannington, surveyor in charge, lost 28 pounds in weight in marching the homeward trip. All experienced the pangs of famine as they dragged the toboggans over the snow and slush. Over the last ninety miles, the 22 men subsisted on one hundred pounds of flour, being on short rations.

This rate at least will be maintained until June.

BURGLARS' BIG FEAT

Gang in Richmond, Va., Steals Stamps Worth $80,000—Were Expert Cracksmen.

Richmond, Va., March 29.—Combining the skill of experts with the simplest of methods, thieves Sunday night or early yesterday morning robbed the vault in the office of the cashier at the Richmond postoffice of stamps estimated to be worth about $85,000, and incidentally carried off $160 in cash belonging to the payroll fund.

The robbers could hardly have chosen a more public place in which to operate. They were within less than fifteen feet of one of the main thoroughfares of the city, which is brightly lighted at all hours of the night, while the room in which the robbery was accomplished presumably was lighted. Large windows open on the street referred to.

To conceal their operations in part, the robbers shifted one of the two bookcases obliquely across the front of the safe. In this way the man operating the drill worked without being seen. The drill appears to have been of screw pattern and about a third of an inch in diameter. It was first applied to the outer door of the vault, which apparently was pierced with ease, and the interior mechanism of the barrier was pried away.

The same operation was then performed upon the inner door and the swag was within the grasp of the looters. No dynamite was used.

Box after box of stamps was removed from the vault. One man could not possibly have carried all away, nor could have a dozen men.

UNION LABEL

SECRET METHODS

To United States newspaper men who asked for information about the agreement arrived at between himself and Mr. Fielding, President Taft said that at the special request of Mr. Fielding, he would answer no questions and the public would have to wait until the 30th of March for news.

Mr. Fielding's request for secrecy was quite in accord with Liberal methods. Parliament was in session at Ottawa when an understanding was arrived at. The Government might have consulted Parliament, but it was thought better to carry the whole arrangement through without the knowledge of the elected representatives of the whole Canadian people. The final agreement was, therefore, held over until Parliament adjourned for the Easter holidays.

Secrecy is the watchword in all the dealings of the Laurier Government. So much is this the policy of the Government, that on many occasions there have been prolonged battles in Parliament over Opposition requests for the most ordinary information about public business.

ABOLISH INTERMEDIATE TARIFF

If Canada had a simple, one schedule tariff applying to all foreign countries and a preferential tariff for British countries there would be no necessity of making concessions to the United States to avoid a tariff war.

The United States Government and Congress have always conceded Canada's right to give a preference to the mother country. The whole trouble is caused by Canada's intermediate tariff, and the French treaty. The intermediate tariff is a device of Mr. Fielding, which was expected to accomplish wonders in getting trade concessions from other countries. Instead of that it has forced us to make concessions without getting any return.

Parliament should abolish the intermediate tariff and treat all foreign countries that do not discriminate against Canada alike.

The idea that the tariff should be made a club to force other nations to trade with us is impracticable. Any nation that starts out with that idea must expect to get into trouble.

In framing a tariff two objects should be kept in view, the raising of revenue and the protection of home industries, but provision should be made for a surtax in case any nation discriminates against us.

COST OF COMMON CLAY

In spite of the restricted character of the Lumsden investigation, sufficient has already been proven to justify the charges of over-classification made by Mr. Lumsden. It is admitted that hard clay was classified as rock all along the line. How this works out may be understood from the results in the first eight cases examined:—

No. 1—Proper cost, $1,429; actual cost, $14,698; over-payment, $10,318; or 239 per cent.

No. 2—Proper cost, $1,785; actual cost, $7,711; over-payment, $5,976; or 314 per cent.

No. 3—Proper cost, $1,059; actual cost, $4,198; over-payment, $3,139; or 296 per cent.

No. 4—Proper cost, $1,618; actual cost, $5,857; over-payment, $4,241; or 263 per cent.

No. 5—Proper cost, $3,449; actual cost, $11,735; over-payment, $8,295; or 241 per cent.

No. 6—Proper cost, $4,702; actual cost, $10,303; over-payment, $5,600; or 199 per cent.

No. 7—Proper cost, $6,755; actual cost, $24,028; over-payment, $17,273; or 255 per cent.

No. 8—Proper cost, $30,003; actual cost, $81,771; over-payment, $54,767; or 182 per cent.

Thus in these eight cases taken together, while the cost would have been $53,740 if clay had been classed as earth, the actual cost on account of clay being classed as rock was $163,239, an over-payment of $109,509, or 203 per cent. These eight cases are but examples of what is going on all along the line.

It is easy to understand how the cost of constructing the railway has exceeded the estimates by many millions of dollars.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Why did not Mr. Fielding ask the consent of Parliament before agreeing to tariff changes?

Farmers who have hard clay on their farms would soon grow rich if they could sell it at the same price the Laurier Government pays contractors for clay, which is classed as rock in excavating along the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway.

Now, if the Government at Washington had titles to offer to men who do good service to the United States Mr. Fielding would be entitled to an earldom and Rev. J. A. Macdonald, editor of the Globe, should be nothing less than a baron.

The Montreal Star says—"Mr. Pugsley and his followers appear to be convinced that the proper way to deal with foreign syndicates seeking control of Canadian resources is to give first and negotiate after."

Perhaps Mr. Pugsley did negotiate first in the interest of the Liberal campaign fund.

Referring to the Canadian navy question Lieut.-Col. A. E. Belcher, of Southampton, Ont., says:—"Let us pay our way or get off the car." Every self-respecting Canadian should be ashamed to allow the British taxpayers to pay the whole cost of the naval protection of the Empire.

The Ottawa Journal points out that scientific men now agree that the fly does more to spread disease than almost any other known agency. Death to the fly is the battle cry of science it says. Kill the flies early in the season before they have laid eggs which will hatch out hundreds of flies is the advice given. The house fly is almost unknown in England. Canadian housewives should endeavor to exterminate it in this country.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Cables Steady—Hogs Have Further Advance at Chicago and Buffalo.

LONDON, Mar. 28.—Liverpool and London cables quote live cattle (American) higher, at 13½c to 14½c, dressed weight; refrigerator beef firm, at 11c to 11½c per pound.

Union Stock Yards.

TORONTO, March 28.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Stock Yards were 78 carloads, consisting of 1639 cattle, 67 hogs, 108 sheep and 59 calves.

Exporters.

Geo. Campbell bought 20 cattle, 1160 lbs. each, at $5.90 to $6.05 per cwt., for export. There were two choice loads, the best on the market, sold at higher prices. Maybee & Wilson reported selling a load brought in by D. Murphy of Mount Forest, at $7.00 per cwt., and Coughlin & Co. reported having sold the highest-priced load of cattle on the market, 19 choice cattle, at more than $100 per head.

Butchers.

Prices for butchers' cattle, or, at least, cattle bought by local butchers, are keeping close up to the export line. One load of 1290-lb. cattle was sold by Rice & Whaley at $7.25 to a local firm, and the same firm sold a prime picked lot at $7 per cwt. We would quote choice picked lots at $6.75 to $7; loads of good, $6 to $6.50; medium, $5.75 to $6; common, $5 to $5.50; cows, $3.50 to $5.25.

Milkers.

Not many on sale, but prices were firm at unchanged quotations. Prices ranged from $40 to $65, and Dunn & Levack sold the best cow on the market at $75.

Veal Calves.

There was a light run of veal calves, which sold at $3 to $8 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs.

Wesley Dunn, the heaviest buyer and dealer in sheep at all times and seasons, reports yearling lambs at $5 to $5.60 per cwt.; sheep, ewes, at $5 to $6 per cwt., and rams at $4.50 to $5.50 per cwt.; spring lambs at $4 to $10 each. Those selling at $4 should not have been taken from their mothers, which was a sin to do so, and wasteful also.

Hogs.

H. P. Kennedy reported that he was paying 10c lower for hogs at country points, which is $7.65. The hogs on the market sold at the old price of $10 per cwt.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, March 28.—(Special.)—At the Montreal Stock Yards West End Market, receipts last week were 2400 cattle, 150 sheep and lambs, 1400 hogs and 2300 calves. Offerings to-day were 350 cattle, 25 sheep and lambs, 600 hogs and 350 calves. The supply of cattle was comparatively small, but was ample to fill all requirements. Prices were fully ½c per pound lower than this day week. Choice steers sold at 6½c to 6¾c; good at 6c to 6½c; fairly good at 5½c to 5¾c; fair at 5c to 5½c; medium at 4½c to 4¾c, and common at 3¾c to 4¼c per pound.

Hog supplies were light and demand small, and prices ruled steady, sales of selected lots being made at $10.75 per cwt. Cable advices from London and Bristol last week on Canadian bacon noted a decline of 3s to 5s per cwt.

Offerings of small meats were light and trade quiet. A few lots of sheep were sold at 5½c to 6c per pound. Spring lambs brought from $5 to $10 each, and calves sold at from $3 to $8 each.

Heart Palpitation Trembling Weakness

"Only those who have gone through months of nervousness with its fears, weakness, and almost helplessness, can realize the blessing of sound health." Thus opened the letter from Mrs. Helen Pierson, of Cape May: "I was all my life a very heavy coffee-drinker, and when my health began to fail, I made it stronger and stronger, because it braced me up. I didn't realize that this stimulation was wearing out my nerves. But at last a nervous breakdown occurred. Then I was able to see how foolish I had been—doing unnece sary things instead of resting. My heart fluttered dreadfully with the least exertion. I was bloodless, and more tired in the morning than when I went to bed. A friend whom Ferrozone had cured of anaemia recommended me to use Ferrozone, and from the first it did me good. As my blood grew stronger, the heart fluttering ceased, and this took from me the fear that I would suddenly die. I kept on gaining, and continued to use Ferrozone, two tablets with every meal. I am to-day sound, well, healthy, and happy—Ferrozone did it all."

The Giant's Strength

BASIL KING,
Author of "Let Not Man Put Asunder," "The Steps of Honor," Etc.

Copyright, 1908, by Harper & Brothers.

"And so generous in singing other people's praises," Winship laughed, not without a flush of conscious pleasure.

—"that I couldn't help hoping you would do a portrait of me, if you're not too busy."

"You are very busy, Roger," Marah warned him before he had time to reply. "If you're going to have anything ready for the Salon"—

"Perhaps Miss Trafford wouldn't mind my sending this?"

"Not at all," Paula smiled. "I've figured there already. It isn't so very disagreeable. One is hardly ever recognized."

"What sort of portrait were you thinking of?" Winship inquired.

Paula confessed that her own ideas were vague; she would have to appeal to him for advice. Carolus Duran had painted the bust only; Chartran had done a three-quarters length, standing. She would accept Mr. Winship's judgment as to how she should be represented now. She did not say that the picture had little or no interest for her in itself. While he made his suggestions she listened inattentively. He would paint her, he thought, at full length, almost as she sat before him in the high gothic chair. She should be in some sort of evening dress, black for preference, or diaphanous black over color. She should have a small tiara in her hair and wear a few fine jewels, possibly emeralds. If she chose emeralds he would carry out the idea of green by a glimpse—just a glimpse—of a malachite table in the background. There should be green tints, too, in the bit of sky—the sky of a long late summer twilight—that would be visible through an open window. It would be quite simple—Miss Trafford need not fear the contrary—but it would be the princely simplicity with which she ought to be surrounded.

Paula maintained her air of listening as he grew enthusiastic over his conceptions, but in reality she was watching his play of countenance. She thought she had never seen, not even in her father, a face in which there was greater strength of will. In the eyes, soft and hazel as they were, there was a penetration not less keen than in Paul Trafford's own, while the mouth under the brown mustache seemed to her both sensitive and inexorable. She was not sure that she liked it. It was too much like the mouth of a man whom neither pity nor passion would turn from what he had set his mind on. While he was talking of colors and poses she caught herself wondering if he could possibly be as unyielding as his expression seemed to say.

Having decided on the general character the portrait was to take, they discussed the question of sittings. Paula admitted the difficulty of giving them in her own house and her willingness to come to his.

"That will suit me admirably," Winship agreed, "if it isn't giving you too much trouble. This is my only studio, I regret to say, but it has the advantage that my mother is always here and generally my sister."

Paula turned round toward Marah with a conciliatory smile.

"That will be charming. I know Miss Winship is an artist too. Perhaps we shall have the benefit of her criticism and advice."

But Marah stood unresponsive, gazing blankly at the opposite wall. After waiting a second for some recognition of her words Paula turned again toward Winship. If she felt hurt she was too sure of her own good intentions to be otherwise than self possessed.

"And now, Mr. Winship," she said gently, "there's one other question. I'm business woman enough to know that there must be no misunderstanding about terms."

Winship bowed.

"Certainly. I will tell you frankly how the matter stands with me. I've just finished a portrait for which I've had 4,000 francs. For the next one I painted I meant to ask five."

"I will give you fifty thousand," Paula said quietly.

There was a moment's hush, as if the hearers were endeavoring to comprehend.

"I don't think you understand me, Miss Trafford," Winship said at last, speaking deliberately. "I said five thousand"—

"And I said fifty," Paula interrupted.

"You're very kind," Winship said, flashing one of his careless smiles at her, "but I'm afraid I must stand by my price."

"There's no question of standing by anything," Paula returned. "A portrait hasn't a fixed and unchanging value like—like a postage stamp."

"The money value of any work of art, a book, a picture, a statue or whatever it be," Winship explained, "can be measured only by the reputation of its author. A poor bit of work by a well known man is worth more, from a financial point of view, than a good bit of work by a man who makes only a small appeal to the public, and so"—

"I don't care anything about that," Paula interrupted again.

"No, but I do," Winship rejoined. "I'm obliged to look at things just as they are. My portrait of you might be as good as Carolus Duran's, and yet you couldn't hang it with the same pride on your walls or take the same glory in it among your friends."

"But that isn't what I want to do," Paula said unguardedly.

"Then what do you want to do?" he asked, leaning forward and looking at her straight in the eyes.

Paula was not blind to the directness of the question, and she thought it rather tactless. It would have been so much more delicate on his part to have let her fix the price without discussion! His smile, too, annoyed her—that is, it would have annoyed her if it had not fascinated her by its suggestion of ease and power. He looked at her entirely without awe, as if he caught no glimmer of the throne of gold on which other people seated her. It was not exactly disagreeable, she thought; it was only disconcerting.

"What do I want to do?" she repeated, trying to gain time to formulate her reply. "I want to have a good portrait of myself and to pay for it what I am sure it will be worth."

"You're more than generous," Winship acknowledged, "but I must protect you from the injustice you would do yourself."

"But I don't want to be protected. No woman does nowadays. And as for injustice"—

She stopped in some confusion. It seemed to her that in Winship's continual smile there was a play of satirical amusement. She felt that he saw through her; that he was riddling her poor plan for his benefit with the silent shots of his scorn.

"As for injustice—what, Miss Trafford? You were going to say something."

It was Marah Winship, who spoke in a sharp tone of challenge. Feeling the attack, Paula faced about to meet it. It was the sort of situation that called out her courage and made her spring to her own defense.

"I was going to say, Miss Winship," she replied, looking calmly into Marah's snapping eyes, "that, as for injustice, all of us have to bear it—all of us. There are no exceptions. If it hurts you in one way it hurts me in another, but none of us escapes."

"Just as none of us escapes the winter's storm," Marah returned hardly, "only it's one thing to watch it from the window and another thing to shiver in its blast."

Paula did not reply, but she did not immediately turn her eyes away. She met Marah's scintillating gaze without flinching, but she grew aware of the hostility behind it.

"There's only one prayer for us, dear, when we feel we're unjustly treated," Mrs. Winship said in her high, trembling voice. "It's 'Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do.' If we did know we'd be gentler with one another."

"I'm sure Mr. Winship doesn't know how he wounds me in not accepting my conditions," Paula said, with a faint smile, turning again toward the mother and the son.

"Nor Miss Trafford how she offends me by contesting mine," Winship laughed.

"I do contest them," Paula insisted. "I not only contest them, but I reject them."

"Then," said Winship, speaking with sudden gravity, "there's nothing more to be said. If we can't agree we can only cry our bargain off."

Paula was not expecting so abrupt a termination to the discussion. Her blue eyes clouded, and the deepening of the furrow between her brows betrayed her distress.

"Do you mean that you won't paint my portrait at all?"

"Only at my own price."

"But since I can't accept it?"

"That's entirely for you to decide. I at least must abide by it."

"My son shall paint your portrait," Mrs. Winship said in a tone of authority. "I shall act as arbitrator between you, for I understand you both. He shall paint it for a price that I shall fix. It shall be higher than his and lower than yours."

So after further talk it was settled, and presently Paula rose to go away. She felt less assurance than when she arrived, but she said her goodbys without visible embarrassment. As Winship held the door open for her to pass out she turned to him on the threshold.

"Our discussion strikes me as a little odd," she observed, her brows contracting with her characteristic expression of perplexity. "I've always understood that men wanted to make money."

"So they do—when they have time."

"And you?"

"I shall have money some day."

"Why some day? Why not now?"

"Because now I'm too busy with my art. When I've mastered that a little more the money will come of its own accord."

"But if it doesn't?"

"I should have only one reason for regretting it."

He nodded backward toward his mother's chair, over which Marah was leaning tenderly.

"But if you refuse to seize your opportunities?"

"I shall not refuse, but there are opportunities and opportunities. There are some of which one avails oneself.

Winship.

and there are others which no honorable man could take without losing his self respect."

"And you think my offer of today"—

"Was meant kindly," he finished before she could end her sentence. "I'm sure of that. And I'm equally sure that when you've reflected well you'll see that my refusal to accept it is not incompatible with the fullest appreciation."

She dared not question him further. She understood that he had read her scheme in all its blundering benevolent futility. She read it so herself now that it had been put into words and subjected to scrutiny, but she read it with a curious misapprehension of characters and hearts.

"No wonder he refused it!" she said to herself as she drove homeward. "Fifty thousand francs! Five hundred thousand would be but a trifle of what we owe them. If it was five million—well, perhaps that might have been enough."

Five million francs! The sum appealed alike to her imagination and to her sense of justice. That would be a million dollars—£200,000. She knew nothing about the matter, but it seemed to her as if it might represent approximately the value of the Devlin mines. At least it was a sum with which one might offer restitution without being laughed at. Winship had laughed at her. She was sure of that now. The very thought made her cheeks burn in the semiobscurity of the carriage. She did not blame him. She did not resent his derision. She accepted even Marah's hostility with a confused feeling of making some atonement. But there was an atonement more practical and adequate than that of sentiment, and with the unreasoning tenacity of her nature she grew more firmly convinced that her family ought to offer it.

She spoke of it in the evening at home during that last hour before parting when the string of the tongue is often loosed and the mind expresses itself boldly. She flung her opinion like a bomb into the family circle and waited to be blown up herself by the explosion.

At first there was neither expostulation nor direct reply.

"Aunt Julia," George Trafford remarked from the depths of his armchair, "I think we ought to send for Dr. Marier, the specialist for mental diseases."

"What does she mean?" Mrs. Trafford demanded, turning with an air of distress toward Mrs. George. Laura arched her fine eyebrows and looked at Paula wonderingly.

"It isn't a question of what she means, but of what we mean," Trafford exclaimed. "We ought to invent some mild form of straitjacket for her. It isn't safe to have her going around loose."

"Cheap witticism isn't argument, George," Paula reminded him.

"Cheap?" he retorted. "No witticism that turns on throwing away a million dollars can be cheap."

"A million dollars isn't much," Paula declared warmly.

"Try to earn it and you'll see." Trafford threw back at her.

"I mean it isn't much for us, especially if it were divided up among us all. We should never miss it."

"We shall never try," he laughed gruffly.

"Paula, dear, do keep your senses, at any rate while your father is away."

Mrs. Trafford pleaded. "If you go on like this you'll get nervous prostration or you'll give it to me."

"Mother, if you'd seen those people as I saw them today"—

"I don't want to. I don't want to know about them. When I remember what they did to your father"—

"Well, they're punished for it now. They live in such a poor place—a sort of old, half ruined convent. And everything about them is so comfortless, so bare, so lacking in all that we call essential. When I looked at that poor lady it was as if I saw you, mother, dear, old and blind and feeble and sweet and saintlike"—

"Oh, for mercy's sake, stop!" Mrs. Trafford cried. "You're enough to give any one the creeps."

"And a million dollars would mean so much to them," Paula ended pleadingly.

"That's the first point on which I agree with you," Trafford said dryly. "A million dollars means a good deal to most people. But look here; I'll tell you what I'll do. You're a good girl, and I'll humor you. I'll give you 50 francs for them"—

"George, you're crazy!" Paula exclaimed indignantly. "You're insulting. He refused 50,000 francs from me this very afternoon."

"He—what?" Trafford asked, with the low, slow emphasis of incredulity.

Then Paula told the story of the day's experiences. She told it brokenly, interrupted by George's and Mrs. Trafford's questions. Laura stitched in silence, her eyes fixed on her work. Trafford drew up his armchair close to where Paula sat by a small table, merging her hot blushes in the red glow of a shaded electric lamp. Mrs. Trafford fanned herself with a lace handkerchief, as though in danger of suffocation.

"And so he stood out for more," Trafford commented as Paula brought her narrative to a close. "Well, I don't blame him. No doubt he could see that if he left you alone you'd bring him back the whole Devlin property."

"Why shouldn't we?" Paula demanded, with cheeks flaming. "It was theirs. We took it from them. You said yourself the night we talked of it that papa had laid out his plan to ruin them five or six years ahead. Why shouldn't we do justice to them now, late as it is?"

"I never said your father had laid out his plan to ruin them. I said he had laid out his plan of campaign."

"It's the same thing."

"Pardon me, but it isn't the same thing. Your father's operations were in the way of business, not of spoliation."

"That's the mere jargon of the market," Paula cried, springing to her feet and beginning to move restlessly about. "I've heard it till I'm sick of its sound. Business, business! It's the only password of our world. It's our only motto, our only standard of right. So long as we can say that any action, however base, is in the way of business, we think the trickery, the meanness, the dishonor, is excused. We make our piles of business cover a greater multitude of sins than charity. What's the good of our philanthropies and our libraries and our fine plans for the elevation of mankind when we get the very money that keeps our schemes alive by clubbing other people down? I use your own expression, George. It's what you said papa did to this poor, blind Mrs. Winship"—

"Your father can't be made responsible for my expressions any more than he can be argued guilty by your eloquence."

"I'm not trying to argue him guilty. I know he wasn't guilty. I'm trying only to protect him from being thought so. And when we could do that with an insignificant million dollars"—

"But could you?" Laura asked, looking up from her work and speaking for the first time. "If you constitute yourself a judge of your father's doings"—

NO DANGER OF LOG JAMS AT THE NEW DAM

The jam of logs at the new waterworks dam has raised the question as to whether the dam would be liable to damage in case of a jam resulting at the dam when a particularly large number of logs were coming down the river.

To the Review this morning Mr. W. H. Moore, of the city Water Commission, said that there would be no congestion of logs or no danger of damage in the future, as the water will be raised at the dam each spring and the logs will have half a dozen sluices to pass through. This spring the water wasn't raised and the one opening was the only means of passage for the logs.

A PRESENTATION BY BUGLE BAND

To Mr. Fred Miles Who Has Resigned From the Leadership of the Band

Last night at the Bugle Band room of the armories, Mr. Fred Miles, who has retired from the leadership of the Bugle Band, was presented with a silver card case and an address by the members of the band. Mr. A. McWilliams made the presentation while Mr. Walter Fitzgerald read the following address;—

Mr. Fred Miles, Peterborough.

Dear Friend.—It was with the deepest feelings of regret that we, your fellow buglers, learned of your decision to retire from command of our Bugle Band. Your untiring efforts as leader have always been highly appreciated, and the results of your good work will be long remembered. We cannot let the opportunity pass without letting you know in some tangible manner the high esteem in which we hold you, and ask you to accept this token, which we hope will always serve as a remembrance of the pleasant and profitable times we have spent together.

Peterborough, March 28, 1910.

"PAY DIRT" IN THE YELLOWHEAD

Half a dozen young men, ex-army officers from France, it is said, are entitled to the credit of first unearthing the vast coal beds near the Yellowhead on the Grand Trunk Pacific. This coal is equal in point of quality to the coal of the Crow's Nest, of Vancouver Island, of Sydney, Nova Scotia, and the bituminous coal of Pennsylvania. The great find is at the head waters of the McLeod, Pembina and Embarras Rivers. Not only is the quality of this coal good, but it is there in abundance. Experts estimate that there are eight hundred million tons in sight. The principal vein, as tested and analized, is 28 feet thick, with two or three other veins or stratas below, and undering the main vein. If the builders of the Grand Trunk Pacific could have ordered the placing of these coal deposits they would in all probability have placed them where they are near the summit of the Rockies, and on the eastern slope. From the mines it will be generally down hill to Winnipeg and all the prairie cities, although as a matter of fact there are no hill grades on the National Transcontinental line. In the year 1908 a million tons of Pennsylvania coal went into the Canadian West. With the completion of the Grand Trunk Pacific the west will have, not only an abundance of coal, but have a quality of coal that can be stored in the early summer before the crop begins to move. Also it will supply the much desired return load for the cars that will carry wheat from the Prairie Provinces to Prince Rupert.

The line will be completed and in operation to the pass by the end of the year, and as a spur line of only twenty miles will take them to the mines, the west should be getting this coal in a year from now.

This discovery is important to the whole country. It will enable the manufacturer to establish in the west, and will help the economical operation of the railways.

TRAFFIC RESOURCES FOR A RAILWAY TO THE NORTH COUNTRY

The Lindsay citizen whose letter regarding a railway from Peterborough to the north, was published in The Review of March 23rd, again writes regarding his proposal. He points out that the railway would not only bring a stream of tourists to the lakes, but that it would develop a large traffic in timber and minerals. "If a line were built between Peterborough and Wilberforce," he says, "it would hardly be completed before half a dozen, or perhaps a dozen portable steam saw-mills would be in operation. It would be the same as it is at Chandos, Farady and Methuen, where they are cutting timber and shipping by C.O.R. from Coe Hill station. There are miles of track there with piles of lumber on each side; poles, pulp wood, tan bark, etc., ready for shipment. The result would be the same here if a railway were built and your enterprising city of Peterborough would benefit.

"The district has farm products for shipment. The result would be the same here if a railway were built and your enterprising city of Peterborough would benefit.

"The district has farm products for shipment—cattle, hogs, sheep, cheese, and the present production would be very largely increased if there were proper facilities for getting things to market.

"Then there are undoubtedly minerals here and a railway would bring about mining development. I have a sample of gold found within six miles of Apsley.

"This country has given your monied men all or nearly all that is on the top of the ground. Do you want us to open up several gold mines and give you that also? The mineral is here. Come and get it by building a road."

VICTORIA METEORITE TO BE PLACED ON EXHIBITION

An evening's entertainment, which will be productive of much interest and instruction will be held in the assembly hall of the Collegiate Institute next Tuesday night, when Mr. H. B. Collier, president of the local centre of the Royal Astronomical Society, will lecture on "Meteorites," and by way of illustration the Victoria meteorite, weighing 254 pounds, which was secured from the Indians in the Northwest many years ago, by the Rev. John McDougal, and which is at present the property of the Victoria University, Toronto, will be placed on exhibition, along with a smaller one of four pounds, secured by Mr. Collier, recently at Port Britain, near Port Hope. The Victoria meteorite is valued at $5,000, and is composed of 90 per cent. iron, 8 per cent. nickle, and the remainder of other minerals. It had been until secured by Rev. Mr. McDougal held by the Indians, for many generations, as a sacred relic, but they, were finally induced to part with it. The small meteorite now in possession of Mr. Collier, has not yet been recorded, scientifically, but he intends to have this done some time in the near future. Included in about fifty views, which will be shown, is one of a meteorite found in Greenland by Commander Peary, weighing 36 1-2 tons, and measuring 11 feet long, 6 feet high and 5 feet in width. The lecturer of next Tuesday night has gone to considerable trouble, and not a little expense, to prepare his subject, and the large number which are sure to attend will be given a particularly interesting and educative evening. The reason for the meeting being postponed to next Tuesday is on account of uncertainty of securing the Victoria meteorite, but word has been received that it will be sent here in plenty of time to be placed on exhibition.

Easter at St. Luke's

The Easter services at St. Luke's were bright and inspiring. The early services at 7 and 8 o'clock were attended by large numbers of communicants as was also the 11 o'clock service, the total number of communicants being 233. The music was of a joyous and congregational character which is characteristic of St. Luke's, enabling everyone to take part.

Miss Ruby Quartermaine sang solos in keeping with the Easter season at both morning and evening services and Miss Charlotte English played at the organ most acceptably. The offering of the day, including that made for missions, by the children, amounted to $375.

FINANCES OF ALL SAINTS' HEALTHY

Highly Gratifying Annual Easter Vestry Meeting--The Officers for the Year

The annual Easter vestry meeting of All Saints' church was held last evening and was one of the most satisfactory in the history of the church. The rector presided and conducted the opening devotional exercises.

The reports were read from the Women's Guild, Women's Auxiliary, Men's Association, Young Men's Club, Boy's Brigade, Brotherhood of St. Andrew, Rector's Bible Class, Chancel Guild, Choir, Girl's Guild, Poor Fund and the Parochial Missionary Collectors. None were received from the Junior Girl's Auxiliary or the Young Peoples' Society. Among the interesting features of these reports was the fact that the Women's Guild paid over $1,000 towards the Building Fund this year. The P.M.C. collectors reported $116 receipts, an increase of over $50 over two years ago. The M.S.C.C. apportionment was met in January in full in response to the rector's appeal by over $120 on the plate; two years ago the congregation gave $9.10 at this collection. The W. A. also showed substantial increase, and most of the societies were reported in excellent condition. The choir master has resigned.

The warden's current account, presented by Mr. James Edgar, the People's Warden, showed a large increase. From this account the rectory debt had been reduced and there was still a surplus of $107. The rector's stipend was increased.

The building fund was surprisingly encouraging, but being incomplete no further details can as yet be given. A fraction of the congregation has subscribed over $10,000.

The rector reported 39 baptisms, 28 burials, 30 confirmations since Easter last. The next confirmation class starts Thursday evening at 7.15 p.m.

The Easter communicants passed the 200 mark. The innovation of having a communion service on Easter evening met a decided need. The Easter day offertory from church and Sunday school amounted to $850. With the number of Easter envelopes to come in it is expected the Easter collection from the church alone will far pass the $1,000 mark.

The Sunday school under the superintendents, Mr. John Edgar and Mr. Frank Dawson, can easily claim the premier place in the Diocese outside the city of Toronto. Its receipts were $380. The discipline and attendance have very greatly improved in the last two years. Without any room for adult Bible classes the average attendance—summer months included—was considerably over 200. The Lenten offerings so far returned $53.

A generous contributor having put at the disposal of the rector and congregation two building lots in the south end, it is the rector's hope to establish a Church of England Sunday school in the extreme south end of the city. This step has been necessitated to save the boys and girls of that part of the city to the church.

The Boy's Brigade will hold a camp down the river for two weeks this summer under the control of Mr. Harvey Staunton.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

Wardens—Mr. James Edgar and Mr. W. G. Howden.

Lay Delegates—Mr. W. G. Howden, Mr. E. L. Davis, Mr. John Edgar.

Charity Board—Mr. Buller.

Missionary Committee—The Presidents of the W. A., Woman's and Girl's Guild, Mrs. Buller, Messrs. Jno. Edgar, W. H. Wilson.

Auditors—Mr. E. L. Davis and Mr. Dryland.

Sidesmen Committee — Messrs. J. Burnett, A. Graham and the rector.

The usual vote of thanks were heartily passed.

The total contributions designated missionary were $375. The meeting closed with the doxology and benediction.

MADRIGAL CLUB WAS HEARD TO ADVANTAGE

The Madrigal Club held a full rehearsal at the Conservatory last night, nearly every member being present. The choruses, which during the work of getting them up, had been largely sung in fragments, were pieced together practically for the first time and the club gave an excellent response to the baton in the hands of the conductor, Mr. Gliddon. The shading, enunciation, accent and attention to time which Mr. Gliddon had labored so hard to develop, was really creditable and certainly encouraging to both the conductor and the club.

Before the rehearsal ended Dr. Vogt, of Toronto, one of the judges in the Earl Grey contest for which the choruses have been prepared, came into the hall, accompanied by Mr. John Crane.

Mr. Vogt's visit was made in order to hear the club rehearse their numbers, and they were given in good style, without a hitch of any kind occurring. At their conclusion Dr. Vogt addressed the club, stating the reason for his coming, which was a preliminary to the final appearance at the contest early in April, and as the number of entries was large, it was possible some elimination would be made beforehand, in order to reduce the number to enter upon the finals. He expressed himself as well pleased with the progress the club had made in the short time they had worked together, and congratulated them on their very creditable interpretation of the difficult selections they had prepared. The decision of the judges as to the position of the club in relation to the finals, will be known in a few days.

C. W. Wanmscott will be the Liberal candidate in East Elgin for the Legislature.

EARL GREY COMPETITION AT TORONTO

One week more will bring the most novel event in the season's musical and dramatic experiences, namely, the Earl Grey Trophy Competitions, which will attract to Toronto choral and dramatic societies from all parts of Ontario and Quebec, and individual soloists from many towns and cities between Quebec and Vancouver. The musical judges started on their tour this week selecting the companies which will be allowed to take part in the public demonstrations. The process of elimination, which extends to the seventy-five individual competitors for the medals, is in the hands of Dr. A. S. Vogt and Dr. Albert Ham, for the vocal part, and Mr. Frank Welsman and Mr. W. O. Forsyth, all of Toronto, for the instrumentalists.

Already a big attendance during the week of the contests is assured. The competitions this year will far surpass in their points of general interest the programmes of the last two years, which gave dramatic art a considerable impetus over the whole Dominion. His Excellency will actively participate in the work of the week, and the event will not only possess social importance, but will mean much toward the development of amateur music and drama in every village, town and city of this province. The handsomest theatre in Canada, the Royal Alexandra, has been engaged for the week.

DR. VOGT WAS PLEASED WITH "THE GEISHA"

Dr. Vogt, of Toronto, was present at the dress rehearsal of "The Geisha" at the Grand Opera House last night. Every member of the cast entered into the work with enthusiasm, and the presentation was a most finished one. Those who were present speak very highly of the production, and characterize it as superior to anything ever attempted in the amateur line in Peterborough. At the conclusion of the rehearsal Dr. Vogt expressed himself as greatly pleased with the work of the company. The production had surprised him in a most agreeable manner.

GRASS FIRE SEASON HERE

Fire Brigade Earned Their Money Yesterday—Four Cases

The dry season is again a prolific field for grass fires. Yesterday the fire brigade responded to four calls, three of which were sent in on account of grass fires.

In the morning a grass fire crept up to the fence of the exhibition grounds and consumed a generous portion of the shadware.

At the G.T.R. tracks on Park street the section men were burning some grass and the fire spread to the ties causing quite an interesting little shin heat. A blaze in the grass was caused on Hunter street by children playing with matches and some lumber piled near Mr. E. G. Patterson's residence, was destroyed.

Last night about eight o'clock some residents in the vicinity of the Normal school sent in a call on account of the electric light wires "sparking" with the trees and creating some alarm. The chief removed a couple of wires and made other repairs necessary.

HALLEY'S COMET NOW IN THE MORNING SKY

Ethereal Visitor is Hastening Towards the Earth

Yesterday Halley's comet made its bow in the morning sky and on Thursday will be seen in the east before sunrise.

On April 1st the ethereal visitor will be 130,000,000 miles away—and that's no April fool joke. On April 4th the comet will rise at 4.44 a.m. By April 12th it will be moving at a rate of 100,000 miles an hour. The comet reaches perihelion (nearest the sun) on April 19th, by which time it will be travelling at rate of 1,578 miles per minute.

When moving day rolls around the comet will be 63,000,000 miles from the earth. On May 8th the earth will cross the comet's path. By May 10th this celestial body will be 33,000,000 miles distant from Mother Earth and on May 17th this will be reduced to 12,000,000, about the nearest it will ever get. It came within half that in 1835, the last time the comet appeared.

On May 18th the earth and moon will pass through the comet's tail, after which it will begin to retire into space, to appear again in 1985.

TORONTO CENTRALS WON FROM LOCAL BASKETBALL TEAM

The local Y.M.C.A. five went down to defeat last night at the hands of the visiting Toronto Central Y. M. C. A. team by the score of 63—24, with the half-time figures reading 42—9 against them. The scoring, while one-sided, made the game interesting, for the visitors, were strong in combination play and shooting and their fast work was pretty to watch. They had a big advantage in weight and height over the locals and had little difficulty in intercepting the passes of their younger and lighter opponents when combination work was attempted.

Wallace started the scoring, a half minute after the game started. The teams were:

Toronto 63—Chubb and Carrick, forwards; Dunn, centre; Simpson and Conroy, defence.

Peterborough 24—Hazwell and Nicholls, forwards; Wallace, centre; Matthews, Laing and Lees defence.

Referee—McLaughlin.

WANTED--A JUNIOR OR INTERMEDIATE BALL LEAGUE

Inquiries are being made these fine days of baseball weather as to what prospects there are for the junior and intermediate players of the city this season. There is no reason why a strong league could not be formed if the youngsters make a start, and show that they really mean business. If a league was organized, the schedule could be so arranged that the midsummer holidays would not interfere. The fact that many of the younger players are out of the city during the holidays has been the cause of disorganization in the past, but if the playing schedule was arranged in such a manner that this trouble would be overcome, a junior or intermediate league would be a success. The Review Cup is at present in the possession of the Strathconas, who won the intermediate honors two years ago, and in the event of the intermediate league coming to life again this trophy would pass to the winner of the league. The Y.M.C.A. team is looking for a berth in a league of this class, and any other teams wishing to enter should acquaint the president of the Intermediate League, Mr. J. T. C. Lang, of Lang & Maher, of their intention, and a meeting will be called.

DRUNKS DIDN'T HAVE THE CASH

Tweed Visitor Was Fined $5.75 and Local Ex Blacklister Assessed $2.00

Two drunks were ordered to part with $7.75 at the police court this morning. The visitor of yesterday, from Tweed, admitted that he had been drunk, and his share of the total amount was $5.75, which, however, he did not have, and he was ordered back to No. 1 cell, till a friend arrived with the money. The other prisoner was arrested this morning on Hunter street, and was still under the influence when he took his seat in the prisoners' row. He denied being drunk, but was assessed $2, the same to be paid forthwith, and in default of payment ten days in jail. He didn't have the bank note. His time on the blacklist had but recently expired, and there is another bill of $14 against him for a previous offence.

REV. H.M. MANNING AT ST. JAMES CHURCH

St. James' church held the first anniversary of the church opening last Sunday. Rev. H. M. Manning, of Whitby, who established this church a little more than a year ago, was the preacher for the occasion. His discourses were eloquent and thoughtful, and both services were occasions of great spiritual blessing. Special Easter music was rendered by the choir.

In the Sunday school Mr. Manning recalled its beginning on July 12th, 1908, in a tent pitched on the grounds with an attendance of 30, and commented on the rapid growth of church and Sunday school since that time.

On Monday evening the congregational social was well attended. Reports of the work were given by the officers of the church and its societies. Rev. G. W Henderson, chairman of Peterborough district, and Rev. H. M. Manning were the speakers. Duets rendered by Miss Callender and Mr. Thornton, also by Miss Chasty and Mr. Huycke were much appreciated, and little Miss Christie delighted everyone by her recitations. The Sunday thank offerings amounted to $250.00.

THE CLOCK OF FATE.

How a Marriage License Was Taken Out Four Times.

By DELIA TOURTELOTTE.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

While looking for evidence of a marriage involving property belonging to clients of mine I came upon a marriage license issued to two parties, and written across the face of the entry in red ink was the note by the judge: "Returned unused. See page so-and-so." On turning to the page referred to there was another record and the same red ink note. In abort, the record shows that a license was procured and returned unused three different times. The fourth time, however, was the charm, and they were married, he at the age of forty and she at thirty years.

I made a note of the names, intending to look for the story that appeared to be contained in these several notes. Years afterward I stumbled upon it by accident. It was told to me by a sister of the lady for whom the license was taken out. Here it is:

A social party from the city was husking corn on Berkhart's farm.

Among the husking party were the two persons whose names appear in the marriage record. They were Norman Witridge, at that time aged twenty-five, and Rose Anderson, a slip of a girl, hovering between childhood and womanhood. Witridge was a handsome young fellow, and Rose Anderson was a very pretty girl. Between fifteen and twenty-five, nothing but physical beauty is needed to unite those of opposite sex. The two were sitting on a heap of corn busily tearing off the husks when they saw each other for the first time.

Witridge husked a red ear.

Every one who knows anything about husking parties is aware that when a fellow finds a red ear he is entitled to kiss the girl he happens to be nearest. Witridge had noticed the vermilion lips of Rose Anderson, and, hungry for a kiss, he was eagerly watching for the red ear that would give him one. The moment he saw the dark kernels he took the kiss, and it seemed to him that he was in heaven.

SHE TURNED AND FLED.

As it needs only one electric spark to send a message around the globe, so with two young people it needs but a kiss to start a home. The couple spent several hours together, at the end of which time Witridge, who had driven to the husking in a buggy, handed the girl into it and drove to town. It was the old story. Swayed by impulse, he had dared her to marry him, and, swayed by impulse, she had taken him up.

On reaching the town Witridge procured a marriage license and took Rose Anderson to a parson for the purpose of marriage. Knowing nothing about the age required to enable a clergyman to legally marry a girl, she replied that she was fifteen. The clergyman declined to perform the ceremony and berated the young man soundly for bringing so young a girl to him to be married. The two went out and stood for a few moments on the sidewalk, the young man irresolute. Then, putting the girl in the buggy, he drove her to her home.

The next day the marriage license was returned unused.

Whether or no Rose Anderson's parents knew of how near their daughter had come to being married I did not learn, but the fact remains that within a week after she went to the parson's she was packed off to boarding school, where she remained, vacations excepted, for three years. During this period she never met the man who had come so near to being her husband.

When the fates have a destined end in view they arrange situations to meet the case. In the first place they knew perfectly well the dispositions of the couple they had decreed should eventually marry. They did not bring them together again in a conventional way. They took care that the next meeting should be calculated in accordance with the impulsive natures of the young couple, especially the girl's. Not only this, they sent Cupid to shoot a few more arrows into their hearts.

Mr. Witridge and Miss Anderson, three years older than they were at the husking, came together for the second time at a straw sleigh ride, and the managers of their destinies arranged that they should sit side by side. Witridge began by apologizing for having ever asked a girl so young as she had been at the time to marry him and ended by saying that he was very sorry she had not been of the required age.

Something, she knew not what, moved the girl to discover whether or no he was bluffing—giving taffy—in short, that to express which no correct English word has ever been coined. She dropped her lids, and he felt for her hand. He found it, and it was not withdrawn. When they separated she had intimated to him that if he would call on her the next afternoon she would complete what had been intended after the husking party.

The next morning Mr. Witridge took out the marriage license for the second time and in the afternoon called upon Miss Anderson. He found her arrayed for the bridal in a plain walking suit, and they started at once for the clergymen who had declined to marry them before. Miss Anderson went to the very door, but when she saw Mr. Witridge's thumb about to press the button she turned and fled. She had discovered that he was not bluffing, and he had discovered that she was doing that very thing.

For the second time the marriage license was returned. The clock of destiny for those concerned struck 2.

When the couple met for the third time it would not have availed the fates to bring them together that they might act on impulse, for their impulses had faded before maturity. It was twelve years before they met the third time. It is singular that, really loving each other, they should have been separated for so long a period. The reason was that Witridge supposed Miss Anderson had acted from "bluff" alone and pursued the matter no further. Miss Anderson, being now a woman passed out of childhood, would not marry, so to speak, "on a lark." She must be properly wooed and won. The consequence was that they passed all these years under a misunderstanding.

Meanwhile Witridge had become an active business man. He grew wealthy, or was considered so, belonged to a number of select clubs and went somewhat in society. One evening at a social function he met Miss Anderson, now a woman of thirty, not yet past the line between youth and middle age. The moment the two got together the smouldering fire within began to show flame. Something the lady said induced her lover to believe that he had made a mistake. The next day he called, and the next week they were engaged to be married.

It was about this time that a financial panic occurred, and while it was coming on arrangements were being made for the wedding.

One day, two months after the engagement had been announced, Witridge went to the office where marriage licenses are procured and called for the license that had been twice returned. The clock of fate struck 3.

The wedding day was bright and beautiful, and it seemed that the long unused marriage license would serve its purpose. But the fates had not yet finished their work. On entering his carriage to go to the church Mr. Witridge was arrested on a criminal charge of misappropriation of funds. He had for some time, like many others, been struggling against a want of ready money in business and was considered rather "shaky" by some of his creditors. One of them, fearing that he was about to fail, took this method on the eve of the debtor's marriage to force an immediate payment of his claim. Witridge was unable to meet his demands and instead of going to the bridal went to jail. The fact of this creditor brought about Witridge's failure, and as soon as the former found that his attempt to force his debtor had failed he withdrew the charge, and Witridge went forth a free but ruined man.

Miss Anderson is now a woman, and it is time, if ever, that she shall show whether she is the same impulsive creature as ever or has grown cold with increasing years. She sent a note to the man who had been so ruthlessly torn away from her saying that she believed he would clear himself of the charge and he could count on her if he did.

When Miss Anderson saw her lover again he was much changed. He looked fifty instead of forty and was discouraged. He had no income on which to support a wife, he had no capital with which to embark again in business, and he felt that his good name had been smirched. Miss Anderson had sent word asking him when he left the jail to come at once to her. When Witridge entered the drawing room at her home he encountered a pair of arms that were thrown violently around his neck, and his face was covered with kisses. Then the two sat down together, and she said to him:

"I have some property, as you know, and have turned it all into cash, realising $18,000. Here is a check for the amount to your order. It is not much to start in business with, but you have a host of friends, and that is capital in itself. You must begin tomorrow."

A light rose in his melancholy eyes as he said:

"You are the same girl you were at the husking. 'Bray a fool in a mortar'"—

"And she will be the same girl that tried to bluff you when we went to be married the second time," she finished.

"If it hadn't been for both our impulses we might have been happy together long ago," he said, with a sigh.

"And if it hadn't been for my impulses now I might leave you to a frightful old age. Go at once and get that ancient marriage license."

And the same day the clock of fate struck 4.

Courtier, Soldier, and Huntsman.

A courtier to the finger-tips, a lover of horses, a soldier, a Freemason, and a friend of the King, Lord Suffield, who recently entered upon his eighty-first year, has occupied so many posts of honor in and about Court that their mere enumeration would be tedious. He has always been known as a thoroughly sound horseman, and it was of him that, very many years ago, Whyte-Melville wrote:

A rider unequalled, a sportsman complete,
A rum 'un to follow, a bad 'un to beat.

Another comment on Lord Suffield's riding was made by Lord Ribblesdale, who said that he had the rare art of "galloping like steam between the fences, and yet jumping places almost from a stand."

The Grand Old Man of Canada.

Quite apart from his amazing financial achievements, Lord Strathcona, the Grand Old Man of Canada, is a man whose vigor and vitality astonish the world. He is now in his ninetieth year, and is as alert intellectually and as strong physically as the majority of men at fifty. He sticks to his desk all day, still leads a Spartan life—in the matter of eating he is a firm believer in the merits of the two-meals-a-day regime—and says there is no reason why he should not live to be a hundred. There is one little characteristic concerning Lord Strathcona which is apt to make the visitor smile. When he is indoors his lordship wears a little silk-knitted cap over his bald spot. When he shakes his head in conversation, or gives a quick nod, the little cap usually slips off. Lord Strathcona stops, gravely replaces the cap, and then goes on with his sentence.

MEN WHO USE ZAM-BUK

How it Saves Them Money

Look at the financial side of Zam-Buk's use. A cut sustained in the workshop, a sore which is unattended, results, say in festering or blood-poisoning. You have to lay off (for a day or two. What does that mean when pay day comes round? Zam-Buk insures you against that loss! A little Zam-Buk applied to such an injury at the time, or soon afterwards as possible, prevents all danger of blood-poisoning, takes out the smarting and starts up healing.

Heads of families know how costly doctoring is. Be wise and act on the preventive line. A box of Zam-Buk in the home is so all-round useful. The baby's rashes, the older children's cuts and bruises, the inevitable burn, cut or scald—for all these, as well as for more serious ailments, such as piles, ulcers, eczema, ringworm, etc., Zam-Buk is without a rival.

Dangers of Shaving.—You get a cut at the barber's shop. A little Zam-Buk smeared on the wound prevents all danger. If any ailment has been contracted, Zam-Buk cures. Mr. George Hobden, 108 Manitoba street, St. Thomas, Ontario, says: "I contracted barber's rash, and the whole of my left cheek broke out in one mass of red, watery pimples and sores. These spread to the other parts of my face, until face and neck were covered with running sores. How far the disease would have spread had it not been for Zam-Buk, I can't know. I applied this balm and in a short time Zam-Buk effected a complete cure."

The Sportsman knows that Zam-Buk is used by all the "cracks," because it is the best liniment and embrocation. Men like Longboat, Sherring, of Hamilton; Kelly, of the Toronto Ball Team, all the famous lacrosse teams and ball teams use Zam-Buk in this connection.

All druggists and stores sell at 50c. a box, or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price. You are warned against harmful imitations.

Insurance Companies Lose About $125,000.00 by the Wreck at Spanish River

Double Liability for About Twenty-five Persons

A loss of somewhere in the neighbourhood of $125,000 is what the Accident Insurance Companies estimate the wreck at Spanish River bridge means to them.

They figure that about 25 of those who met death carried Accident Insurance, and the average insurance, according to the tables, is $5,000. In case of death in a railway disaster there is a double liability, making the figure $6,000, or $5,000 to be more conservative.

Their loss may total more than that, for the commercial travellers, a number of whom were killed, usually carry very heavy insurance. In addition, some of the companies make the policies payable on the death of the wife while travelling, though the policy is taken out in the husband's name. In such cases they pay the husband the same amount as they would have paid the wife were the husband killed.

We issue the BEST Accident and Sickness policy offered to the public.

Kidney Troubles Attack Peterboro Men and Women Old and Young

Kidney ills seize young and old,
Come quickly with little warning.
Children suffer in their early years—
Can't control the kidney secretions.
Girls are languid, nervous, suffer pain.
Women worry, can't do daily work.
Men have lame and aching backs.
The cure for man, woman or child.
Is to cure the cause—the kidneys.
Booth's Kidney Pills cure sick kidneys—
Cure all forms of kidney suffering.
Peterborough testimony proves it.

Mrs. A. Graham, of 547 Water street, Peterborough, Ont., says:

"My back was so weak and tender that I could not turn in bed. A heavy, dull pain had settled across the small of it and caused me almost constant suffering. I became weak and languid. I was run down generally and had little ambition to move around. Headaches were frequent and often accompanied by spells of dizziness. Spots would dazzle before my eyes and I would be unable to see. I had tried numerous remedies without getting results. Booth's Kidney Pills were advertised at Mr. Wm. Madill's Pharmacy, which I tried and soon found relief. The kidneys were quickly regulated and each and every symptom of kidney trouble was quickly cured. I am glad to recommend Booth's Kidney Pills as I believe them to be the best and most reliable of all kidney remedies.

Points For Mothers

"Those who bring sunshine to the lives of others cannot keep it from themselves." This is a mothers' motto surely. And to say, however, there are mothers who do try to bring sunshine to others, but fail utterly and envelop themselves in black clouds with never a silver lining in sight. Others seem contented to dispense "sunshine" without getting even a small sunbeam in return. Happily some seem to be veritable "sunshine batteries," sending out little currents to those with whom they come in contact.

One poor mother is faded and careworn. She darns her daughter's stockings and mends all her clothes and even makes her party dresses. This mother loves her daughter dearly and regrets that "the child" is so selfish and apparently so unappreciative, thinking only of her own frivolities and giving never a thought to or doing a kindness for her mother. She longs to be her daughter's confidant and is often jealous of her daughter's girl friends. She is irritable and fretful (because overworked and tired) and worries over things that do not really matter, and her daughter misunderstands her and usually considers that "mother is unreasonable" and has "queer ideas."

The "sunshine" mother is younger looking, happy and more "up to date." She teaches her daughter to darn her own stockings and to mend her own clothes and even to make her own party dresses, but is always ready to help and plan and discuss. She enters into her daughter's pleasures with real interest and makes friends with her daughter's friends; talks over little secrets and softens, molds, influences and advises. In fact, "mother" is considered "one of the girls" and is in great demand as chaperon.

The secret of it all is that she has adapted herself to the ideas of the next generation, although retaining and remembering her own girlhood.

Old Dutch Cradles.

Baby's bath is now mounted on trestles so as to save stooping on the part of the nurse, while the cot and basket are almost always of the folding variety, draped with hemstitched and embroidered linen threaded with satin ribbons or with embroidered net.

Occasionally a reproduction of an old Dutch cradle will be used, and this will be lined with quilted satin. The newest quilts are stuffed with a vegetable fiber or wood wool which comes from Sweden. These are beautifully light and porous and are recommended for hygienic reasons.

When baby takes his daily constitutional it is in a perambulator with silver fittings, a crest or monogram on its white enamaled surface. Sometimes the carriage is even upholstered in white, and the cover may be of fine linen trimmed with real Irish crochet, while in winter it will be of opossum or Tibet goat.

Cure For Warts.

A wart is essentially an outgrowth of the scarf skin. It may be brought about by friction. Hence it may be found on the quite healthy skin of a healthy person, just as a corn may be found. But warts sometimes come without friction, and they come numerously, so proving that there must be some internal cause. Wart crops are specially apt to appear between early childhood and the sixteenth year. They are found most usually in children of poor physique. They have been known to make sudden appearance when the child has fallen into poor health and to go away when the health has improved. Small doses of calcined magnesia in water taken daily during many weeks or months have been found effectual in getting rid of these warts.

Dolly Party Game.

A "doll hunt" is a delightful way to entertain the little folks at this season. Arrange in the center of the parlor a cabinet with bright colored strings. Attach to each string a card bearing the name of the doll to be found. After much intricate winding each child is to find a doll. In another room hang a clothesline, where each little girl is to find a dainty frock to fit her new found treasure. Let the little ones dress their dolls and afterward serve simple refreshments.

Hamper For Nursery Made of Parasol.

The daintiest nursery hamper imaginable is made from a plain white linen parasol turned upside down and fitted to a small modern standard.

A tiny lace frill is placed around the edge, and linen pockets are sewed across the sections inside for soap, powder and other toilet articles. It may be easily carried about by the handle. On one side embroider baby's monogram in pink linen thread.

Hard on the Baby.

Here is some advice that appeared in a paper for mothers the other day: "The bottle must be kept perfectly clean. When the babe has finished drinking it should be unscrewed and laid in a cool place under the tap."

One feels rather sorry for any babies thus treated.

A gun explosion on the U. S. S. Charleston is reported to have killed or wounded eight men.

AFTER DOCTORS FAILED

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Cured Her.

Toronto, Canada.—"I shall endeavor to describe to you how I felt before I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I scarcely knew what it was to be well. I had awful bearing-down pains and usually before my monthly periods I suffered terribly and had to go to bed. I was not able to walk across the floor the pain was so bad. I doctored for a long time, but the doctor's treatment did not do me any good. I gave up all hopes of ever being well again until one day my husband saw the Compound advertised in the paper. He decided to get me a bottle, and I am thankful he did. I had not taken one bottle before I began to feel better, and I kept on taking it until now I am a different woman. It also helped me during maternity and childbirth. I can thoroughly recommend your Vegetable Compound to any woman who is afflicted with female troubles."—Mrs. J. M. TWEEDALE, 138 Nassau St., Toronto, Canada.

The success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, is unparalleled. It may be used with perfect confidence by women who suffer from displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness, or nervous prostration.

"OLD DRURY'S" KING.

Arthur Collins Is the Manager of the Great Pantomime Theatre.

Mr. Arthur Collins, the man who makes the pantomime at the National Theatre, the world-famous "Old Drury," in London, is a particularly interesting personage. The production of a pantomime at the most renowned of British theatres is a task of huge proportions. It sets and keeps going for many months prior and subsequent to the event a vast army of workers. Some of these are "regulars," some few are enthusiastic "volunteers," whilst there is a large company of "reservists." All drill zealously during the prolonged training period for the ultimate triumph of their able general, Arthur Collins.

Each year sees something glorious attempted, each year sees something glorious done. Each season brings a new ambition to eclipse the one gone before; each season registers the desire fulfilled. For years Drury Lane Theatre has been pursuing a course of pantomime excellence that every recurring Christmas is pronounced by delighted audiences to be superlative.

How is this achieved?

Thus. The scheme of the pantomime having been conceived in the master managerial mind of Mr. Arthur Collins, the heads of the numerous departments in the great National Theatre are enlightened, and soon the whole machinery is set in motion. It is no exaggeration to say that one pantomime has scarcely run its course when the first stages of the next one are entered upon. The "book" is not written till late in the proceedings, so that "topics" may receive their full attention therein, but he who writes a pantomime must be prepared to "miss" the bulk of his pen-work when the piece has been running for a few weeks. This is the result of alterations and interpolations. A well-known pantomime-writer was once lately asked by the manager of a theatre, where one of his Christmas pieces was being played, what he thought of it. "Well," replied the scribe, "what I found of it wasn't bad."

The music, upon the attractiveness of which so much of the success of a pantomime depends, has to be composed and arranged; the elaborately beautiful dresses designed and executed, the company and supernumeraries engaged, the scenery painted, and the "properties" made.

Drury Lane has a very fine paint-room and commodious property-rooms. The former is lofty, well-lighted, and fitted with every appliance for the convenience of the scenic artist. Enormous frames, one of them seventy feet long, work up and down through slots in the flooring by means of a windlass. This enables the artist to work at his ease upon any portion of the canvas fixed upon it. Mammoth "cloths," "flats," and "wings" are thus readily dealt with.

The "property-rooms" at "Old Drury" are bustling but orderly beehives for many weeks before the opening of the season's great pantomime spectacle. Men and women work at top speed, the latter attending to bead-work and drapery, the former turning out colossal figures in papier-mache. It is very interesting to note that "properties" of the best quality cannot be procured at satisfactorily from abroad as those which are made in Britain. As may be readily supposed, the cost of a Drury Lane pantomime is enormous, and the "houses" need be packed and many to properly balance the managerial ledger and leave a surplus to be "carried forward." But "thorough" is the watchword of all who take office at "Old Drury," and the traditions of the ancient house can alone be sustained by lavish show and unstinted outlay.

"Drop In Any Time."

One of the pitfalls of friendship is the standing invitation. It is easy and pleasant to say: "Come whenever you like, my dear! We shall be delighted to see you at any time; don't stand on ceremony—come whenever you are this way." But let those who receive such invitations beware. It stands to reason that an unexpected visit cannot always be convenient—the hostess is in the midst of something or other and "not fit to be seen," or her husband has rushed home to take her out somewhere and she would rather go than stay at home and entertain her dearest friend, or the luncheon or the dinner is a makeshift—very nice, so far as the family is concerned, but not exactly suitable to set before visitors. The hostess tries to be nice, but can't help showing her vexation or embarrassment. The guest perceives something indefinable in the atmosphere and is accordingly constrained, and every one is uncomfortable. Yet people still go on giving and accepting standing invitations.—New York Tribune.

LUNG TROUBLE

Mrs. Biny Brown, of Tenecape, N.S., Was Cured by Catarrhozone of Lung Trouble and Catarrh, After Hundreds of Other Remedies Failed

If your lungs are weak; if there is consumption in your family; if Colds, Catarrh, and Bronchitis bother you, be sure to use Catarrhozone. It is especially adapted for these diseases and cures every time.

Mrs. Brown took cough mixtures, but they made her sick. Then she used an atomizer, but, after resorting without benefit to poultices, she tried Catarrhozone.

"I used Catarrhozone Inhaler," writes Mrs. Brown, "five minutes every hour, and soon recognized that it was going to cure me. I could feel the soothing medicated air spreading through the air passages of the throat, and it touched the sore spots in the lungs that other remedies failed to reach. Catarrhozone seemed to go just where it was needed most, and soon put a stop to my cough. It restored me to perfect health, and I am convinced that no cough, cold, or catarrh can exist if Catarrhozone is used."

No treatment is so clean, so pleasant, so certain to cure as Catarrhozone. By means of the Inhaler, the local symptoms, such as coughing, inflammation and congestion are speedily corrected. Ferrozone tablets, which are taken after each meal, purify and cleanse the blood of all poisons, and build up and strengthen the system.

This local and constitutional treatment is always effective, and cures cases that have been given up as hopeless. Money can't buy or produce anything better, and to get cured it is absolutely necessary to use Catarrhozone.

THE PINE GROVE FARMERS' CLUB

A very successful meeting of the Pine Grove Farmers' Club was held in the Pine Grove Hall Friday evening, March 25th. About forty were present. A pleasing feature of the meeting was the enrollment of six new members, making the present membership forty-four. The evening's programme consisted of an address by Mr. R. Schuyler. The subjects were how to prevent losses on the farm, which was ably given considering the range of the subject and was interesting and beneficial to all present.

A debate took place, "Resolved, that the dairy cow is more profitable than the beef animal." The affirmative was taken by Messrs. A. Darling, E. R. Tate, V. T. E. Jory. The negative was upheld by Messrs. H. Abbott, D. Darling, V. E. Wilson.

After a careful consideration the negative lost.

The next meeting of the club will be held April 8th. The programme will consist of a social evening to which the ladies are all cordially invited to come and bring their baskets; also a debate, "Resolved, that the forty acre farm is more profitable than the one hundred acre farm." The affirmative will be supported by Mr. E. Galvon and two others, while the negative will be represented by Mr. W. Hunter and two others. Other talented speakers are expected.—Com.

CIVIL CASE BEING HEARD FIRST AT SPRING ASSIZES

Charge of Murder Against Henderson Only Criminal Case —Judge Addressed Grand Jury—Sarah McPherson, Surviving Victim of Assault, Was in Court.

At the spring assizes of the High Court, which opened this afternoon at the court house, before Mr. Justice Riddell, the proceedings were commenced by the judge giving his customary address to the grand jury, which was composed as follows:—H. Phelan, foreman; O. A. Alexander, W. H. Bradburn, Wm. T. G. Buck, Felix Brewmcombe, John Butcher, Geo. W. Fitzgerald, Robert Garbutt, John McIntosh, Thomas R. Mann, Z. M. Tucker, Chas Grove and J. M. Collins.

The duties of the grand jury were outlined by the judge.

The only criminal charge was the one against Robert Henderson, accused of the murder of Margaret McPherson, the old woman who, on his own confession after his arrest at Havelock, he brutally assaulted, together with her sister, also an old and infirm woman. Margaret McPherson died as a result, it is alleged, of the injuries. The particulars of the distressing affair and of subsequent proceedings against Henderson are generally known to the public.

The judge explained that in the bringing in of a true bill on the charge of murder all the jury had to consider was to find if the person accused had killed anybody. If he had it was their duty to find a true bill of murder. If, in the case before the court, the young man had struck the old lady with the axe, and by so doing had caused her death within one year and one day, or had given her injury that had accelerated her death, it was the duty of the jury to bring in a true bill against the prisoner on the charge of murder. This charge might be reduced by the petit jury, but that was no concern of the grand jury.

CIVIL CASES.

The action of Foley vs West and Fred Cook vs David and Bert Davidson, two civil cases, are the only other cases on the docket. The latter was proceeded with after the judge's address to the grand jury, the following jury being sworn in on the case: Jos. Hunter, Harry Ballford, Archie Campbell, Herbert Allin, Joseph Bath, Israel Church, Thomas Bloin, Douglas Baptie, R. J. Cameron, Thomas Bryan, Samuel Olcott, Thomas Donaldson and Wm. J. Clark.

Mr. E. A. DuVernet, K.C., of Toronto, as crown prosecutor, and Mr. F. D. Kerr is representing Henderson. Other members of the bar present were: G. A. Payne and A. B. Colwill, Campbellford; S. T. Medd, F. D. Kerr, J. W. Bennett, George N. Gordon and J. H. Burnham.

Sarah McPherson, the younger of the two women, and who was also dangerously wounded with the axe, was in court to-day, and seems to be fully recovered.

SEWAGE AND DRAINAGE SYSTEM FOR SOUTHWESTERN SECTION OF PETERBOROUGH

Engineer Chipman's Report to City Council—Several Recommendations are Made and Estimates Given of the Cost—Electrical Pumping Station Among the Recommendations

Willis Chipman, C.E., has submitted a report to the city council upon the sewage and drainage of the south-western section of the city. It is now being considered by the Board of Works.

The report is as follows:—

Gentlemen—I beg to submit for your consideration the following report upon the sewage and drainage of the south-western section of the city of Peterborough, now partially drained and with sewer convenience.

TOPOGRAPHY.

The greater part of the area lying south from block occupied by the Canadian General Electric Co's works, has a continuous slope towards the Otonabee river, and practically a uniform one, although to the eye it is apparently level ground. There is not one well-defined natural watercourse in the entire area, the surface water flowing southerly down Par katreet side ditches, and easterly along the ditches or gutters on the street at right angles to Park and Lock streets. At the C.G.E. works the surface water flows easterly to the river through a timber drain built for the purpose several years ago.

The north-easterly part of the area under construction is well built upon and building operations are being extended southerly and westerly year by year. The main sewer of the city on Lock street, constructed in 1891, was designed to convey the entire domestic sewage of the city to the river by gravity. Examinations were made by this sewer and levels taken under my direction in the spring of 1909, and I am pleased to be able to state that this sewer is in excellent condition, and it is evident that it was built carefully to the grade intended, notwithstanding reports to the contrary.

The sewer is of ample capacity for the domestic sewerage from a city much larger than Peterborough, if the surface water be excluded. During high water in the river, however, the southerly part of the sewer would be flooded for many blocks, if nothing were flowing down the sewer, but the flow further gorges it, and I am inclined to believe that at times it may run full from Townsend street to its outlet.

An overflow was constructed near Townsend street, but this, also, serves as an outlet in high water. Proper valves and chambers should be provided at this point to control the flow.

From Perry street to the outlet of the main service tributary sewers are also subject to flooding during freshets in the river.

PUMPING MACHINERY.

The pumping machinery should be in duplicate, one pump being operated by an electric motor that will stop automatically with the fall and rise of the sewage, the other pump to be operated by a gasoline or oil engine, the latter to be held in reserve for an emergency.

The motor power required will not exceed 10 h.p., for the immediate service, but I would advise 15 h.p.

The building for housing the machinery should be about 16 feet wide by 24 feet long, the basement to be the full size of building to serve as pump wells. It is quite possible that you may intend to erect in this district a boss station or other municipal building, if so, it might be combined with the pump station, and the basement enlarged for tanks, or storage for sewage. The supervision of the plant would then be constantly under a city employee.

Pumping sewage is no novelty in this province. Within the last year I have designed two sewage pumping stations, one at Brantford, the other at Orillia.

By laying the Romaine street sewer at a sufficient depth it will serve as an outlet for all sanitary services to be constructed west of Lock street, between the C.G.E. works in the north and the city limits in the south.

When the area now lying south of the city limits becomes part of the city, another sewage pumping station will be required.

STORM WATER.

The timber drain on Rink street from the C.G.E. works to the river, should, in my opinion, be replaced by a proper concrete drain, from which all domestic sewage should be rigidly excluded. At the time of my visit, in June, 1909, it was in a foul, unsanitary condition.

ROMAINE STREET SEWER

In 1907 a sanitary sewer was built on Romaine street from Lock street sewer, westerly to Aylmer, with a branch on the latter street, southerly to the new King Ed ward school. This sewer was properly designed to drain the basement of the school and the premises along the two streets mentioned, assuming that the main on Lock street were not gorged. If the main sewer were running full, however, the ground water in the Romaine street district would stand at such a high elevation that low basements would be flooded. The sewer, as designed, if properly constructed, would have proven satisfactory for ten or eleven months of the year, but would have required close attention during high water in the river, and in extreme high water flooding of the school basement would have occurred in all probability. I am informed that the pipelaying was not properly executed, that the sewer was not laid to correct line, or grade by the contractor, also that a portion of the sewer was relaid at a higher elevation in 1908.

As Romaine street and the first parallel street to the north are now closely built upon they should be provided with proper sanitary sewers. I am certain, however, that the existing Romaine street sewer will never prove satisfactory.

PUMPING STATION.

After a careful study of the problem, I have reluctantly arrived at the conclusion that the domestic sewerage from that part of the city lying west of the river and south of Rink street, cannot be conveyed by gravity to the river, unless cellars and basements be prohibited throughout the greater part of the area.

I am of the opinion that the problem can best be solved by the construction of a sewage pumping station, as near as possible to the lowest point in the area under consideration. The exact location is not important, but I have selected Romaine street at its intersection with the G. T. R. line to Belleville. It should be possible for the city to acquire a triangular piece of land at this point at a reasonable price.

The Romaine street sewer west of the pumping station, should be relaid at such lower depth as will permit all streets within the low area being sewered by gravity to the proposed pumping station. Between the railway and Lock street main sewer, the Romaine street sewer is laid, may be used as an outlet for some years. When the flow of sewage increases sufficiently a large discharge may be provided at a higher elevation.

If the surface drains on Park street, Lock street and Monaghan road be cleaned out and brought to uniform grades, it will not be necessary to construct underground drains or storm sewers for the removal of the surface water until these streets are built upon.

Eventually it may be necessary to construct another main sewer on Park street, but in my opinion it is not now required. If built it would not drain basements and cellars in the low areas without pumping.

If a large main sewer were built on Park street at a sufficient depth to serve as an outlet for all tributary sewers, it would be necessary to pump the entire flow in this sewer at the outlet. This scheme may be adopted at some future date.

RINK STREET DRAIN.

A timber drain on Park street, north of Rink, should also be replaced by a concrete or tile drain, and if there be not a proper sanitary tile sewer on this street, one should be laid at the same time as the storm drain. The outlet of this storm sewer may be carried directly down Rink street to the lake, instead of following the course of the present open ditch that runs northerly from Rink street to Townsend, thence easterly towards George street.

COST.

I estimate that the proposed sewage pumping station at Romaine street, with machinery installed, will cost between $10,000 and $12,000, and that the expense for power and attendance will not exceed $350 per annum for some years.

From the pumping station to the King Edward school a new sewer at a proper grade will probably cost from $3.00 to $4.00 per lineal foot.

On streets in other portions of the quicksand section the sanitary sewers will cost from $2.00 to $3.00 per lineal foot, and on streets where the excavating will be in dry materials the average cost will not exceed $1.50 per lineal foot.

The proposed new storm drains will cost approximately as follows:—

Rink street, concrete sewer, $3.50 per lineal foot.

Park street, concrete or brick, $3.00 per lineal foot.

Romaine street, concrete and brick, $3.00 to $3.50 per lineal foot.

Aylmer street, tile pipe, $2.00 per lineal foot.

Lake street, tile pipe, $2.00 per lineal foot.

The foregoing prices include cost of manholes, catchbasins, engineering and superintendence of construction.

As the storm sewers may be laid at a less depth than the sanitary sewers, the prices are materially lower for the same sizes.

About $400 should also be expended upon a proper flushing chamber and overflow on the old George street main sewer at Townsend street. I would suggest that a door be constructed in the masonry manhole at the outlet to permit ready inspection.

I would further recommend that all existing catchbasins be disconnected with the sanitary sewers.

When the street water cannot be diverted directly as natural water courses by the street gutters and ditches, storm sewers will eventually be required, particularly in the rectangular area enclosed by Reid, Wolfe, Aylmer and Hunter streets. The elevations would indicate that storm sewers should first be constructed on King and Dalhousie streets in this area, but there may be valid reasons for adopting some of the parallel streets. The average cost of these sewers would be about $2.50 per lineal foot.

I trust that the foregoing report, and the accompanying plan, may contain the information desired by the council.

Respectfully submitted,

WILLIS CHIPMAN,

Civil and Sanitary Engineer.

Health or Hurt, Which?

As good food is to the strong stomach, and as bracing air is to the strong lungs, so is bright sunlight to normal strong eyes. If good food hurts the stomach there is something wrong with the digestion. If the bright sunshine of Spring is painful to the eyes it is nature warning that the eyes are under strain. We are daily supplying glasses to relieve this strain, and restore normal conditions of comfort. Sunlight then helps instead of hurts the eyes.
